Dr. Savage went into similar detail regarding more dams on tributaries to the Yangtze. The fatal result, beside regulating the river-flow so that navigation can be improved and ocean-going ships brought right up to Chungking, would mean water storage that will irrigate a hundred million acres and make it possible to double the present production of rice.

I will not deluge you with further figures for I cannot produce them with such a flavor of enthusiasm and admixture of personal delight as Dr. Savage does, but I may add that he spent four months in India discovering and planning similar projects in the Punjab, along the Ganges, and in Afghanistan, on this and other trips. Dr. Savage, I might observe, is typical of a kind of government servant of which the world knows very little. He is one of the highly trained experts who prefer public service to financial rewards. These men turn down highly remunerative offers from business organizations.

Australia Asks for Dr. Savage's Help

Back in 1940 a cable came from London asking the United States government for Savage's assistance in conjunction with the Burrinjuck dam in Australia. Before the department of the interior replied, Dr. Savage was reminded of what he already knew; namely, that United States officials may not receive emoluments of any kind from foreign governments. Our founding fathers were quite sensitive on that point.

". . . no person," says the Constitution, "holding any office of profit or trust under (the United States) shall, without the consent of Congress, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince or foreign state."

And so Savage, rather than delay the project while congress decided whether such emolument be permitted, wired the then commissioner of the bureau of reclamation: "Any assistance given to New South Wales will be gratis and I shall not accept any fee or other form of compensation or any reimbursement."

As a government servant, Dr. Savage, although he cannot accept titles and awards from princes, kings or foreign commoners, has garnered plenty of honors from American institutions. They include his doctorate in science from the University of Wisconsin and the American Society of Civil Engineers' medal. Also he has that most coveted award, the Gold medal for outstanding engineering service, a joint award of the leading organizations of his profession.

If culture can be served by damming rivers, and capital can be found to pay the bill, they'll be dammed—by Savage.

The war will wipe out a lot of ignorant sneers which so-called "practical" men often direct at "long-haired professors." Perhaps the science of psychology gets the most wallops from the uninitiated. Says General Arnold in his second report on the army air force: "The RAF paid the AAF a compliment in 1944 by adopting our system of air crew selection and classification. Our psychological testing procedures were also adopted by the Free French."

There are 20 psychological tests administered which have proved valid in predicting a cadet's chance to win his wings and his chance for combat success.

"The aviation psychology program has paid off in time, lives and.... money saved," says General Arnold, "at a total cost of less than $5 per candidate."

The Soviet Information bulletin published in Russia calls attention to the fact that the Russian guards created by Peter I, in 1700, were the first to enter Berlin in the Seven Years war.

It further states that the traditions of the Soviet guards, created when the German armies were nearest Moscow, in the autumn of 1941, were inspired by the ancient Russian guards and "are preserved to this day."

This is one of the many indications of how the Soviet government is continuelly looking back on Russian history and increasing national consciousness among the people, bypassing the ideology of communism and the landmarks set up by the revolution.

Watch Your Kidneys!
Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.
Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Might This Thing Be Called Emancipation?

An officer who had been through the North African campaign made the remark that this war had made quite a difference to the position of Arab women there.

"For centuries," he said, "when an Arab family was on the move, the man rode the donkey and the woman walked patiently behind him, carrying the luggage. But when our troops got going there was a big change. True, the man still rode the donkey—but the woman walked in front."

"So our boys taught them that it was 'ladies first'?" he was asked.

"Well, I don't know. She walked in front because there might be land mines."

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Recent government tests demonstrated that synthetic truck tires show slower wear and less tread-cracking when operating at night than during daytime service. Atmospheric temperatures were given as the reason for this difference in service.

Like other rubber commodities, footwear should be treated properly to extend serviceability. Avoid tearing by putting on and removing rubber footwear carefully; wash outer surfaces after each wearing; dry out linings in room temperature; store in cool, dry, dark place and make sure to keep footwear free from folds or wrinkles.

Constipation is the cause of Much Suffering

Constipation may cause no symptoms for a long time, but unless corrected will finally impair the health. Symptoms associated with advancing constipation are loss of appetite, heavily coated tongue, tired feeling and mental depression. Headache, dizziness, anemia, and skin disturbances such as acne, are commonly experienced. In severe cases, neuralgia and joint pains occur. Indigestion, with gas formation and colic, and piles and fissures frequently add to the discomforts of severe chronic constipation.

No matter how many other medicines you may have tried for constipation, we urge you to try B-L PREPARATION, with the understanding that B-L PREPARATION must bring you satisfactory results or your money back. Caution: Use only as directed.—Adv.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Faced With Momentous Tasks Abroad and at Home as Allied Drives Lead to Victory

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Bearing meager household possessions on heads and in arms, Jap civilians on Okinawa return to lowlands after flight inland before invasion forces.

NEW LEADER:

Historic Task

Dying even as American military leaders saw an early end to the European war, with the intricate problems of peace lying ahead, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt left to successor Harry S. Truman one of the most momentous jobs ever confronting a statesman.

Oddly enough, Mr. Roosevelt himself entered the office 13 years before under highly critical circumstances, with the nation's business and agriculture in stagnation and its finances on the verge of collapse. Still comparatively new to the American people, Mr. Roosevelt won their immediate confidence during the first 100 days of his administration with measures designed to reestablish the tottering economy of the country.

Mr. Roosevelt

Then, Mr. Roosevelt made perhaps his most famous statement of all: "The only thing we have to fear is fear."

World Problems

Greatest immediate task facing President Truman is the San Francisco peace conference, scheduled to go on despite the death of Mr. Roosevelt, who worked for its successful culmination to achieve his dream of an international cooperative organization to prevent future disastrous wars.

Though the groundwork for the San Francisco parley had been laid at the Dumbarton Oaks conferences, at Washington, D. C., new problems had arisen since to command the full resources of American statesmanship. Over and above the proposal of granting Russia three votes on the permanent security council to match Britain's six, there remained the touchy proposition of allowing representation to a Polish government not dominated by any large power and acceptable to all.

Along with the San Francisco parley for creating an international peace organization, the new President also was confronted with handling the Bretton Woods financial agreements, designed to establish postwar economic stability by supporting the monies of different countries and advancing loans for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of foreign nations to help them become profitably productive.

Rated Conservative

With President Truman considered a conservative Democrat despite his support of New Deal policies, speculation centered on the course he would adopt on domestic policy, long marked by Roosevelt liberalism. Bearing the friendship of both the CIO and AFL, President Truman was expected to maintain a sympathetic attitude toward labor.

President Truman

With Roosevelt administrations having established such social security policies as unemployment insurance and old age pensions, and with the government pledged to support farm prices for two years after the war, President Truman's greatest concern would seem to be not the establishment of emergency measures to tide the nation over the reconversion period but rather the development of a program to achieve Mr. Roosevelt's own goal of 60,000,000 jobs.

In recently explaining his political philosophy, President Truman said that, like his native state of Missouri, he was a little bit left of center, but that the cooperative effort of all elements of American life was necessary for the shaping of a prosperous economy.

Though comparatively unknown before assuming direction of the senate war investigating committee, President Truman soon earned the respect of both his colleagues and the country for his forthright and courageous leadership of the group in constructively criticizing the rearmament program with a view of increasing its over-all efficiency.

In this respect, the so-called Truman committee was quick to point out such material shortages as aluminum, rubber, zinc, lead and steel, and also revealed the nature of pressing manpower problems.

Staff Chiefs at Helm

An artillery captain himself at 33 during the last war, President Truman, like Mr. Roosevelt, is expected to leave the conduct of the war largely to the American chiefs of staff, who have already marshalled the country's great striking power for the knockout of both Germany and Japan.

Reeling under the force of U. S. and British power thrusts from the west, and Russian pressure from the east, Germany's days appeared numbered, with Allied military leaders mainly expecting guerrilla warfare after the collapse of integrated Nazi resistance.

In conformity with long-rumored Nazi plans for a last suicidal stand in the Alpine fastnesses of southern Germany, the enemy continued to put up his strongest resistance south of the river Main, where the U. S. 7th army's advance was slowed. Farther to the east, however, the Russians drove beyond Vienna to threaten the Austrian gateway to Adolf Hitler's last mountain stronghold.

PACIFIC:

Tough Nuts

Tough throughout the whole Pacific campaign, the Japs are proving even tougher as the battle approaches their homeland, with their stubborn defense of Iwo Jima more than matched by their resistance on Okinawa in the Ryukyu Islands against U. S. marine and army forces.

Experts at making use of the rugged Pacific island terrain, the Japs have set strong gun emplacements in the rolling countryside, with subterranean tunnels allowing their troops free passage from one position to another. In addition, the enemy has surprised U. S. forces with the use of deadly new weapons, with heavy concentrations of artillery on Okinawa helping slow the Yanks' advance.

If they have made good use of the terrain on Iwo Jima and Okinawa, the Japs are making equally good use of it on Luzon in the Philippines, where they are holding out in the rugged fastnesses to the north in the hope of tying up large bodies of U. S. troops through the approaching rainy season when operations will be necessarily slowed.

WHOLE BLOOD

Whole blood, one of the greatest single factors in saving the lives of wounded soldiers, is being flown to Europe under a new system of refrigeration which prolongs the life of this fluid by about one-third.

Under the present system whole blood is suitable for transfusions for a period of about 16 days, but under the new plan it will last for 21 days. Expendable iced containers have been developed to keep the whole blood at the right temperature.

Hold Your Own

Keep a tight grip on your pocketbook and a sharp eye on your wallet, for purse-snatching and pocket-picking are showing a pronounced popularity among crimes, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

The increase in thefts of this character is laid to the tendency of prosperous war-workers to carry large sums of money about with them.

AGRICULTURE:

Hog Support

Having called for greater fall pig production to help relieve the tight meat situation, the government sought to reassure farmers of future returns by announcing a 50 cents increase in the present $12.50 floor or minimum price for all good and choice hogs up to 270 pounds. At the same time, the War Food administration said that neither support nor ceiling prices would be trimmed before September, 1946.

Though the government's action on floor prices was not expected to affect current operations because of the relatively small supply of hogs in face of the record demand, it was considered reassuring in the prospect of greatly increasing marketing in the winter, when the pressure on prices might be strong.

With private sources estimating that spring pig farrowing was up 12 per cent, the WFA called on farmers to increase the fall crop by 18 per cent. Chiefly because of lower hog production throughout the first part of 1945, total meat output is expected to drop some 10 per cent below last year.

Bumper Crop

Benefiting from excellent weather conditions, the nation's 1945 winter wheat crop is expected to approximate an all-time 862,515,000 bushels, about 37,000,000 bushels over the previous 1931 top, the U. S. department of agriculture reported.

After fall moisture was generally sufficient to get the crop off to a good start, good snowfall provided protection during the winter to hold acreage losses to the lowest level in 25 years. In most sections, the ground was in condition to absorb a large percentage of the moisture from the melted snow and rains, the USDA reported.

With the expected abandonment lowest since 1919, indicated yield of 17.4 bushels would be one bushel above last year. As of April 1, estimated stocks of wheat on farms totalled 239,083,000 bushels, third largest since 1927. Stocks approximated 22 per cent of the 1944 harvest, USDA said.

MINERS:

Another Raise

Maintaining his reputation as one of organized labor's shrewdest and hardest bargainers, bushy-browed John L. Lewis won new wage concessions for his United Mine Workers averaging $1.07 a day, but the agreement remained subject to government review in the interests of the anti-inflation program.

Expected to run into close scrutiny of the War Labor board, which has hewed to the "Little Steel" formula limiting wage increases to 15 per cent above the January, 1941, level, the agreement calls for time and a half for inside day workers over seven hours and a rate of $1.50 for underground travel time; boosts of from $1.07 to $1.20 a day for outside employees, loaders and electricians; 4 cents an hour more for workers on the second shift, and 6 cents for those on the third, and $75 pay instead of vacations.

Having run the gamut of WLB approval, the agreement still was subject to OPA consideration, in view of estimates that the wage concessions would add about 25 cents a ton to the nation's fuel bill, or $150,000,000 annually.

RECONVERSION:

Make Preparations

With victory in Europe imminent, and with it a partial reconversion from wartime to peacetime output, War Production board took steps to permit industry to obtain new machine tools for manufacture of civilian goods.

Biggest major item on WPB's program was the grant of priorities to the automobile industry for 50 million dollars of machine tools and related equipment for civilian manufacture. To take from three to seven months for making, the orders were placed last fall without priority rating, then dumped when early hopes of victory faded and the war went into 1945.

In permitting the placement of orders for machine tools and related equipment for civilian manufacture, the WPB is developing a plan whereby such business would not interfere with the output of vital material needed for prosecution of the war.

DISABLED WORKERS

Physically impaired workers produce as much as, or possibly a little more than, able-bodied workers, and they are dependable, regular in attendance and careful in observance of safety regulations, medical officers report in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Only serious physical defects were considered in selecting impaired workers for the study and the majority have been placed in jobs by matching their defects with the physical demands of the job.

Civil War Draft Agent Lost Life in Notifying Draftees

Wounded in one of the early battles of the Civil war, Captain McCarty left the Union army in March, 1862, and became a government agent enrolling men for the draft. Aroused by the news of the draft a group of southern sympathizers vowed to shoot a government agent on sight. McCarty was their unfortunate victim.

Bible Distribution

The American Bible Society reports that all previous records for Bible distribution were broken in 1944 when a total of 12,403,541 copies of the Scriptures were circulated by the Society.

This is an interesting commentary upon the assertion, so often made by certain theologians, that the people of this country are not as religious as they formerly were. It completely refutes the idea that, because of the war, people everywhere have turned their face from God and that the world is rapidly going to the devil.

Don't Let The Size Fool You

Little men put the torch to Pearl [illegible] ... hasten the day of victory? Look, brother, let's talk sense. In this Seventh War Loan go and buy at least one War Bond in addition to what you're buying now. Get your fellow-worker or your neighbor to do the same. And his neighbor and his neighbor's neighbor.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Stunned by the shock of the sudden death of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the nation and the world are unable immediately to appraise unemotionally the loss that mankind has sustained.

He died as gallantly, as bravely and as unafraid as any soldier on the field of battle. He gave himself no rest, and he wanted no rest, for there was upon him the greatest responsibility and the greatest burden ever imposed upon one man.

Death came at Warm Springs, his second home, the spot in the South that he had come to love so dearly and where he always felt such a cordial and sincere welcome.

For years to come men will be writing of the greatness of Franklin D. Roosevelt and of the ability and fortitude with which he faced the grave problems affecting his beloved country. The first and only president to have been elected to the office four times he was confronted in 1933 with one of the most tragic economic eras in history. He quickly became the nation's [illegible] leader, rescued business from it's slump, sent remedial legislation almost daily to Congress and had no [illegible] brought order out of the domestic chaos than world clouds of war began to gather. He sought to prepare the nation for what was coming and was only reluctantly assisted by the Congress which had less prescience and [illegible] as to the dangers [illegible].

Pearl Harbor was another challenge to his leadership, for civilization itself seemed to be trembling in the balance. Sadly he led the nation into war, but once in, he put forth such energy, such inspired leadership, such a wise grasp of the issues that he quickly brought the nation to its total effort in war and in cooperation with brave and struggling allies whom the nation joined to preserve mankind's liberties.

When at last it was seen that the cause of justice and freedom was to be victorious our leader did not spare himself in laying plans for winning also the peace. He made five journeys across the Atlantic for conferences that marked new epochs in the affairs of mankind and in humanity's aspirations for a better and more secure way of life.

Many of his expressions and battle calls come to mind as we reflect upon his service to his country for more than twelve years in the highest ofice. Here is but one from his Bill of Rights Day speech December 15, 1941:

"We covenant with each other before all the world, that having taken up arms in the defense of liberty, we will not lay them down before liberty is once again secure in the world we live in. For that security we pray; for that security we act—now and evermore."

Happily, he lived long enough to see that victory was asured, that the security and human freedom for which he struggled had triumphed over the most terrible enemies by which they had ever been assailed.

ABOUT TOWN

We do not think that the management at the Wadesonian Theatre, or the "Old Show," as it is known, should be permitted to let customers crowd in until even the isles are jammed all the way back to the door. In case of a serious fire, hundreds of lives could be lost under such circumstances. Yes, and it is possible. It HAS happened. And it CAN happen here. After the accident has occurred, it is too late. The time to take precautions is before it happens.

We received this week in the mails a check lost by our daughter on the streets of Clanton on December 11th. The finder did not give his, or her name, so we do not know who to thank. But whoever you are, "many thanks."

Here's one for the book: Mr. W. M. Poole owns a clock with a charmed life or something. Thirteen years ago, or about the time that F. D. Roosevelt was first elected President, the old clock stopped running. Several experienced Jewelers tried their hand at fixing it but to no avail. It was finally discarded and put away in the attic. About a week ago, Mrs. Poole was awakened late at night by a clock striking the hour. She got up and went to where the clock had been put away and found it running again. Together they took the clock down and recleaned it good. Today it is running perfectly.

The difference between in-laws and outlaws is that in-laws promise to pay you back.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt uttered words that will live in history when she answered the Vice-President Truman's query, "What Can I Do For You," with, "What Can We Do To Help You?"

Ho-hum, we must be getting along in years. It's got to where we pay more attention to the food than to the waitress.

Glad to hear that Louie Smith has been returned to circulation again. He has taken his old place back at Peoples Savings Bank. Bet the bank is glad to get his services again too. Isn't it going to be fine when all the old familiar faces get back at their old jobs. Maybe things will begin to seem real again.

TENT REVIVAL

Rev. Hymon Atcheson of Maplesville, Ala., is beginning a revival meeting in his tent in the Sardis Community across the road from the home of Mr. Tommie Deason, Sunday afternoon, April 29th, at 3 o'clock.

He will be there for the purpose to call people back to God and the church. He insists that everyone cooperate with him in the meeting with your prayers and attendance.

Come hear the old-time Gospel, singing and preaching.

"My neighbor on the next street had a telephone installed.

Why did he get one before me?"

This may happen for any one of several reasons.

First: Your neighbor's telephone service may be essential to the war effort or to public health, welfare and security. Such service has first call on the few facilities available in your community.

Second: There may be spare cable conductors to the central office. But in your street, all facilities may be in use.

Third: He may be moving service from his former home. Where lines are available, these orders take precedence over applications for new service.

Fourth: His request for service may have been placed with us before yours.

We regret we cannot tell you when your service will be installed. In many cases, it will be considerable time after final Victory. But we can assure you that your request will be filled in its proper turn.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Some Women Are Like Oysters

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"This man wants a wife, not a dainty, timorous, mollusk of a woman who will expect him to dine off milk toast in an invalid's bedroom, smoke in the back yard and enjoy the companionship of a few gossiping old ladies."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

TOO many women are like oysters. When the oyster is young he is free and independent; he swims about in the ocean in a glory of independence. But as he gets older his shell gradually forms and hardens upon him, and finally he is trapped in it and can only cling a great deal and drift a little.

Perhaps you are one of the women who have grown shells and are imprisoned in them? Perhaps it is you, yourself, who have shut away all changes and adventures, and closed yourself into a narrow groove from which there is no escape.

It sounds to me as if Gertrude Day, who writes me from Buffalo, is one of these "oyster" women. Gertrude is 29, pretty, clever, successful as a big man's secretary, devoted to an invalid mother. Gertrude and her mother live in a pretty white cottage with a garden, just out of town.

Engaged Seven Years.

For seven years Gertrude has been engaged to be married. This seems to me a record for America; in Europe and in England girls think nothing of a five or six-year engagement, and in Sweden I met a sweet serene woman who was engaged to an engineer who had been 11 years in Argentina. But these are not American ways, and hence Gertrude Day's letter indicates to me that she is fast on the way to becoming an oyster.

"Frederick was a school-teacher when first we were engaged, and as I had full responsibility for Mamma, who is bedridden, and his salary was small, we could not think of marriage then. He taught in a school 40 miles away, so that we only saw each other for weekends twice a month. After some years he decided to study law, which took much of his time; passed his bar examination just before the war and immediately went into officer's training camp. He now has a captaincy and is temporarily stationed here after 15 months overseas, and his desire is to be married at once.

"Now, please don't think me a terrible old maid," the letter goes on, "but I just can't bear the idea of any change—I never could. I love Frederick, I know I do, but the thought of a man in this little white house of ours is staggering. Mamma and I have grown used to certain ways; breakfast late on Sunday, no cards or liquor in the house, certain radio programs every week, just a few dear old friends, mostly Mamma's, things in their right places, reading aloud. Also we have very light suppers, milk toast or waffles or a salad, which I serve on two trays in Mamma's room.

"We would have to live here, as Mamma naturally dreads the thought of moving, and—well, Fred is simply too big for this place. He likes hearty food; he actually suggested to me that we move Mamma to the third bedroom, off the kitchen, where she would have her own bath and be further away from us. This I will not even suggest to her.

Fears Change.

"In short," the letter concludes, "I am afraid I do not want to make the concessions he seems to take for granted. And yet I love and admire Frederick, and know that he has an honorable and successful career ahead of him. But I am so happy as I am that I fear to change present circumstances for the untried. On the other hand, Mamma has not long to live, in a year or two at most they tell me, or at any moment, she may leave me, and contemplating the utter desolation of that event I feel what a comfort Fred's kindness would be. How can I gently influence him to fit his ways to mine, since I am so constituted that change is actual suffering to me?"

My dear Gertrude, I say in answer, you can't. And it would only be cruelty to try. This man wants a wife, a woman of an adaptable, imaginative, enthusiastic type of mind who will plan with him for a wider future, not a dainty, timorous, mollusk of a woman who will expect him to dine off milk toast in an invalid's bedroom, smoke in the back yard, and enjoy the companionship of a few gossiping old ladies.

You are too deeply encased in your shell ever to emerge into normal wifehood, and I wouldn't try. Just go as you are, and when Mamma dies try to get some other elderly woman to come and live with you, to keep the rugs and lamps and the teapot and the parrot-stand just where they belong.

Give Fred a generous and wholehearted dismissal. He'd wreck your little Dresden statue scheme if he married you. It will be a great relief to you to feel, "Well, that's over!" and it will free him to find some other woman, a woman who likes househunting and loves her man, and bears him children, and faces the daily ups and downs, the disappointments and triumphs, scares and glories, responsibilities and rewards, that make up married life.

FAMILIAR WAYS

To some women the most dreaded thing is change. They have their little ways and routines, their friends and their associations, and they want to keep the pattern intact. It isn't always that they are so fond of the little scheme of things that they have developed; it is just that they are accustomed to it, and are comfortable in a sort of dull way.

One such woman asks Miss Norris for advice in this issue. Gertrude is 29, pretty, and a successful secretary. For the last seven years she has been engaged to an ambitious, well educated man, who is now a captain in the army. He wants to get married, now that he can well afford it. Gertrude, however, is so tied up with her invalid mother that she cannot bear to think of any adjustments. She wants her husband to do all the altering, yet she knows in her heart that she is asking the impossible.

Pork Fat for Shortening

Fresh-pork drippings can be used to season vegetables and to make gravy. If clarified, you can use this fat for baking in place of lard. Sausage, ham, and bacon fats are especially good for frying and warming foods, because of their excellent flavor. Put ham fat in dry-bean soup or bean dishes; the two flavors blend well. Use mild bacon fat, that has not been permitted to smoke, in muffins, cornbreads, cakes, gingerbread and cookies.

TARIFF CUT OPPOSED AS BUSINESS HANDCUFFS

WASHINGTON.—Mr. Roosevelt's request for power to cut the tariff another 50 per cent (making 75 per cent in all from the 1934 rates) fell on hard congressional soil.

Some—not alone the Republicans—say it represents practically free trade and nowhere near the actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad—which is what a good tariff rate should be. I know at least two highly placed Democratic senators who are displeased.

Labor is beginning to grumble also. AFL's Matthew Woll came out against it in a statement which is supposed to be a forerunner of labor opposition. There certainly will be a fight and the outcome is by no sound means foretellable yet.

The President called for it as one of "the kit of tools" he needs to handle postwar trade, but the Republicans are calling it a monkey wrench. Without doubt it contrasts strangely with some of the other tools he asked for, particularly the proposed balloonish world bank, which is to lend money for the development of industry abroad.

AIDED COMPETITORS

Under our own foreign loan and rehabilitation program we gave money, for one example, to finance the building of a steel plant in Brazil. For another, during the AAA days when we restricted cotton production, the cotton growing industry in Brazil and other countries grew rapidly.

This competition is such that at a recent congressional hearing there was testimony that cotton can be produced in Brazil, Mexico and other South American countries cheaper than in the United States. For others, we have put money into Mexico to finance mineral industries which can compete with us, indeed, the New Deal favors industrialization of the world.

Now the New Deal argument, used by Mr. Roosevelt, is the familiar one heard often from his new commerce secretary Wallace, that as we are a creditor country and all the world owes us (indeed, far more than it can ever repay) the tariff theory must be abandoned, at least 75 per cent abandoned.

INCREASE FOREIGN DEBT

But the tools in the kit he has asked for would make us even more of a creditor nation. In short his whole policy is a spend-lend program for foreign trade, the giving of money to the bank to enable them to build more competing industries and the giving of money to the stabilization fund to support a fictitious value for prospective foreign buying nations, and cutting the tariff generally so everything can get into this country. We cannot avoid winding up, out of such a proposition, with every nation owing us even more than it does now.

Would anyone then think the erasure of the final 25 per cent of the tariff would help our creditor position? Or would we not then realize our creditor danger had merely been doubled? Certainly the more we spend and lend the more they owe us—and the money comes from our people.

There are so many problems to foreign trade that the vastness of the subject is beyond human grasp, at least beyond mine. But, in any case, the new world we are coming into will involve wholly different problems than those of oldtime tariff walls.

Think, for instance, of Chinese labor costs and the Russians' government production system which can value anything at any price. Both of these were not involved seriously before, but they may become more important than trade with Britain and Canada (the two nations the President mentioned).

It seemed to me Mr. Roosevelt rather answered himself with one basic observation in his message to congress. He said:

"We cannot hope to maintain exports at levels necessary to furnish the additional markets we need for agriculture and industry, income for the farmer and jobs for labor, unless we are willing to take payments in imports."

Well, why not? This rather directly suggests that what we should be doing is taking imports for exports. That seems to imply an entirely different ideal.

WAR END DRAWS NEAR

When General Eisenhower said the Nazi armies had been whipped, he did not mean exterminated. Two days after his statement, they were still putting up a blockade of successful resistance in three sectors particularly, including even in the old Remagen bridgehead area. Their army as a whole was hopelessly whipped, but military judges here who have not been wrong often in this war—considered it four or five weeks away from unit destruction.

Use a Water Softener

Soap won't soften water . . . in fact, you'll waste a great deal of soap if you try this. Get a good chemical water softener. There are plenty of good water softeners on the market, and Mrs. Bernice Claytor, specialist at the Texas A. and M. college extension service, says sal soda is one good softening agent.

Studies made at one experiment station recently showed that where pure soap was used to soften hard water, the cost ran more than six cents per tubful.

Wired as Human Booby Trap, Yank Awaits the End

His Foot Blown Off, Germans Tie Explosives to Body And Leave Him.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.—Pvt. William H. Edwards' foot was blown off and he was crying for water, but the three Germans ignored his pleas. They wired explosives to his body, and left him—a human booby trap.

Edwards told his strange story at McCloskey General hospital here . . . how his right foot had been blown off by a mine . . . how the Germans fastened the explosives to him . . . how he knew that if he moved he was doomed . . . or if help came when he was unconscious he and his rescuers would be killed, an Associated Press report says.

And he lay there for hours between American and German lines in the Hurtgen forest, under a constant artillery barrage. German 88 shell fragments hit his left leg as he waited.

It all started simply enough, Private Edwards said. This member of the 4th infantry division, who has a wife and six children in Hayti, Mo., had begun what was to have been a 40-minute night patrol.

Lay Still Through Night.

Near the German lines Edwards stepped on a mine which blew off his foot. He lay quietly until morning, fearing that any sound would betray his comrades.

He could not bandage his wound, but, fortunately, it was one of those curious injuries in which the veins and arteries are forced upward so they are, in a manner, sealed.

At 10:30 a. m. he called for a medic. The enemy heard him and began a search, but did not find him. Soon afterward a pebble hit his leg and he heard an American medic whisper: "Are you a G.I.?"

"Hell, yes, I'm a G.I.," he replied.

"Don't make any noise and we'll get you out," the medic whispered. They crawled to him and lifted him from the ground, but the Germans had seen the rescuers and sent a rifle bullet crashing into the hand of one of the medics.

Medics' Efforts Fail.

Unprotected, they dropped back. Later they tried to get to him again, but German fire drove them away.

When darkness of the second night fell, three Germans came. Edwards asked for a drink of water. They refused it. They took his field jacket, divided up five packages of cigarettes in his pockets, then set to work booby-trapping him.

"I lay on the charge the next day and into the night," he said. "I smoked some cigarettes the Germans failed to find in my shirt pocket. I sure thought I was a goner. I knew I would never leave the forest alive."

About 2 a. m. two men of another company came in to get the wounded. Still conscious, he directed the cutting of the wires to the charge under his back. And they carried him away.

He had lain there for 70 hours.

New Navy Flight Trainer Does All a Plane Will

PATUXENT RIVER NAVAL AIR STATION, MD.—The navy unveiled its new operational flight trainer—an on-the-ground device to train crews for navy patrol bombers.

An electronic model of a Mariner flying boat, it trains flight crews to meet such emergencies as rough air, icing, engine failure. It stimulates all actual flying, including the roar of the engines, and has radio communications within the plane and with a mock radio tower.

The trainer is located in one room of a small building. The instructor, in another room, manipulates switches that create various emergencies. Before him are dials, duplicates of those in the simulated plane, which record the trainees' reactions.

Portuguese Boy Designs High Speed Flying Bomb

LISBON.—Joao Alberto Machado, 14-year-old son of poor parents and a student at the Lisbon Industrial institute, was reported to have invented a flying bomb.

A model of the bomb and plans for its construction were said to have been delivered to the air attache of the United States embassy, which sent them to Washington for examination.

The bomb was described as catapult-launched, with a capacity of a little more than a ton of explosives and a speed of about 310 miles an hour.

Scissors Are Lifted Out Of Her After Nine Years

MILWAUKEE.—Mrs. Anna Kulwicki, 43, wife of a tavern keeper and bowling alley operator, has successfully undergone an operation for removal of a pair of incision scissors which had been in her abdomen for nine years. The scissors were discovered through an X-ray examination last month after Mrs. Kulwicki became ill. Her husband, Ted, said at that time that she had felt pain in her abdomen since she had a tumor operation in 1936, when the scissors were apparently left inside the incision. The doctor who performed that operation is now dead.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for April 22

THE FOUNDING OF THE NATION

GOLDEN TEXT—Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. —Proverbs 14:34.

God has a purpose for the lives of men and of nations. Happy are those who seek His guidance so that their lives may be directed in right and useful channels.

God's threefold purpose for Israel, which we noted in our lesson of last week, could only be worked out in a nation which was separated unto Him, following holiness in its life and service.

Moses, one of the greatest and most able figures of all history, was God's appointed leader. His success is explained by his willingness to follow God's leading. He sought:

I. God's Counsel (18:19).

Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, having observed how he was burdened constantly by the affairs of the people, came to offer him advice. He started in the right place, by urging Moses to continue to seek God, yes, to spend even more time in the Lord's presence, asking His wisdom and guidance.

No man can lead a people in the right way if he does not have his own life in constant touch with the throne of God. Much of the failure of our day centers right there. We talk much to other men about our national and international problems. There are multiplied meetings and conferences. They do have value, but very little, unless there is a seeking of God's will.

A day of national repentance and prayer would do more for us than many weeks of discussion and debate. We need to seek God's counsel.

Note that the coming of Moses to God concerned the daily affairs of his people. That reminds us that not only the life of our nation, but that of our own homes—and our personal beings—all need God's counsel.

To aid Moses in administering the affairs of the nation, Jethro recommended the appointment of men who were to serve as:

II. God's Counselors (18:20-24).

There has been not a little criticism of Moses for accepting this advice. It is pointed out that when God puts heavy burdens on us, the way out is not to shift the load on someone else, but to seek God's special grace to bear it and to do it acceptably.

There is value in such an interpretation; but when one considers the devout and careful approach of Jethro to the matter (vv. 9-12) and his evident desire to glorify God in it all, there is ground for believing that he was giving Moses good advice.

The great unorganized host of possibly two million people were going through a very difficult experience. The result was dissension and strife, often over trivial things, which needed to be settled. For all this to come to Moses seemed undesirable; therefore other men were chosen to be counselors to the people, interpreting for them the law and the will of God.

While each of us should carry every God-given responsibility with gladness, that does not mean that we are to assume that only we are able to do things. There is no more tragic figure than the pastor or church officer who tries to do everything. Why not put others to work?

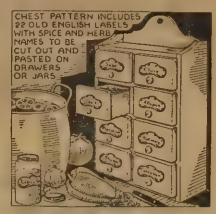
How can our young people and new converts ever find a place of service if older Christians hold on to every job in the church? Let us train them; then trust them with real responsibility. Counsel, encourage, pray, direct if need be, but do not try to do it all yourself!

Now we come to the solemn and crucial moment when God was ready to establish His people and they were ready to accept:

III. God's Covenant (19:3-8).

In the sacred and awe-inspiring meeting place before Mount Sinai, where the Lord was to give them His law (Exod. 20), they made a solemn covenant with God.

In preparation for it He reminded them of what He had done for them in the past. God is the unchanging One. If He was tender and gracious toward them in the past, they could enter the future confident of His blessing. And so may we!



Note verses 5 and 6, for they give us God's great purpose for Israel. All they had to do was to obey His voice by keeping His covenant. This they, in solemn assembly, agreed to do (v. 8). How different their history—and that of the world—would have been had they kept their promise.

We lament their failure, but what about us who are so highly favored that we have Christ in our midst? Are we obedient?

Following the making of the covenant (which God will one day fulfill in spite of their failure), we have the giving of the Ten Commandments, and the establishment of Israel's center of worship in the tabernacle. It was the dwelling place of God among His people. How precious!

Old-Time Spice Chest For Today's Kitchen

AT PICKLING time and all through the year we are using herbs and spices in all the old ways and in many new combinations. Grandmother's herb and spice chest with drawers neatly marked seems to be exactly the right place for these treasures. The one shown here is about 15 inches high and the drawers are planned to hold the shaker cans that spices come in today.

This chest is easy to make from scraps of lumber with plywood back shaped in simple curves that may be cut with a coping saw. The drawer fronts are made with block back construction which requires no special tools. Plastic or brass knobs are used and labels are pasted on and then shellacked.

NOTE—Pattern 275 gives an actual size cutting guide for all shaped parts of this chest and large diagrams showing the construction. A complete list of materials is included; also 22 printed labels so that you may have a wide choice either for one or a pair of chests. To get pattern 275 send 15 cents with name and address direct to:

Window screens of black or light gray wire can be protected by painting both sides with a good screen paint.

To help them keep their shape and to save the fabric, iron bias-cut garments, like slips, with the grain of the material.

So the city folks have done it! Well, watch our speed!

WORD comes from Washington that the fat-salvage problem has got to be licked in the small cities, the towns and on the farms.

We women have to save enough used fats in our kitchens to help make munitions, medicines, fabrics, soap for military and civilian use, and many other essentials.

The job, to date, has been done largely by city people, because arrangements for collecting the fats were made in the cities first. Now we're called on. And will we meet our goal? Just watch our speed!

HOW TO DO IT: Scrape broiler and roasting pans, skim soups and gravies. Melt down meat trimmings and table scraps. Add the liquid fat to your salvage can. Take the can to your butcher when full. He will give you two red points and up to four cents for every pound. If you have any difficulty, call your County Agent. This message has been approved by WFA and OPA and paid for by Industry.

Appeal Made For Poultry Meat Production

P. O. Davis, Extension Director at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, has issued an appeal to the people of Chilton County to produce more chickens for meat. In a letter to M. R. Glasscock, county agent, Mr. Davis makes the following appeal to the people of Alabama:

"Our country needs more meat. The need is now and urgent. The fastest production of meat is poultry. This is an appeal to farm and town people to produce more poultry for meat.

"This is not an appeal for people to build houses and provide other equipment for large-scale long-time poultry production. We have thousands of lamp, brick and electric brooders in the country and the towns of Alabama. Repair these, if needed, and fill them with baby chicks.

"This appeal does not include eggs. The call is for families on farms and in towns where space is available to hatch at home or get from hatcheries 50 to 500 more baby chicks than is eating size for home use or for sale.

"Perhaps a large portion of our poultry meat will not be sent to our fighting men overseas but it is needed in lieu of other meats at home in order that our Armies may have enough meats that can be transported to the war fronts."

"Feeds are high; and sometimes scarce. Feeding out to 100 baby chicks will not net a lot of profit but this undertaking will make a contribution to the cause more valuable ordinarily grown; and raise them to than financial profit. Some profit can be realized with good care and management. While the future is, of course, unpredictable our leaders think that prices on young poultry should be good for at least ten to 12 months.

"We appeal especially to 4-H boys and girls; and to other boys and girls as well as to adults to help in this important work. When your first lot is consumed or sold, restock with more chicks and keep producing until this meat shortage is overcome.

"Alabamians have done a wonderful job in serving our armed forces by expanding their farming operations, under many handicaps, to meet war needs; by providing funds for the prosecution of war; by producing war goods; and by many other fine deeds. We hope that the war end is now in sight. So let's step up our meat production, as outlined above."

As an added incentive to growers and all who handle poulry, ceiling prices of broilers, fryers, and roasters will be raised by a national average of about 1 and one-fourth cents per pound on July 1, says War Food Administrator Marvin Jones in a letter to Director Davis.

Improved Crop Insurance For Cotton Producers

Cotton producers of Chilton County can protect themselves against losses from drought, rain, hail, winds, insects, diseases, and other unavoidable damage by carrying cotton insurance on their 1945 crop. It is a new and improved insurance over that of 1942 and 1943.

In recommending the insurance to cotton farmers, County Agent, M. R. Glasscock reports that farmers in the county must make application by April 10 to qualify for insurance this year. Under the program, all owners, tenants, and sharecroppers are eligible for cotton insurance and can insure their interest in the crop regardless of whether or not other signers on the contract want insurance.

The cotton insurance program is offered by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation and is operated in about the same way as life, fire, or other insurance. Damages will be paid in either cash or cotton.

Premium rates and yields are based on past history of the farms. Farm operators may insure their crops for 50 per cent or 75 per cent of the losses.

All farmers interested in insurance and wishing futher information are asked to call on your Community Committeeman or call by the County AAA office.

AMERICAN HEROES

by JULIAN OLLENDORFF

WHEN a Jap 75-mm gun threatened to halt landing parties at Bougainville, Marine Sgt. Robert A. Owens placed four men to cover fire from adjacent bunkers and then charged into the mouth of the cannon. He entered the emplacement through the fire port, drove the gun crew out and insured their destruction before he himself was wounded. War Bonds helped pay for the guns with which his men covered his heroic feat. Sergt. Owens was awarded a Navy Cross.

U. S. Treasury Department

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad in 1944 received $225,000,000 as income, principally from carrying freight, passengers, express and mail.

Here's what it did with the money:

$84,700,000 went to 34,200 employes in wages
$63,700,000 to the public in taxes
$23,100,000 to industry for materials
$12,300,000 for depreciation and amortization
$10,700,000 for locomotive fuel
$8,000,000 to bondholders for interest
$8,190,000 to stockholders for dividends

These plus certain minor charges amounted to $215,000,000, leaving a balance of $10,000,000 to apply on debt reduction, improvements to property, and for other purposes. The balance represents only 1.9% of the L&N's investment in property, amounting to nearly $540,000,000.

Thus, all interests of the South — homes, families, schools, merchants, mines, industries — benefited from L&N disbursements and service. For 95 years, The Old Reliable has had the privilege and obligation of cooperating in the South's development. When peace comes, it will improve its service and multiply its effort.

High School P.-T. A. Closes Successful Year

On Tuesday afternoon the High School P.-T.A. held their final meeting for the year. In the absence of the president, Mrs. J. E. Gowan, the meeting was called to order by Mrs. Palmer. Mrs. Sophia Jones was the guest speaker for the afternoon and spoke on "The Prevention of Cancer."

Annual Report of the Secretary of the P.-T.A. of the C. C. H. S., Covering the Period Extending From March, 1944, to March, 1945

We come to the end of another year of P.-T.A. activities and endeavors. It is a time when we may look back to see and evaluate the program of work and the services rendered by our organization this year, not that we might boast of tasks accomplished, but that we might gain added inspiration to serve our community and her youth in a better and more efficient way in the new year.

Weeks before school started, our organization, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. J. E. Gowan, our president, was busily engaged getting ready for Clanton's Second Annual Harvest Supper. The patrons responded beautifully when they were asked for donations of cakes, sandwiches and drinks to be sold on this gala occasion.

Some of the outstanding programs of the year will be remembered as follows: The talk given by Miss Bessie Barfield, Supervisor of the Junior Interceder Project for women in Montgomery, as a most enlightening report on the work done there which centers around the rehabilitation of fallen girls. This was followed by an informal tea in the home economics building, honoring Miss Barefield and the teachers.

The talk given by Mrs. Roswell Owens on "The Influences of a Christian Home" at the October meeting was also very inspiring.

Perhaps the most outstanding and best attended meeting was that designated as "Father's Night." It was on this occasion that the Chilton County High School Glee Club, under the direction of Mrs. Raymond Mims, made its first public appearance. A choice selection of songs were rendered beautifully by this body. Mr. Hicks, the speaker for the night, gave a most forceful talk on the subject, "The Problems Facing the American High School Today." After the program a delightful social hour was enjoyed by all.

Miss Shurter, Elementary School Supervisor of Chilton County, was our guest speaker at the February meeting, her subject being, "The Needs of Children in the Elementary Grades."

At all meetings the programs were made much more enjoyable by the rendition of vocal and instructmental music by music students of Mr. Mims.

We have participated in various projects and activities during the year. The need of a punch bowl for the home economics department was met by a gift of money from the P.-T.A. to purchase one, also a china cabinet and a floor lamp.

The Hallowe'en Carnival promoted by the P.-T.A. furnished an evening of wholesome and delightful entertainment for a large group of children in the community. The worthwhile effort of such an undertaking was realized when not a single high school student was reported as having taken part in any of the usual Hallowe'en pranks.

During the year 62 books—31 fiction and 31 non-fiction—were bought by the association for the library.

The largest project sponsored by the P.-T. A. was the buying of robes for the Glee Club. Due to the hard work and the untiring effort of Mrs. Raymond Mims, the director, we have one of the leading Glee Clubs of the State. It was for this group of fine talented boys and girls that our churches, civic clubs and citizens gave liberal donations that robes might be secured for the Glee Club. Within two months this incredible undertaking was realized. Not only robes, but also 360 copies of music, a number of records and a steel cabinet for storing the music were given by the P.-T.A. to the Glee Club. Even though great results from the Glee Club project have been realized this year, it is in the future that our greatest rewards will be evident.

In April through the efforts of Mr. Hicks, who is greatly interested in our students being familiar with pictures and in securing attractive prints for classrooms, the school was fortunate in having an exhibit of prints of famous paintings from the Colonial Art Company of Oklahoma City. This exhibit netted $43.30 which will be used to purchase prints for our classrooms and the P.-T.A. voted to buy some for these. Next year the school plans to have a similiar exhibit for the same purpose.

May we look forward to another successful year in P.-T.A. work and give the same co-operation to our new president that she might carry on this fine undertaking.

Droopy hat veils can be revived by holding over the steam from a teakettle and then pressing between two sheets of waxed paper.

Water in which vegetables are cooked contains valuable minerals. It is an excellent idea to use this water in making soups or gravies.

If jars of food with screw-type lids are difficult to open, try placing the jar in boiling water, lid down, with just enough water to cover the lid. Hold there for a few minutes and the top can usually be unscrewed quite easily.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived at Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major set out to win the confidence of the citizens and promised them to replace the town bell stolen by the Nazis. General Marvin ordered all carts kept out of the city. Major Joppolo, however, hearing that the city would not get water without the carts, permitted them to continue to enter Adano. The Major went to see Tomasino, head fisherman, and arranged with him to start the fishing boats out in order that the city could have fresh fish again. The navy issued a chart showing where the mines were planted.

CHAPTER IX

Tomasino was shaken. "Protection," he said. "Before you came we had to pay protection money to Enea, the Supervisor of the Fisheries, an evil man. In return he 'protected' us. Hah, Fiorentino said one time that he did not feel the need of protection, and the next week his boat, the pretty Matina, burned up as it lay at its mooring."

The Major said: "There will be no such thing under the Americans, Tomasino. That's the kind of thing we want to eliminate."

Tomasino said: "You are lying to me. There is a trick."

At this moment Captain Purvis swung into the port area in his jeep. He jumped out and ran into the delighted crowd, shouting as he ran: "Scram, you. Get out of here."

He pulled out his automatic and fired six shots into the air.

The crowd broke instantly. "The Germans, the Germans," one shouted.

"The Fascists have come back," someone else shouted.

"It's all over," a woman screamed.

"I've been wounded," a man moaned. Of course he had not been. All of Captain Purvis's shots went into the air.

Within twenty seconds the entire crowd had disappeared into the streets of Adano, and there was nothing left at the head of the Molo di Ponente except the smoke from Captain Purvis's Colt. The Captain got into his jeep and drove off.

Tomasino was alarmed by the shots. "You have come to shoot me," he shouted, springing to his feet. "I knew there was a trick. You want to kill me."

But Major Joppolo calmed him. "That was just to get rid of the crowd. I don't want anything except to send you out fishing, Tomasino."

Tomasino said: "There is a trick," but he sat down again.

The Major said: "Tomasino, we will need about a half a dozen boats. Can you help arrange this?"

"To whom will the tribute be paid? How much will it be?"

"You won't have to pay any tribute to the Americans, Tomasino."

"No protection. No tribute. I do not believe it. And how much tax must we pay on the gross weight of our catch?"

"There will not be any tax on your catch, Tomasino. You will only have to pay the regular taxes. It is true that your profit will be limited to fifteen per cent of what you take in. The rest you must spend in wages to your fishermen and upkeep on your boats."

"No protection, no tribute, no special tax. You are making fun of me, American."

"Why should I make fun of you, fisherman? It is my job to run this town. I consider it my job to keep the people of this town alive. They haven't enough to eat. I want fish for them. I want you to go fishing. Why should I make fun of you?"

Tomasino stood up. "American," he said, "I begin to think you are different from the others."

The Major ignored this concession and said: "Tomasino, I want you to be the head of the fishermen of Adano. There will no longer be a criminal like — what was his name?"

"Enea."

"There will no longer be an Enea over the fishermen. I want a fisherman to be in charge of the fishermen."

Tomasino's sad face almost broke into a smile. "There would be justice in that, and we fishermen aren't very well acquainted with justice." Then the morose man thought a moment. "No," he said, "I can't do it."

"Why not?"

"I would be a man of authority. I would be the thing I have hated all my life. The other fishermen would laugh at me for becoming the thing I had always hated most."

"But Tomasino, you've just admitted that I was different from other men of authority. You could be different too. It is possible to make your authority seem to spring from the very people over whom you have authority. And after a while, Tomasino, it actually does spring from them, and you are only the instrument of their will. That is the thing that the Americans want to teach you who have lived under men who imagined that they themselves were authority."

Tomasino thought a long time and then said: "It is too good. There is a trick."

"Yes, as a matter of fact there is a trick, fisherman. The trick is that some men are not good enough for this thing, and that makes it fall down. Right here in this invasion we have a general who is not good enough, General Marvin. He imagines that he is something that ought to be worshiped. Also we have one who may not be good enough, I'm not sure yet, much closer to us than the General. I mean the Captain of the Navy who runs this port. He is a young man and very fond of authority. And Tomasino, we have to get permission from him before you and the others can go out fishing."

"Who is this young man of authority?" Tomasino said with a sullen face. "I will bash his head in with my gaffing hook." And the fisherman's face looked as if he meant it.

"Let's go and talk with him."

And so the Major and Tomasino went to see Lieutenant Livingston in the Port Captain's office. The Lieutenant was feeling very grumpy after the brush-off Major Joppolo had given him because he was in a hurry. Lieutenant Livingston was in no mood to grant requests to an Army man and a meatball.

Major Joppolo, being single-minded, not to say absent-minded, was not in the least conscious of Lieutenant Livingston's mood.

"Hi, Captain," he said blithely when he and Tomasino walked in. "Back again."

"So I see," said Lieutenant Livingston without pleasure.

"This is Tomasino, the head of the fishermen here." Tomasino, hearing his name, gave the Lieutenant a Fascist salute.

Lieutenant Livingston said: "Would the old fisherman mind taking a seat out there in the hall? I have a rule that no Italians are to come in this office."

"Scram, you—"

Major Joppolo said: "Tomasino wouldn't mind, but I would. What kind of way is that to run an office in an Italian town?" Tomasino, hearing his name, gave the Lieutenant another Fascist salute.

Quite coolly Lieutenant Livingston said: "I don't know how you run your offices in the Army, Captain, but in the Navy we have something we call security. We can't afford to be careless."

Major Joppolo was indignant. "I'll vouch for Tomasino." Tomasino saluted. He hated authority, but he knew it when he saw it.

Lieutenant Livingston said testily: "Major, after all, this is my office."

The Major said: "Well, it's Tomasino's town." Tomasino saluted.

The Lieutenant said: "What do you want, Major?"

Major Joppolo said: "I want the Navy's permission to send out six fishing boats to get fish for Adano."

Lieutenant Livingston said: "Impossible."

Major Joppolo said: "What's impossible about it?"

The Lieutenant said: "We'd have to get permission from ComNavIt and he'd have to refer it to ComNavNaw, and they're both Admirals. Not a chance."

Major Joppolo said: "What's all that gibberish mean?"

The Lieutenant said: "Commander Navy Italy and Commander Navy North African Waters. Is that gibberish, Major?"

The Major said: "Why do you have to go running to the Admirals? Don't they give you any responsibility at all?"

Lieutenant Livingston spoke very patiently. "You wouldn't understand," he said. "This is a Navy problem."

"Listen, Captain, we're in this war together. What's itching you?"

"How do you know this man isn't in the Italian Navy? How do you know he isn't being paid by the German Navy? How do you know he just wants to fish?"

Major Joppolo was too outraged to laugh. "Tomasino?" he said. "Have you ever talked with Tomasino?" Tomasino saluted.

The Lieutenant said: "Can he speak English?"

Major Joppolo had had enough. He said: "Listen, Captain, this town is hungry. It needs fish. If it doesn't get something to supplement its diet, people are going to die here of starvation. Are you going to let these men go out fishing, or aren't you?"

Lieutenant Livingston was surprised by the Major's vehemence. "They might hit loose mines and be blown up," he said defensively.

"I don't care. This is a war. Some people've got to get killed so others can live. Are you going to let these men go out fishing, or aren't you?"

Lieutenant Livingston said uncertainly: "I don't think I ought to."

Major Joppolo said: "Captain, unless you give permission for these men to go out, I'm going to send a separate letter naming each person who dies of hunger in this town to your commanding officer, and in each letter I'm going to say it's your fault."

"Maybe we could work something out," the Lieutenant said.

"You know we could," Major Joppolo said. "By day after tomorrow I want you to have six charts ready showing exactly where these boats can go and not run into our mine fields. They don't have to show where the mines are, all they need show is an area where the boats can go. I'll see that these men stick to that area. Have it ready day after tomorrow."

And before he could catch himself, Lieutenant Livingston of Kent and Yale had said to Major Joppolo of the Bowery and Tammany Hall: "Yes, sir."

Outside, Tomasino said: "I hate him. What did he say?"

"A lot of foolishness, except for one thing," the Major said. "If you go out fishing, Tomasino, you may get hurt. Your boat might hit an American mine."

"What do I care?" said Tomasino. "I am going fishing. Mister Major, if you could know how unhappy the fishermen of Adano have been. All we want in the world is to go fishing. We will go even if we have to pay graft to the men of authority. Now you say we don't have to do that. Thank you, Mister Major."

"No," the Major said, and he decided to try something. "No, Tomasino, I thank you for taking charge of the fishermen, and I kiss your hand."

Tomasino looked at this man of authority, and he said: "You are different." And the old fisherman turned and ran out on the mole to the Tina, and he shouted as he ran, as if telling his boat: "We are going fishing! We are going fishing! We are going fishing!"

The telephone rang.

"Hello," Major Joppolo said. "Joppolo, Amgot."

"Joppolo, this is Sartorius, up at Vicinamare."

"Oh, hello, Colonel."

"About that bell."

"Yeah, any luck?"

"Oh, they shipped it off."

"Not only that, but the third entry says the Fecoratta Artillery Foundry at Forty-three Via Edda Mussolini in Milan—can you imagine naming a street for that fiewsie?—it says that the Foundry acknowledged receipt of the bell. That entry was on July the second. I'm afraid your bell is just a hunk of cannon now, Joppolo."

"Too bad."

"Well, at least I found the records for you."

"That's awful disappointing."

"Yeah, I'm sorry. But I'm glad I could set you straight on it." All Colonel Sartorius wanted was one word of thanks.

"These people down here'll be heartbroken," the single-minded Major said.

"Is that a fact?" said Colonel Sartorius. "Well, you're welcome," and he hung up hard.

The day that Mayor Nasta came down from the hills Major Joppolo got his first idea that perhaps the people of Adano really were glad to have the Americans around.

Major Joppolo was having lunch with Captain Purvis at the Albergo dei Pescatori. Joppolo and Purvis had almost nothing in common, but they were beginning to like each other pretty well. It was probably just that they were both officers and Americans, and no matter whether they would have been worlds apart back in the States, here they were blood brothers, and they could talk over their reactions and laugh together and understand each other. Brother Purvis still wanted to get Brother Joppolo drunk, but even that issue, which began bitterly, was now becoming a joke and a promise of some fun.

The Albergo dei Pescatori had the best food in Adano, and the Major and the Captain ate there regularly now. The food was nothing to write home about, but it was better than C Rations. Lunch and dinner were exactly alike and never varied: pasta with tomato sauce, a little fried eggplant and cheese, an omelet, bread, fruit and red wine. The place owned just nine regular customers.

Many Cross-Country Radio Programs Sent Via Wire

Millions of Americans do not realize that many radio programs they hear travel greater distances over telephone lines than through the air.

For example, a network program that originates in New York and is heard in San Francisco through a local station is transmitted some 3,000 miles by wire but less than 30 miles by radio waves.

A MESSAGE TO AMERICA ABOUT AMERICAN SOIL

THE SOIL is the very foundation of American prosperity and progress. Our independence and our opportunities are deeply rooted in it.

For years, people thought our soil was inexhaustible. New land was plentiful. New farms could be carved out of the wilderness cheaper and easier than old farms could be maintained. So when a farm lost its fertility, the farmer and his family simply moved to a new piece of land.

Today, it is a different story. Most of the good land has been cleared and is being farmed. When a farm loses its productive capacity, there may not be any place to move. And the nation's supply of food and fiber is reduced. That is why soil conservation has become so vitally important.

More than one hundred million acres of land have been seriously damaged by wind, water erosion, incorrect farming practices and other causes. Each year millions of acres more are being damaged, some beyond redemption.

Soil conservation methods are efficient, effective and easy to practice. Contour farming, terracing, strip-cropping, fertilizing and crop rotation are the principal methods used. Every farmer can get complete information and specific recommendations from his local Soil Conservation Service Representative, his County Agricultural Agent or his Vocational Agriculture Teacher. The land that each farmer cultivates is a national heritage. It should be passed on to the next generation better than it came to him. That is a trust which each man assumes when he makes his living from the soil.

Firestone believes that soil conservation is fundamental to the welfare of our country and its people. We believe soil conservation is everybody's business. That is why we are conducting extensive experiments on the 141-year-old Firestone Homestead Farm near Columbiana, Ohio, where our founder, Harvey S. Firestone, was born. That is why we are sponsoring soil conservation contests through the 4-H Clubs, cooperating with the Future Farmers of America and promoting the exchange of ideas through the Firestone Champion Farmers Association.

We have also recently published a new booklet on soil conservation entitled, "Our Native Land, a Trust to Keep," which you may obtain without cost. Simply send your request to the Firestone Farm Service Bureau, Akron, Ohio. I feel sure that you will find this booklet interesting and instructive.

Where they are and How they are

Sunday morning, bright and early, I noticed a sailor coming down the sidewalk by my house looking like he owned the world. When he drew near the house I knew that it was none other than young S 2-C Noel Morgan who left 2 months ago to take his boot training at Great Lakes, Ill.

Someone made the remark to Noel that he looked like a stranger in town, to which he immediately replied. "Yeah, I didn't know Clanton did look so good until I arived here a few minutes ago."

Noel just completed his boot training and is spending a seven-day leave here with relatives and friends. He is a nephew of Messers B. N. and John Studdard.

Corp. Luther Sammons of Clanton, is now serving as projectionist in the John H. Payne Field Theatre at an ATC Base in Cizro, Egypt.

Statements such as: "Hey bub, toin on da lights." "Whatcha doin to us?" "I wanta see Hedy Lamarr", may mean nothing to the average American, but to Corporal Sammons they mean he's met with a little difficulty in his army asignment.

He finds that life is not all a bed of roses. Electric power fails—his motion picture machine breaks down, and many other things too numerous to mention.

Even with such little equipment, Sammons job is to make the important passengers carried by the North African Division, USAAF Air Transport, feel as though they are back in a neighborhood movie in the U. S. A. His greatest pleasure is as projectionist for the world premieres of such movies as "Rhapsody In Blue."

Corp. Sammons is the son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Sammons. Prior to entering the service he was employed by the E. I. DuPont Co., at Childersburg, Ala.

Sgt. Harold Lawrence has recently returned from thirty-three months service in the Mediterranean theatre of operations.

Friends of Sgt. Lawrence are glad to have him back in the states and visiting his parents. Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lawrence.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence also have here with them for a few days, another son, Storekeeper 2-C Jack Lawrence, from Galveston, Texas and Elizabeth Lawrence, of the WAVES at Miami, Fla.

First Lieut. Herbert L. Morgan, U. S.M.C. is now serving in the Pacific Area with an ordnance Co., 5th Field Depot. After graduating from Isabella High School in 1939, Lt. Morgan worked his way through A. P. I. Auburn. He was allowed to obtain his degree in Agriculture at Auburn before entering Officer's Candidate School, Marine Station, Parris Island, S. C., in June, 1943.

After being awarded a commission as 2nd Lt. he was stationed in the States for several months when, fulfilling his wishes, he went overseas almost a year ago. Lt. Morgan is one man, like millions, who anxiously awaits his return to a free America—the assurance for the work we are now prosecuting.

Pvt. Edwin Taylor of the U. S. rmy is spending a furlough here with his parents and friends.

He is enroute from Camp Hood, Texas to Fort Meade, Md.

Private Earnest Fuema of Route Two, Clanton, has arrived at the Army Oliver General Hospital at Augusta, Ga., and is now a patient on Ward.

Pvt. Fuema has just returned from overseas where he served with the Infantry.

FOR RENT — My large concrete house at 2nd Ave., N. and Hinkle Road: hardwood floors, connection for electric stove. Also have two small furnished rooms, for one or two girls who work in town. Only three blocks out.—S. S. Stanfield. 16-1tp

Pvt. John G. Vines, better known as "Johnny" and formerly of Mt. Creek, was seriously wounded in Germany, March 1, 1945, according to word from the War Department, received by his mother, Mrs. Hazel Peck. March 16th.

On Christmas day volunteers were called for in England. He was with the Company that volunteered' and went across the Channel. Johnny was with the First Army in France, Belgium, Holland and Germany, where he was later evuacated by plane to England.

The Private writes that he is improving rapidly and is now able to do his own letter writing, and asks all his friends to write him.

Like many others, he is hoping to be back in the states soon, but until he is the friends of this "Johnny Doughboy" must not let him down. Write him, and do it often. His address is: ASN 44050692, 4124 U S A Hospital Plant, APO 519 care Postmaster, New York, N. Y.

At the end of his leave, Thad will go back to O.G.U. at Great Lakes.

S-Sgt. Harrison T. Tracy, husband of Mrs. Verdie Lucile Tracy. 416 Bibb Street, Montgomery, Ala., has been assigned to the base unit at an installation of the First Troop Carrier Command, at Pope Field, N. C.

Sgt. Tracy, who was a painter in civilian life, is the son of Mrs. Lillian Tracy, of Route Four, Clanton.

After several months service in Brisbane, Australia, Sgt. Luverne Woodfin of the Woman's Army Corps has arrived at a forward base in the New Guinea Area. A member of the WAC since January, 1943, she formerly made her home with her mother, Mrs. Marinda Woodfin, at 105 Third Avenue So.

Since going overseas, Sgt. Woodfin has been working in the Central Mail Directory, an essential unit of the Army Base Post Office which serves United States Army Forces in the Far East.

She has three brothers in the service also: Warrant Officer Nolin J. Woodfin, and S-Sgt. Sponnie W. Woodfin, both in the Army; and Cpl. Wilham Woodfin, Marine Corps.

Pfc. Jimmy Hodgens is spending a short furlough here with his wife and baby and other relatives.

Samuel Fuller, formerly employed at Rockett Hardward Co., has recently been given an honorable discharge from the Army at the Fort McPherson Separation Center after serving in the Army for 16 months.

At the time of his discharge, he was serving as a Private in the Ordnance at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md.

Pvt. Raymond Diffley, husband of Mrs Jettie Diffley of 8th Street has just returned from overseas and is spending some time here with his wife and children.

CHILTON COUNTY OVER THE TOP

Chilton County over the top with the mighty Seventh in Seven Days!

Many counties and many States will be asking how on earth they did it.

They did it just like Montgomery did it in North Africa.

They did it just like the Russians did it in Stalingrad.

They did it just like the Allies did it on D-Day.

They did it just like Eisenhower did it over the Rhine.

They did it just like the mighty Third, Ninth, Seventh, British, Canadian and French armies did it along the Western Front.

Yes, they did it just like MacArthur did it in the Philippines.

They did it just like the Marines are doing it now.

They did it just as Truman did when he said, "We shall carry on."

They simply made up their minds to do it so.

They did it.

DELTA KAPPA GAMMA HOLDS MEETING

The Alpha Beta chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma met at the beautiful new home of Mrs. S. E. Waters on Selma Road, in Clanton on Thursday afternoon, April 12.

During the business session, new officers for the year, 1945-46, were elected.

The program consisted of an inspiring talk on "Enrichment of Teachers," "Lives Through Literature," by Miss Bonnie Clyde Griffin.

During the social hour, a delicious salad plate was served to the members by Mrs. Waters and Mrs. Myra Bradley, hostesses for the occasion.

JOIN IN THE DRIVE FOR CANCER CONTROL

The response to the drive for membership in the Field Army to control cancer has been most generous. If you have not joined by paying $1.00 and pledging to see your family physician for periodic physical examinations let this be the day you join the mighty army that is organized to conquer cancer. Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer, County Treasurer of the American Society to Control Cancer will gladly enlist you. Send your dollars to her.

The County Commander, Mrs. Sophia L. Jones, wants all the volunteer workers in the Field Army to make reports to Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer by Saturday, April 28th. Guard those you love. Give to Conquer Cancer.

Local Student Gets Reader's Digest Award

Annie Ruth Smith valedictorian of the graduating class at Chilton County High School, has been given the Eighth Anual Award of The Reader's Digest Asociation for students who by their successful school work give promise of attaining leadership in the community. it was announced today by Mr. Patterson Hicks, principal.

Miss Smith will receive an honorary subscription to The Reader's Digest for one year and an engraved certificate from the Editors, "in recognition of past accomplishment and in anticipation of unusual achievement to come."

Since 1937 The Reader's Digest Association has presented these awards yearly in senior high schools throughout the United States and Canada to the highest honor student of the graduating class. The awards are part of the educational program sponsored by the Association and were a logical outgrowth of the wide use of the Reader's Digest in school work. With the collaboration of leading educators, a special edition of the magazine, containing reading improvement guides and study helps, is made available to schools and colleges as a supplementary text book in English and social science courses.

The award to Miss Smith, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith, Clanton Route 4, was made possible through the cooperation of Mr. Hicks and his teaching staff. They selected Miss Smith to receive the award, designed to stimulate scholarship, citizenship and continued contact with good reading after graduation.

STORM WRECKS HEAVY DAMAGE IN COUNTY

Heavy rains and high winds visited Clanton and vicinity Tuesday evening and caused heavy damage in the business district as well as to the crops. Damage to the peach crop alone was estimated to be $50,000.00. According to Red Glasscock, County Agent, who made a quick survey Wednesday morning, in some places the damage to the peach crop reached seventy-five percent.

"The greatest damage, however, was to the crops and the soil," stated Mr. Glasscock. "In many instances the entire crops will have to be replanted."

Few business houses in the downtown area escaped damage as the water and wind combined to force its way into the stores and ruin merchandise. Many trees were blown down throughout the city. Telephone lines were down and the whole district was without lights from seven p.m. Tuesday until Wednesday morning.

The strawberry crop that was at its peak was probably completely ruined.

Alabama AAA Funds Increased For 1945

Funds for paying Alabama farmers for carrying out soil improvements on their farms have been increased 30 per cent under the 1945 AAA program.

In reporting this increase, W. B. Crawley, chairman, Alabama AAA Committee, reveals that Alabama has been allotted $4,449,000 for use in paying farmers for planting winter legumes, phosphating and liming soils, terracing lands and establishing stands of kudzu, lespedeza sericea, crotalaria and forest trees.

"Of the total amount, $2,100,000 will be used in paying farmers for winter legumes seeded in the Fall of 1944," said Mr. Crawley in revealing that $2,349,000 is available for paying for other soil building and conservation practices.

In pointing out that it is going to be difficult for farmers to qualify for all this money, Mr. Crawley pointed out that "the AAA will pay only approximately 80 per cent of the cost of carrying out a practice compared to approximately 100 per cent in 1944."

"This means that the value of practices carried out, reported and eligible for payment must be aproximately 25 per cent in excess of the state allocation of funds or $5,398,000, in order for the state to use up the full allocation of funds," he says.

CHILTON COUNTY SETS PACE IN BOND DRIVE

Reaches War Loan Quota In Seven Days; Fourth In Nation

Chilton County passed her quota in the Seventh War Loan Drive last Saturday afternoon.

First County East of the Mississippi River and fourth in the Nation to accomplish this feat is her record in this drive. Bob Oglesby, Chairman of the drive, stated Wednesday that everyone in Chilton County seemed determined to finish this Seventh War Loan Drive in the shortest possible time, and because of that the cooperation received by the Committee was perfect. He further stated that the success of this drive was proof positive that the fine citizens of Chilton County could do anything that they made up their minds to do.

The Chairman and the Committee praised their co-workers highly and repeatedly, stated that it was the work of all of the people and not the work of the Committee alone that made the County's splendid showing possible.

Following is a telegram from Henry Morgenthau:

J. R. Oglesby,
County Chairman War Finance Comm,
Clanton, Ala.

I am delighted to hear that Chilton County has reported over the top in E Bond sales for the seventh war loan drive with sales totalling more than three hundred thousand dollars As of today Chilton County is the first County in the South to have achieved such a remarkable record in this drive. I hope you will extend to your co-chairmen, Victor J. Heard and Frank Callen, and to all of the patriotic citizens of Chilton County my congratulations and best wishes.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

OLD-AGE PENSION ASSOCIATION TO HOLD MEETING IN MONTGOMERY

At Montgomery, Tuesday, May 1st, 210½ Bibb Street, at 9:30 a.m., the Association's Legislative Committee will hold a business session in preparation of the program to be sponsored in the Legislature by the Committee and pension organization.

Committeemen are urged to attend this meeting, and to those who are unable to go to Montgomery, you are urged to write a postal card to the Governor and your members of the Legislature to act now to pay pensions and redeem their pledge.

4-H CLUB CALF SHOW WILL BE HELD MAY 3RD

CHILTON COUNTY 4-H AND FFA CLUB BOYS AND GIRLS TO PRESENT 26,000 POUNDS OF QUALITY STEAKS ON THE HOOF

By M. R. Glasscock

Chilton County's Second 4-H and F.F.A. Fat Stock Show is to be held in front of the County Agent's Office in Clanton at 10:30, Thursday, May 3.

At this time Chilton County's progressive farm boys and girls will present 33 fat animals that are packing quality and finish that will compare favorably with animals from the leading beef sections of this country.

These animals are the result of improved breeding, good feeding and careful management. Chilton County's club members will present results of seven more months of hard work that will prove to be a standard of quality for adult beef cattle producers and future club member feeders to strive to reach.

Aberdeen - Angus, Shorthorn and Hereford cattle—all three major beef breeds—will be presented in this show. This will not only be a display of progress being made by 4-H and FFA Club members, but also a study of types and breeds of beef cattle.

Competent and unbiased judges will be present to place and comment on the cattle. Every individual interested in Chilton County boys and girls and livestock development in Chilton County should be present for this show.

After the cattle have been judged and club members have received their cash prizes and ribbons, they will proceed to Birmingham, where they will compete with Club members from other sections of the State. At Birmingham Fat Stock Show the animals will be marketed. Chilton County's Club members will add approximately 26,000 pounds of quality beef to the nation's food supply through these projects.

MARY ANN JONES

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Nazi Front Cracks Under Weight Of Allied Drives Across Reich; Truman Charts Liberal Course

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Standing on balcony of their palace in Nordkirchen, Germany, Princess Valerie Marie Schleswig-Holstein and her husband, Prince Arenberg (right), greatly resent Yank Lt. William C. Gibson's order for them to vacate their 300-room residence. Area was overrun by U. S. 9th army.

EUROPE: Broken Front

"With the enemy breakthrough from the west and another from the east, and with wedges pointing from both directions toward Berlin, the organic structure of the German front has ceased to exist."

Thus spoke Nazi Radio Commentator Max Krull, summing up the Germans' plight as mighty Allied armies rolled upon Berlin from two sides, threatening to split the Reich in half at that point, and Lt. Gen. George S. Patton's forces already had cut the country in two for all practical purposes by driving to the Czechoslovak border in the area of Delsnitz.

With their western armies all but battered to pieces by General Eisenhower's U. S. and British drive eastward from the Rhine, the tottering wehrmacht, of rag-tag makeup at many points, suffered still other heavy blows as the Russians opened up their all-out assault on Berlin, and also launched another major offensive to the south in an effort to link up with American forces smashing eastward in Saxony.

As the U. S. drives slowed up in the face of stiff, last-ditch Nazi resistance along the Elbe river and the lengthening supply lines, the spotlight shifted to the eastern front, where the Russian steam-roller crunched forward in sharp fighting.

Though the Russians threw their full weight against the German bulwarks before Berlin, the going remained hard through the strong and intricate defensive fortifications the Nazis had set up for such an assault. Moving behind massed artillery fire, the Russians were compelled to pick their way through a maze of pillboxes and bunkers, with their tanks encountering heavy armored opposition when breaking into open areas.

As the U. S. 9th army built up strength for a thrust eastward beyond the Elbe to Berlin, and the U. S. 1st and 3rd moved toward a junction with the Russians in Saxony below the German capital, the U. S. 7th edged on the Bavarian mountain fastnesses in the south where the Nazi hierarchy is expected to make a last death-stand, and British troops closed on the enemy's great North sea ports of Bremen and Hamburg.

V-E Day

So long as fanatical German resistance prevails in any sizable degree in the Reich, V-E Day may be formally delayed, supreme Allied headquarters announced, scotching hopes for a proclamation upon juncture of U. S., British and Russian forces.

With millions of Germans under arms and capable of offering stiff resistance along the North and Baltic sea coasts and the mountain fastnesses in the south even after the rupture of a continuous front, it is felt that any announcement of V-E Day while the enemy still was able to inflict heavy losses might lead to a weakening of soldier and civilian morale.

Nazi plans for a fanatical resistance along organized and guerrilla warfare lines have as their objective the dissolution of allied determination to occupy the country in the face of heavy losses from unending opposition. Upon that extremely long shot does Adolf Hitler still hope to save the Reich.

PACIFIC: Suicide Corps

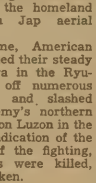
Her great cities aflame, with American forces edging closer and closer to the homeland, Japan has decided upon the organization of a civilian suicide corps to help counter an invasion of the country, it was reported.



Announcement of the creation of the corps came as 27½ miles of the 65-mile industrial district of Tokyo lay smouldering as a result of superfort attacks, and as carrier planes from Vice Adm. Marc Mitscher's famed task force ranged over the southern portion of the homeland and whittled down Jap aerial strength.

Having long written of the fortunes of war, famed 44-year-old War Correspondent Ernie Pyle himself fell victim to its tragic twists, when a Jap machine gunner singled him out as target while he was talking to an officer at a command post on Ie Shima island off of Okinawa and killed him instantly. Covering the Pacific war after writing from the European and North African theaters since the London blitz of 1940, Pyle was considered a soldier's newspaperman because of his genius for portraying military life in simple, homey terms.

At the same time, American ground forces continued their steady advances on Okinawa in the Ryukyus after beating off numerous Jap counterattacks, and slashed deeper into the enemy's northern mountain stronghold on Luzon in the Philippines. As an indication of the continued ferocity of the fighting, most Jap casualties were killed, with few prisoners taken.

33RD PRESIDENT: Starts Tenure

Wished well on every hand, and with congress showing a warm disposition to cooperate with him, Harry S. Truman, former Missouri farm boy who rose to the nation's highest office in one of the gravest periods of history, started his presidential tenure with a dedication to the principles of his predecessor.

Mr. Truman

Lacking both the magnetism and political genius of F.D.R., Mr. Truman's methods may be different, but in his first address to congress and the nation, he left no doubt that he stands four-square behind the late President's program for unconditional surrender, postwar international cooperation to preserve peace, and intends to maintain the liberalism of the last 12 years.

Though pledging himself to the continuation of such liberalism, it was generally felt that Mr. Truman would temper it with a more sympathetic attitude toward business, and strive to bring capital and labor closer together.

Speaking in advance of the United Nations' postwar peace parley in San Francisco, Mr. Truman's address was mainly devoted to foreign affairs, with strong emphasis upon the close working of peace-loving countries to outlaw war, by force if necessary, and the need for the U. S. to assist stricken people and increase overseas trade to raise general living standards.

Heartening has been the new President's continued desire to work closely with congress.

Drys Gain in Local Option Voting

The year 1944 was marked by continued growth of sentiment for prohibition through local option, the Women's Christian Temperance Union asserts, with a survey showing that there were 4,073 "bone dry" areas on January 1, 1945, compared with 3,333 for the same date 12 months before. In addition, it was said, many areas banned the sale of whiskey and other hard liquors.

With no strong support for national prohibition, local option loomed as the most effective instrument for drys in controlling areas. Since repeal, it was pointed out, some 15,000 local option elections have been held, with 9,000 resulting in victories for the Prohibitionists of all local option states, only Delaware remains all wet.

CHAIN STORES: Monopoly Suit

The oft-disputed question of the chain store was brought before Judge Walter C. Lindley in federal district court at Danville, Ill., with the government accusing the New York Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company (the A. & P.) of being a repressive monopoly, and the firm asserting it is merely a highly efficient organization passing savings to consumers.

In presenting the government's case, Prosecutor Horace Flurry charged that the A. & P.'s combined operations permitted it to undersell in certain areas and drive out competition, and the volume of its business enabled it to put pressure on individual manufacturers for its benefit by threatening to withdraw its orders.

Countering the government's arguments, A. & P. attorney W. M. Acton of Danville, Ill., challenged the prosecution to show when the company had never passed a saving to consumers. Declaring that A. & P. sought no monopoly, Acton said the courts have established "you can sell at any price you please—even give merchandise away—if it is not for the sole purpose of eliminating competition."

TELEFACT

FOOD STORAGE: At Low

Standing at 519,929,000 pounds, total stocks of beef, pork, lamb and mutton in cold storage on April 1 were lowest on record for that date, while the government held substantial amounts of smaller dairy and poultry supplies.

At 791,867,000 pounds on the same date a year ago, pork holdings had dipped to 326,399,000 pounds, of which the government owned a fourth. Beef stocks dropped to 151,990,000 pounds and lamb and mutton to 15,254,000. At 432,339,000 pounds a year ago, lard inventories were down to 50,570,000, of which the Dairy Products Marketing association and government agencies owned 21,189,000.

Of smaller butter stocks of 29,639,000, the U. S. held about half; of 98,922,000 pounds of cheese, it owned about 40 per cent, and government holdings of dried eggs included 87,649,000 pounds of 99,881,000; 703,000 cases of shell eggs of 1,777,000, and 25,937,000 pounds of frozen eggs of 115,344,000. At 141,759,000 pounds, total poultry stocks were down from a year ago.

FARM LABOR: More POWs

Unless an early end to the European war occurs, taxing shipping facilities for retransport of men and materials and raising employment problems here, the army plans to bring in additional 125,000 German war prisoners before harvest time to relieve the farm labor shortage.

Working under international regulations, war prisoners have performed valuable services in this country, with 150,000 employed in army camps; 43,000 in agriculture, pulpwood and food processing, and 35,000 Italians in war industry. Having used 20,000 war prisoners last year, canners have asked for 32,000 this season, it was said.

As of April 1, there were 311,630 German war prisoners in this country, along with 50,549 Italians and 3,258 Japanese.

F.D.R.: Will Disclosed

Having previously conveyed the residence and surrounding grounds of his picturesque Hyde Park, N. Y., estate to the government for a memorial, the late President Roosevelt sought to preserve its character for posterity by asking his family in his will not to remove any belongings essentially a part of the property.

Mr. Roosevelt's request was contained in the will which also bequeathed all of his real estate and personal property in Meriwether county, Georgia, to the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Filed in Dutchess county, New York, the late President's will provided that Mrs. Roosevelt is to receive the income from a trust fund set up from his estate, with half of the principal and accumulations going to his children or their heirs upon her death. The remainder would rest in trust for the children and grandchildren. Each servant and employee whose salary was paid by Mr. Roosevelt is to receive $100.

ARMY FARE

Monthly overseas shipments of perishable foods increased during 1944 to more than 2½ times the quantity of these items supplied to overseas troops the previous year in refrigerated ships and deliveries will be maintained at high rates, the war department said.

Even with the larger troop strength now in foreign theaters of operation the supply of fresh foods per man overseas is the largest it has been at any time, army officials said.

Washington Digest

Conference Irons Out World Air Problems

Future of Commercial Flying Depends on 'Freedom of Air' Pacts, Allowing Planes To Fly and Land Anywhere.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

Baukhage has made a study of that highly important question: Freedom of the Air.

The air transport command, with the help of the American aviation industry, has built up the greatest international aerial communication system in history.

Military and civilian experts alike admit that this tremendous system that links the globe from Arctic to Antarctic and around the world is the result of the "know-how," imagination, energy and initiative which have made this nation what it is today.

How shall the arts of wartime communication be woven into the expansion of American trade development in the peace to come?

Baukhage sets forth some of the leading military and civilian aviation opinions in this series of two articles, appearing as UNCIO (United Nations Council on International Organization) opens in San Francisco.

Some time after V-Day, when the forces of the occupation are withdrawn and the world once more settles back to peace, the greatest international air transport system which was ever built will largely cease to be. That system, the Air Transport Command of the U. S. army, criss-crosses the western hemisphere from Nome in Alaska to Rio de Janeiro; from Iceland to Panama City. It stretches eastward across the Atlantic, laces Europe and Africa, reaches India and then swings around the globe by way of Australia, through Honolulu to the Pacific coast.

Over the ATC's more than a hundred and fifty landing fields, the American flag now flies. Big planes travel the routes at the rate of 51 million miles a month, which is equal to 70 trips around the world at the equator every 24 hours.

From the flagpoles on most of those bases, the Stars and Stripes will be lowered after the world has returned to peace. And strange as it may seem, the thing that worries the friends of commercial aviation most is not so much whether Old Glory flies free over those bases, as whether the air over them and the rest of the world is free to the extent that American planes will have access to those and other bases over the globe.

We have achieved freedom of the seas. Why can't we have freedom of the air, too?

I carried that question right into the Pentagon building to the office of one of the AAF officers whose job includes worrying over that important question. He is William Mitchell, lieutenant colonel, United States army air force, assistant executive to the assistant secretary of war for air. This was his answer (Colonel Mitchell made it clear that he was expressing his personal views and was not speaking for the war department, but he stated that his opinions were shared by many other members of the air staff):

"Conflicts over artificial barriers on intercourse by sea," he said, "used to be a fertile breeding ground for wars. But for 200 years vessels of any nation have been able to travel the oceans in peacetime without international supervision, and as a result, this source of international conflict has disappeared."

If he had stopped there I might have left his office feeling quite reassured. But that was only the beginning.

Each Country Rules The Airways Above It

The analogy between freedom of the sea and freedom of the air, it seems, is an attractive one but it won't hold water.

"An airplane does not merely touch the coast of a country," the colonel explained, "it may penetrate into the remotest interior. Accordingly it has become fairly well established that a nation has jurisdiction over the airspace above its land to the same extent that it has jurisdiction over the land itself. The result is that, in the absence of agreement between countries, no plane may cross a foreign border. The air is not free, it is closed."

American ambition doesn't like to be fenced in and already we have mapped a pattern of air routes we'd like to establish when peace comes. Those routes will encircle the globe. Our own civil aeronautics board is in the process of holding hearings to determine which carriers will be certified to fly these routes.

But the certificates issued, says Colonel Mitchell, "will be mere scraps of paper unless other countries consent to operations by United States carriers."

Arrival at such common consent is in the making today, and has been greatly advanced since the state department called the conference in Chicago last November. Representaatives of 52 countries met. At the last minute the Soviet Union dropped out, but certain basic agreements were reached. This conference Colonel Mitchell calls "the civil air part of the peace settlement" because it provided "in the main convention which was prepared, a proposed international organization which might, with respect to air matters within its competence directly affecting world security, enter into appropriate agreements with any general organization set up by the nations to preserve peace."

Colonel Mitchell believes "that the degree, or lack of it, to which the world can be linked by aviation will be an important element in determining whether the nations of the world can be brought together in peaceful understanding."

Preliminary Agreements Made at Chicago Meeting

Now, what did the Chicago conference achieve?

After considerable discussion in which there were sharp differences of opinion, the conference prepared two multilateral agreements on commercial operations which were separate from the main convention and which any country was free to sign if it wished. They are concerned with the "five freedoms of the air" which will be taken up in detail in a later article. They are (1) the right to fly over a country (2) the right to land for non-traffic purposes (3) the right to disembark passengers, mail and freight from the country of origin of the aircraft (4) the right to embark traffic for the country of origin and (5) the right to do business along the way.

Because all of the countries were not prepared to accept all the freedoms, a choice was provided. One agreement offered, between the signatory countries, merely the first two freedoms. That is right to fly over the country and the right of non-traffic stop, which means permission to stop at an airport for refuelling and such purposes.

The other grants all five freedoms, but the fifth could be denied by any country on proper notice to other contracting countries.

At the time this is written the "Two-Freedoms" agreement has been signed (but not definitely accepted) by 34 countries, accepted by four (including the United States, Canada, the Netherlands and Norway).

The "Five Freedoms" agreement has been signed but not definitely accepted by 22 countries; definitely accepted by two, including the Netherlands (without the fifth freedom) and the United States.

The main work of the conference was the writing of a convention on International Civil Aviation and Interim Agreement which will set up an international organization. The conference also recommended a model form of agreement on commercial services to be used in bilateral negotiations.

"The work of the Chicago conference," said Colonel Mitchell, "is merely a blueprint for further activity A start has been made, but, like Dumbarton Oaks, much remains to be done."

Further details of some of the problems involved and the attitudes revealed in negotiations so far will be set forth in a second article appearing next week.

Arm Limitation Produced Two Bobtailed Battleships

The sister battleships, Nelson and Rodney, of the British navy, present a strange appearance because half of their rear section is missing, says Collier's.

Being under construction in 1922 when naval arms were limited at the Washington conference, their tonnages had to be reduced one-quarter; and this was accomplished by cutting some 200 feet off the end of each vessel. But their superstructures were built as originally planned and therefore, came so close to the stern that the heavy guns for the section had to be moved forward.

Constipation is the cause of Much Suffering

Constipation may cause no symptoms for a long time, but unless corrected will finally impair the health. Symptoms associated with advancing constipation are loss of appetite, heavily coated tongue, tired feeling and mental depression. Headache, dizziness, spells, and skin disturbances such as acne, are commonly experienced. In severe cases, neuralgia and joint pains occur. Indigestion, with gas formation and colic, and piles and fissures frequently add to the discomforts of severe chronic cases.

No matter how many other medicines you may have tried for constipation, we urge you to try B-L PREPARATION, with the understanding that B-L PREPARATION must bring you satisfactory results or your money back. Caution: Use only as directed.—Adv.

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder.

Harry Truman's Life Story Proves Again 'Cabin-to-White House' Road Is Still Open

President Advanced From County Offices To Head of Nation

By Elliott Pine
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Forty years ago Harry Truman was plowing behind a mule on a Missouri farm. Today he is in the White House, in many ways the most powerful man in the world.

The new president was born in Lamar, Mo., May 8, 1884. Four years later his parents, John Anderson and Martha Young Truman, returned to Jackson county, 125 miles north, which was the ancestral home of both. Harry grew up on the 600-acre family farm in Jackson county near Grandview. His mother, still alive at 92, remarked reminiscently last fall when he was elected to the vice presidency:

"That boy could plow the straightest row of corn in the county. He could sow wheat so there wouldn't be a bare spot in the whole field. He was a farmer who could do anything there was to do—just a little bit better than anyone else."

During his grade and high school days Harry distinguished himself by his scholarship. He was an omnivorous reader, an earnest student of everything. When he graduated in 1901, he hoped to go to college, but, although his father was known as the "best horse and mule trader in the county," family finances would not permit any more education for the eager youth. He won an appointment to West Point, but was rejected for weak eyesight.

Harry decided to make his fortune in nearby Kansas City. After a few years at small jobs — drug clerk, bundle wrapper on the Kansas City Star, bank clerk, timekeeper on a railroad gang — he went back to the family farm at his grandmother's invitation.

Went to War.

For the next few years working the big farm took all Harry's time. Then in 1917, he volunteered for the army, and soon became a lieutenant of field artillery. While in training camp he organized a canteen for the men, and took care of them in many other ways. Later he rose to a captaincy, and led his company in hard fighting in Saint Mihiel and the Argonne campaigns. On the boat home Harry was commissioned a major.

Soon after returning to Missouri, he married his childhood sweetheart, Elizabeth (Bess) Wallace, granddaughter of the first mayor of Independence, Mo. The ceremony took place in the Episcopal church, Mrs. Truman's sect.

In 1919 Truman decided to go into business, so he entered partnership with a man whom he met in army life, and established a haberdashery store in Kansas City. Harry invested his entire fortune, amounting to about $15,000. At first the business prospered but the sharp recession of 1921 brought disaster. Truman did not go into bankruptcy, but chose to pay off his debts as well as he could. In 1934, when elected to the U. S. senate, he was still meeting old bills.

Somewhat accidentally, he got into politics. An army acquaintance who was a nephew of Thomas Pendergast, then Democratic leader in Kansas City, suggested Harry Truman for some small position. The astute Pendergast, discovering that Truman was well known and liked, had the backing of the American Legion, and was anxious for a new career, appointed him a road supervisor. In return Harry made occasional speeches and assisted in party organization work.

PRES. HARRY S. TRUMAN

The young man's integrity and energy were effective and he was placed on the ticket for county judge in Jackson county. Truman won, and discharged his duties well during his two-year term, 1922-24. He was defeated in his try for reelection, however, the only political setback in his career. (The office of county judge in Missouri corresponds to county superintendent in other states.)

Truman studied law at night during his term of office, and gained admittance to the bar. Then in 1926 he was elected presiding judge of Jackson county which includes Kansas City, and environs.

Handled 60 Million Dollars.

"I had charge of the spending of $60,000,000 for highways and public buildings," Truman said later. "Nobody ever found anything wrong with that, and it wasn't because they didn't look, either. We built more miles of paved roads in Jackson county than in any other county in the country, with only two exceptions."

Truman was repeatedly reelected to this office until 1934. He had sought the nomination for governor in 1930, and for county collector in 1932, but party heads advised him to wait a little longer. Then in 1934 came the big chance. Pendergast put Truman on the ticket for the U. S. senate. This was not such a favor as it might seem, for Pendergast did not expect victory in that year. By a peculiar stroke of luck, however, the opposition was divided between two strong candidates, and Truman's own popularity sufficed to win him a seat in the august upper house. During his first term Truman remained somewhat obscure, making few speeches, and in general following the lead of Missouri's senior senator, Bennett Clark.

With few exceptions, Senator Truman supported the party program. He voted for the original agricultural adjustment act, the Wagner labor act, social security, the Tennessee valley authority, and the joining of the World court. In his second year he voted for the Florida Ship canal and Passamaquoddy dam project. The only measure he opposed was the President's veto of the bonus payments.

In 1938 and '39 he supported preparedness appropriations and lend-lease. He was chairman of a subcommittee that investigated railroad finance, leading to the Transportation Act of 1940. His work in drafting the Civil Aeronautics authority was outstanding for thoroughness and practicality.

In 1940, after squeaking through the Democratic nomination battle with only 7,000 votes to spare, he won the election by a wide margin. Soon after resuming his seat he became interested in reports of extravagance in construction of army camps. Trunds to set up an investigating committee, with himself as chairman. Within a few months the committee uncovered widespread waste, excessive purchasing, profiteering and inefficiency in military contracts. In the first report the committee attacked "needless waste" amounting to $100,000,000 in the army's cantonment construction program.

Plenty to Investigate.

Complaints poured into the committee's headquarters. One concerned inferior steel plate in naval construction—an investigation disclosed a serious situation, which was corrected. The committee brought about a reversal of policy when housewives complained about a shortage of sugar for canning. Thirty-one reports were issued—all unanimous on the part of the six Democratic and four Republican members. The committee was instrumental in consolidating the various and conflicting war agencies into the War Production board. It helped to end bottlenecks in synthetic rubber and aluminum production. It advocated subcontracting to small war plants.

"The thing to do is dig this stuff up now and correct it," Truman declared. "If we run this war program efficiently there won't be any opportunity for some one to undertake a lot of investigations after the war and cause a wave of revulsion that will start this country on the downhill road to unpreparedness, and put us in another war in 20 years."

These famous investigations put the "Truman committee" in the headlines time and again. Senator Truman grew into a national figure. President Roosevelt took increasing interest in him. So did Robert Hannegan, national Democratic chairman, who knew Truman in Kansas City. When the dust settled at the convention in Chicago last summer, Harry S. Truman found himself nominated as vice president. Victory at the polls in November thrust him into the second highest office in the land.

As vice president Truman had less opportunity to act independently than while in the senate, since as presiding officer of the upper house he could not take sides, as often he wished to do. Unlike his predecessor, Wallace, he did not travel abroad on any special missions for the President, but remained in Washington close to affairs of state.

Shrewd, Practical Man.

The new President is considered a shrewd and practical man, a middle-of-the-road liberal, with an ability to get along with conflicting factions and to compromise when necessary. Capital observers think he will rise to the demands of the enormous task ahead as have other vice presidents suddenly called to vast responsibilities.

Personally, the new President is a modest-appearing man of almost 61. He stands 5 feet, 10 inches tall, weighs about 170 pounds, and is trim and well proportioned. Until they entered the White House, he and Mrs. Truman lived in a five-room apartment. They had no house - servants, as Mrs. Truman, who has been her husband's secretary for years, also preferred to take care of the apartment herself. The Truman's only child, Mary Margaret, is studying at George Washington university. She is 21, and a junior. Her hopes are for a career in music.

All his life President Truman has been a "joiner." Even as a child he often attended the Presbyterian Sunday school, although he is a Baptist. In youth he enlisted in the National Guard, and stayed in service for a dozen years until 1917. His fraternal connections include the Elks, the Masons (he was state Grand Master for Missouri in 1940-41) and the Anah Templars.

Mrs. Bess Truman and her daughter, Mary Margaret, relax in their Washington apartment.

New 'First Lady' Doesn't Like the Spotlight

The new First Lady, Bess Wallace Truman, has a retiring disposition, although she has been associated with her husband in public life for more than 20 years. Much of this time she has been his secretary and adviser, listening to his speeches, answering his mail, and doing other important duties. Nevertheless, she has no personal desire to make any speeches, or to take any active part in politics.

When she was married 25 years ago in the Trinity Episcopal church of Independence, Mo., she "thought and hoped that she was settling down to keeping house and doing church work in her home town."

The new mistress of the White House prefers to wear blue, as have several other First Ladies. It goes well with her blue eyes and gray hair. But she is not particularly interested in clothes. Her hobby is reading. Dickens and Scott are favorite authors.

Mary Margaret Truman, new "princess" of Washington, is tall, blonde, 21, and a junior at George Washington U. She is a popular member of Pi Beta Phi sorority, and is active in college musical organizations. Her soprano voice has been heard in summer productions of the Denver Opera company. She is majoring in voice, and hopes for a concert career. It's more than possible that Margaret may be the first White House bride since Woodrow Wilson's day.

SETTLEMENT AND STRUGGLES IN CANAAN

LESSON TEXT—Judges 2:6, 7, 11, 12, 18, 19; 6:11-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.—Joshua 1:9.

God keeps his promises. Israel found that to be true as He brought them into the promised land of Canaan. Those who rebelled against Him had died in the wilderness, but now a new generation had come into possession of the land.

Here they met the challenge of the heathen, and were victorious over them as they trusted the Lord. Joshua, their leader, after faithful services was ready to go to be with the Lord, but before doing so, reminded them of God's promise and of the danger of unbelief and sin. As our lesson opens, we find the people settled in the land, as far as they had taken it. We find:

I. God's Promise Fulfilled (2:6)

The Lord had promised the land to them as they went in and possessed it by faith in Him. He fully kept that promise in the measure that they believed Him. They never did take the whole land, but that was because of their failure, not God's.

The story speaks to us. God has provided a rich inheritance for the believer in Christ, but it must be appropriated by faith. How much have we taken out of the riches we have in Christ?

We are also reminded of the absolute faithfulness of God. There is little in this world in which we may repose complete confidence, but we may and should trust God. He has never failed anyone, and He will not fail us.

II. Man's Promise Broken (2:7, 11, 12).

The people had solemnly promised to keep God's commandments (see last week's lesson). That promise they had renewed in response to Joshua's farewell challenge (see Josh. 24:20, 21). They kept their word only as long as those who remembered Joshua were alive, and then they "forsook the Lord."

This is the sin of Israel has its counterpart in what is taking place in our land today. The great mass of decent people in America were reared in Christian homes. They know what is right, and they live on the spiritual and moral momentum received from their godly parents.

The next generation now coming into power, without the benefit of spiritual training in the home and church, are forsaking the Lord and following other gods, the gods of pleasure, of money, of lust.

III. God's Plan of Deliverance (2:18, 19).

One would have thought that God would give up a people so set on sinning, but He did not. He provided deliverance for Israel. That gives us courage, for we know that He has not given us up, but has provided in Christ a sure deliverance—if America will but turn to Him.

For Israel's deliverance God provided judges, who were not only judicial, but, in fact, primarily administrative in their work. They were God's men to call Israel back to Him. The repeated failure and backsliding of Israel brought new acts of mercy on God's part in calling out new judges.

It is interesting to note that God works through men. Some of these judges were great men. Others were just ordinary men. But each in his appointed place, at the appointed time, was God's man.

God is looking for men today who will serve Him. He wants brilliant, capable men, but He also calls the ordinary, everyday variety, and as they are faithful, He blesses them. Has He called you? Have you responded?

IV. God's Presence and Power (6:11-16).

Israel had long been under the oppression of the Midianites, who would sweep over the land and steal their crops and their flocks. Israel finally turned to God for help, and He met their need by calling Gideon as the fifth of the judges.

God knows better than to call an idle man, one who is sitting around waiting for opportunity to knock. He seeks out the busy person and gives him more to do.

Note the entirely adequate provision made for Gideon's success. "Surely I will be with thee." That means both the presence and the power of the eternal and omnipotent One.

Gideon at once began the tearing down of the heathen places of worship in his own community. It was the hardest place to start. It always is. But the one whose light is to shine afar must see that it shines brightest at home.

The humility of Gideon as he looked at himself (v. 15) is commendable. But note that he did not permit it to shut the door of faith, as he believed God and did mighty exploits for Him. Don't trust yourself, but do trust God!

Japanese Joke

American soldiers occupying Kerama Island were surprised to find that many Japanese civilians had killed themselves rather than be captured. These people were misled by Japanese propagandists who told them that they would be tortured by the Americans.

While it is unfortunate to see innocent people misled to become the victims of their own folly, there is little that the United States can do about it. Gradually, the news will undoubtedly seep through the Far East that the Japanese are liars and that our soldiers do not mistreat civilians. Until it does, the Japanese joke is on the civilians concerned.

Fourth In A Nation

Congratulations Chilton County! The proverbial hat of the State, the South and the Nation, is off to you for the remarkable record you made in the Seventh War Loan drive.

Not content to call individual names, although some did work much harder than others, it was accomplished by "pulling" together.

Radio programs were interrupted Saturday afternoon about two o'clock to tell the world that Chilton County, Alabama had fulfilled her obligation in the Seventh War Loan Drive.

"The Mighty Seventh, in Seven Days", was the battle cry for this drive and the Committee members who adopted the slogan saw their dream come true—that is exactly how long it took Chilton County to sell her quota.

Not All Loafers

"Most people hear much about the political 'pie-eater,'" declares The Christian Science Monitor, "but know too little about the public servant who really does a job."

There is considerable food for thought in the above sentence. Many Americans have been convinced in recent years that every public official is a burden upon the people, drawing a salary without performing any service. The idea has been carefully fostered by many individuals who are extremely anxious to avoid interference with special privileges.

While, no doubt, some public servants are loafers intent upon securing as much as possible for as little as posible, there are many men and women holding official positions who devote themselves without stint to their jobs.

Such, we believe, is the case of our county. Serving the county, the municipality or other public agencies, you will find efficiency in practically every case. You won't find many loafers. Few, if any, are overpaid for the service they render.

Chilton Ranks Among First

Chilton County stands high on the list of Alabama counties with the fewest traffic accident deaths. Along with seven other Alabama counties, Chilton has a record of three traffic deaths in 1944, while only 15 counties had less, reports the Department of Public Safety. The county's traffic death list was much improved over the previous year's total of six.

If Chilton County can keep this fine record in 1945 by decreasing the number of traffic accident deaths even more, it will be a contribution to the whole war effort by conserving vital manpower. If Chilton County can keep her record free of any traffic deaths for the year, then she will rate highest among all the 67 Alabama counties. It can be done—if every citizen in Chilton County will cooperate with his city police, sheriff and Highway Patrol by driving safely and by reporting every traffic accident.

Traffic accidents are caused by carelessness, for the most part. If citizens will concentrate on saving lives as well as now irreplaceable automobiles, Chilton's goal can be attained.

Alabama's mileage death rate was the highest in the country for 1943, meaning Alabama had more deaths for every hundred million miles traveled by motor vehicles, than any other state. When final figures are completed for 1944, it is expected to be very close to the top.

If Chilton County sets an example for the state with a record free of traffic accident deaths, other counties in Alabama will follow under Chilton's excellent leadership.

Time To Work For Peace

With the Army and Navy casualties since Pearl Harbor climbing to the 900,000 mark, and with many thousands to be added to the grim total before Germany and Japan are defeated, it would seem logical to expect the American people to support almost any plan that offered hope of avoiding a third world war.

Just twenty-five years ago, on March 19, 1920, the Senate of the United States voted finally on the question of whether or not to join the League of Nations. The vote was 49 to 35 in favor of joining, but since a two-thirds majority was required, the lack of seven votes kept this country out of the League and a system of collective security.

The fight against the League will probably be repeated. Certain Senators will fight any proposal for a world organization to keep the peace regardless of its terms. They will not be interested in any system of collective security. They will use the same tactics employed against the League, finding fault with minor defects, insisting upon perfection and attempting to play upon the nationalistic prejudices of our citizens.

Our war President of 1918, Woodrow Wilson, went on record to predict "another world war" and it came almost according to schedule. Somebody else can predict today, with an equal degree of certainty, a third world war unless the United States is willing to play its destined role in the affairs of the world.

Having participated in two tremendous world conflicts, it would seem logical for this nation to continue its interest in world affairs rather than retire into the shell of isolation and permit the other nations to struggle futilely against problems until another war-results. Then, as before, this country will find that its interests and its honor compel it to take part in the titanic conflict.

It would be far wiser, it seems to us, to recognize the impossibility of remaining aloof from a world-wide conflict and, because of our stake, play an intelligent and leading role in the management of the world. Thus we may at least have something to say and do something that might prevent another war.

ENTERPRISE SCHOOL NEWS

On Friday the Seventh Grade had Chapel exercises. They gave the play, "Henry's Mailorder Wife." It was given well and we all enjoyed it.

Mr. Kirkpatrick and Miss Barber held their regular monthly meeting last Wednesday of the FFA and the FHA. We took up the study of proper lids for jars in canning. We concluded with a short singing.

Enterprise softball team went to Vermont and played Friday, April 20. The scores were 17 to 14 in favor of Enterprise.

The grammar grades will be out Friday, April 27 and the lunch room will close. We will miss them both.—

While playing with some monkeys one of them bit him on the hand. Now the fellows at the Times-Journal, where Ewart works, are accusing him of his relatives not recognizing him in public. . . .We don't know why but it seems that J. Mell Martin and Sons are a regular lost and found depot. This week he called to tell us that he had a card on his desk that he had picked up on the sidewalk, belonging to us. The day before he had found a credit card belonging to Mrs. Red Glasscock. Seems the Glasscocks stood to lose heavily should someone found the card who cared to use it to their advantage. Mr. Mell is the most accommodating man in town anyway.

J. E. Bonnett, M M 3-C is home. Bonnett was your insurance man before Pearl Harbor, you remember, and had a world of friends in Chilton County. His wife and son have been living here since he was transferred from Florida to California. A letter received from him a few weeks ago said he was getting ready for that "long hop." But looks like the hop was toward home. Wish it was for keeps.

You folks who have been riding to Ed Bowden's Place in South Clanton for your gasoline and drinks and nicknacks on Sundays will have to remember to do your buying on Saturday night, beginning May 1st. Ed and the Missus have decided that seven days per week are one day too many and will close every Sunday after that date to get a little rest. For the past seven years Mr. and Mrs. Bowden have kept their store and service station open every day, but both are weary of so much work and no play—thus their decision to close every Sunday.

Bob Oglesby surely did a job as Chairman of the Seventh War Loan Drive in Chilton County. He worked tirelessly to make the quota in record time. Bob generously gives credit to all his aids, of which there were many, but his guiding hand did much to accomplish the results attained, and Bob deserves high praise. The News compliments him highly.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

On Friday evening, April 13th, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Chandler, Billingsley Route 1, surprised their daughter, Willie Pearl, with a birthday party. A number of friends were present. Games and phonograph music were enjoyed by all.

A very attractive table was arranged with a birthday cake with 15 candles as a centerpiece. Fruit, cake and soft drinks were served to the following guests:

Ethel, Vera, Morris, Flora, Edith, Elsie Jean and Elizabeth Williams; James and Lazette Brackin; Sue and Roscoe Rawlinson; Willie Pearl, Frances, Clydie Ruth, Gordon, Myra and Sara Ann Chandler; Wilbert and Charles Billingsley; Chester and Leon Mims; A. J. Hathcock and Robert Cox.

Others present were: Mrs. W. D. Wiliams, Mrs. Marvin Rhodes, and children, John Marvin and Bonnie Ruth and Mrs. W. L. Chandler.

The honoree received many nice gifts. A nice time was had by all.

FARMERS UNION AND THEIR OBJECTIVES

The Alabama Farmers Union is moving forward in the cause of justice and the good of all the people. The objectives of the Farmers Union is definite and we believe is worthy of consideration of all liberty-loving people. We urge that each of you analyze the following objectives and see if they are not worthy of your support:

1. Happy farm homes. The establishment of farm families on family-type farms; each farm to consist of a sound economic unit that will enable the family to maintain a reasonable standard of living and which will provide an opportunity to boys and girls in each rural home to become equipped to take their places as citizens in our democracy.

2. Government credit agencies. Preserve, improve and enlarge credit agencies of government to provide adequate credit at low cost to help working farmers to produce abundantly without constant threat of foreclosure. Such agencies as production credit associations should be transformed by the farmer borrowers into genuine credit cooperatives based on democratic Rochdale principles as rapidly as possible.

3. Better educational opportunities. The development of an educational system that will make available to all farm people the type of training that is essential in preparing them to make a living for themselves and to teach them how to live comfortably on family-type farms among their neighbors.

4. Better health care. Working farm families should have health and medical benefits adequate for proper care of health and certainly on a par with such benefits available to people who live in towns and cities.

5. A policy of abundance. Rather than one of scarcity. This means an abundance of everything, not only of agricultural products, but an abundance of processed and manufactured goods. Restrictionist policies in agriculture should be ended. Our goals in agriculture should be: (a) Production of adequate foods and fibers to meet the nutritional needs of all the people and (b) An assurance of adequate return to agriculture so that its people may have a fair share of the goods produced in abundance by industry.

6. Adequate pensions. Adequate pensions for the aged fathers and mothers that they may live comfortably and proudly for their contribution to our economy and democracy.

The above is only a part of our objectives, space will not permit them all at this writing, but we hope to be given space later for more discussion.

Our economy and democracy is like the tide, always in motion, going in one direction or the other. The laws of nature govern the going in and out of the tide, but the laws of man govern the rise and fall of nations, the going and coming of prosperity and depressions.

Whatever the cause may be, whatever the affect may be, each man and woman has fade their contributions for or against it. There is no neutral ground. There are two ways in which men contribute to a cause. You can raise your voice for or against any cause or issue, or you can keep your mouth shut and let the cause go as it may. If a great cause is won by those who make their efforts for it, then those who kept their mouth shut have no honor in the cause, but if a great cause is lost and evils is forced upon the people, then the responsibility lies at the door of those that took no part for the cause.

Do you stand for any of the above causes? Have you discussed them with your neighbor? Do you stand for a pension for the aged? Have you ever written your Governor or lawmakers concerning any issue? Let us take stock of ourselves and see if we are really for something or just floating around with the tide.

The economy of the world and nations are in a continuous change, either for the better or worse. What do you have to offer in the change for better? Your thoughts and efforts are needed in an organized way to help make this a better world in which to live.—W. L. Sanders, Clanton, Ala.

ARE YOU GOING TO USE THE CANNING PLANT?

Can you use the Canning Plant? Yes! Every family in Chilton County is urged to use the canning plant located at the high school in Clanton.

The Chilton County Cannery is an educational project which was installed by the County Board of Education to provide new and better methods of preserving the foods of Chilton County.

Canning plants have been successfully operated in Georgia and a number of other states for a number of years. In the state of Georgia alone, last year over 10,500,000 cans of food were canned in their 500 canneries, which were supervised by the home economics and vocational agriculture teachers, the same as the one in Clanton.

The canning plant is operated on a non-profit basis. No individual, group of individuals or organization will make a profit. The service fee charged, which is 2c per can for vegetables and 4c per can for meats, is only enough to pay the expenses of operating the plant. All sorts of cans will be available at the plant at wholesale prices.

Food is playing a vital part in winning this war. It is our duty to conserve our surplus foods and save for the boys on the fighting fronts. Thousands of cans of foods are wasted each year in this state because of improper canning methods and facilities. So plan now to use your canning plant at Clanton. Make your appointment just as soon as you know when your produce will be ready so the plant will be ready for operation.

MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT

Come one, come all, to Vermont School Friday night, April 27th, to listen to the music you like to hear. It will be played by the "Hill Billy Ramblers." Featuring the "Glenn Twins." EMPLOYMENT OFFICE TO OPEN IN CLANTON

To serve returning veterans, all job seekers, and employers of Chilton County, a full-time office of the U. S. Employment Service of the War Manpower Commission will open in Clanton May 1st. 1945.

Located in the Upchurch Building, the office is open Monday through Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Describing the function of USES as "the matching of men and jobs" James P. Felton, USES manager, listed as office facilities offered the public:

A clearing-house of information about available work and available workers;

Services of a Veterans' Employment Representative responsible for developing job opportunities for veterans, placing them on suitable jobs, putting them in touch with training facilities and other agencies offering special services, and advising them of their rights and benefits;

A program for placement of handicapped applicants on jobs suited to their restricted work capacities;

The taking of Readjustment Allowance claims of returning veterans and Unemployment Compensation claims of unemployed job seekers covered by the Unemployment Compensation law;

A stabilization program to control the flow of manpower in the best interests of war production.

The opening of a full-time office in Clanton, Mr. Felton stated, reflects USES expansion for buoying veterans and uprooted war workers through impending currents of industrial change.

"The job hunting of a veteran," he pointed out, "who has become incapacitated for his former civilian employment, and of a munitions maker, for instance, looking for a peace-time utilization of his skill will be a grim game of hit-or-miss unless systematic machinery of worker steerage is within reasonable reach of every community."

Mr. Felton stated that USES coordinates the full resources of its veteran program with facilities offered by County Service Commissioners and other veteran organizations in the interests of discharges of our armed forces.

AT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The regular Fifth Sabbath service in this church will be held Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock. The pastor expects to get to Clanton Friday a. m. He will be glad to know of any sickness among our people, phone number in Clanton is 23-J.

Modifications and repairs on more than 7,000 fighters and bombers, an all-time high for the number of soldier-technicians engaged was the record 1944 production of the aircraft hangers in England at which Pfc. John Douglas Speer of Clanton is serving.

Pfc. Speers is the son of Mrs. Elma Speer of Route Three, Clanton. He has been a soldier since April, 1943, and has been overseas for twenty months. Prior to entering the service he was employed at Gunter Field, Montgomery, Ala.

AWARDED COMBAT INFANTRYMAN BADGE

Private Grady L. Hudman, husband of Mrs. Lillie Knight Hudman of Route Two, Clanton, who is serving as a member of Company "M," 39th Infantry Regiment, was awarded the Combat Infantryman's Badge in Germany recently for "exemplary conduct in action against the enemy."

In addition to the Combat Infantryman's Badge, Private Hudman also wears the EAME (European-African-Middle East) Campaign Ribbon with one bronze star.

Sgt. Johnnie C. Popwell, now serving with 226th General Hospital in France, as an Electrician and maintenance man, was recently promoted to his present rank from that of Corporal.

He is the husband of Mrs. Beulah I. Popwell of Clanton, Ala., Route 5.

Howard E. Baker, Apprentice Seaman, of this city, is now on duty at Howard College, Birmingham, as a member of the Navy V-12 Unit.

Baker, the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Baker, was employed by the Chicago Sales Co., prior to entering the Navy.

Among those graduating recently from an intensive course of Electrician's Mate training at Service Schools at Great Lakes, Ill., was Arthur Herbert Poole, 22, husband of Mrs. A. H. Poole.

It's great to have First Lt. Guy McKee back in the states after thirteen months in the South Pacific. Guy will spend thirty days here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. McKee, before leaving May 15th, for New Orwhere he will resume the duties of instructor.

We wish him the same success and luck as instructor as he had as a pilot in combat in the South Pacific.

Among the men from Chilton County, who are members of the 403rd Anti-aircraft Artillery Gun Battalion, whose 90-millimeter weapons, firing with precision at a range of 10 miles, have been knocking out German targets in Italy's Po Valley, are the following men and their duties: Pfc. Henry W. Friday, instrument observer, son of Mr. Robert Lee Friday of Route 2; Pfc. Malcolm A. LeCroy, Machine Gunner, son of Mrs. Carrie LeCroy, Route 3; Pfc. James E. AMERICAN HEROES

by WOODY COWAN

COMDR. JAMES HAILE MINI, U.S.N., already holder of a DFC, has been awarded a Navy Cross for leading a flight of carrier planes against the Japs in the Philippines. He so deployed his command that they severely damaged six major combat vessels. Despite heavy anti-aircraft fire, he made an accurate bomb-run on a battleship, scoring a direct hit with a 1000-pound bomb. War Bonds helped pay for the planes and bombs that enabled the Manila-born officer to render that foe ineffective. His home now is at Vallejo, California.

Kathleen Norris Says:

What About Military Training?

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"It is only fair to our boys to have them ready. We didn't want it, we tried to do without it, but for 50 years to come I believe we must maintain a huge force."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

MORE than 500 American women have written to ask me what I think of compulsory military service for our American boys and girls. I don't often let political or international questions get into this column, but this is an exception and I want to answer these women in this way:

In a word, I'm for it. I think we might well emulate the Swiss system, which means only a few weeks out of every year, or at least we might make a serious study of that system. But if we are to be drawn into Europe's eternal boundary disputes and imperial quarrels in each succeeding generation, then in the name of common sense let us be ready for it, and save the lives of thousands of our boys by preparedness.

It was my dream for many years that by keeping the peace herself America might set the pace for the world. I still believe she might have done so. I still believe that if European countries had known, definitely and clearly, that we would not interfere in their old quarrels, they would have managed their affairs very differently in the last 25 years.

The northern, civilized countries, respecters of boundaries and of individual rights, would then have gotten together. They would have presented a solid wall to Germany; in the very beginning of her anti-Semitic purges, they would have united a dozen weak armies into one invincible one. They never did. Holland, England, Norway, Sweden, France, Poland, Belgium, Russia—what might've they have done against Germany's growing war menace! They never got together.

Europe Won't Unite.

It is my sorrowful belief that they never will. Their claim, when any such federation is suggested, is that their differing languages, religions, backgrounds, traditions, histories make it impossible. This sounds funny in American ears. The truth is that their varying imperial ambitions cross and intercross after a thousand years of shifting loyalties and ineffectual wars, and now cannot be untangled even by their most brilliant statesmen.

So I have no hopes of them. Each one will do what some wise or unwise minister believes best for her, and chaos will result.

Meanwhile we have our own magnificent record, our long friendship with our neighbors, our peaceful skies, our unguarded borders. We know countries may live in peace together, and prosper all the more for that peace. But the deadly virus of war has been scattered everywhere now, and who knows what country will next break forth with improved guns and bombs and gases for a surprise attack?

It is only fair to our boys to have them ready. We didn't want it, we tried to do without it, but for 50 years to come I believe we must maintain a sea and air force of perhaps three million men, and an auxiliary force involving perhaps one-third that many women.

These will be our police. A great city without a police force would be in the same position as a great nation with its navy sunk and its men disarmed. Other nations must know that we are ready to implement with the guns they have forced upon us what we say in defense of decency and honesty.

Might Have Been Stopped.

If our three or four million army had been in readiness eight years ago, when Germany's fanaticism broke forth in her anti-Semitic purges, we might have seen the danger then. We might have warned her then that her maniac leader was starting on the death trail. We might never have had the headlines that you and I are reading today.

Too late for that now. But it is never too late to learn, and I, who preached non-interventionism and neutrality for so many years, from so many platforms, see now that we are a part of the great commonwealth of the world, that we cannot impress upon other nations our own ideals of unfearing friendliness with our neighbors, that we must accept a certain degree of militarism until all nations are wiser, and be ready to say "thus far, and no further," when the next Hitler pops up his ugly head.

Military training is essential to dictatorship, true. But it may be a democratic thing, too, ironing out some of the class consciousness of our boys and girls, helping them to appreciation of home love and home comfort, broadening their viewpoints in a way that will be beneficial to them all their lives.

I haven't come to it easily. But I've come to it now. We have to have universal military training, and be ready. It may mean, to other countries, an increasing desire for war. It won't be that, to us. We're smarter than that.

Ironing out class consciousness.

A HARSH NECESSITY

After many years of advocating neutrality and non-intervention, Miss Norris has come to the conclusion that the only security in the future for America lies in a large, permanent force, land, sea and air. This great army and navy will mean universal military training for young men. The women's auxiliary corps will require many thousands of girls too, although a draft of women probably never will be instituted.

There are certain benefits to military training, as Miss Norris points out, that to some extent offset the objections. Better health, wider experience and broader viewpoints are valuable by-products of army life in peacetime.

Girdles Still Scarce

Synthetic rubber is slowly becoming available for manufacture of girdles, but larger quantities of synthetic rubber than natural rubber are required to make the same amount of elastic thread. Also the supply of cotton fabric is still exceedingly short. All this makes it necessary that you get as much wear as possible from the girdle you now have. Wash it frequently with the same care you would give your best hose, and dry it away from direct contact with any radiator.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

TRUSTEE OR OWNERSHIP OF ISLANDS DEBATED

WASHINGTON. — "We cannot have prosperity in the United States if the rest of the world is sunk in depression and poverty," said State Secretary Stettinius to the Chicago council on foreign relations. He advocated among other things an American trusteeship for Pacific islands.

The very same night and at almost the same hour in New York, the Carnegie peace endowment dinner heard Admiral King and other influential speakers say (quoting precisely from news accounts):

"World security depends upon American security and world prosperity depends upon American prosperity."

He advocated that we keep bases in the Pacific, in line with making our own security first.

This direct conflict of viewpoint was advertised as a cleavage in the "cabinet" between the navy-war departments and state, but behind it was the new movement running through the whole government for a change of front.

Altruism is facing a gradually opening opposition. The theory that if we first save others we may save ourselves is hitting up against the doctrine that if we first save ourselves we can keep others safe.

Bases Back to Allies.

This new theory (particularly on the point of bases) first developed in the services many months ago. The men who went into those islands in the Pacific have seen British, French and Australian administrators move in to take civilian control as soon as the firing ceased, or in some cases the civilian administrators actually went in with the troops and exercised civilian control.

Airports our men conquered, and so vital to the future security of the world, became the civil property of those nations which owned them before the war.

A check of the islands in the far Pacific under army control shows none outside the Philippines definitely established as postwar bases for us. We still have use of them for military operations, but the property of our Allies remains theirs. They have given us nothing. These islands are of little value economically, so there is no particular reason why any nation should covet them, except as bases.

New Guinea has officially been placed under Australian and Dutch administrators. Bougainville has been taken over by the Australians (who incidentally murmured in the press against doing it on the ground that the Japs held it so long they had created civilian difficulties.)

In the navy area of the central Pacific, the British administration is supposed to have gone back in most places but the navy refuses strangely enough to give out the facts of the situation, saying: "We cannot speak for the British." (Whatever that means.)

Mandates Embarrassing.

The service people who have fought through these campaigns know these situations. Although they are not generally known or observed by our public, from such beginnings, I think, has sprung the position which Admiral King is now penly pressing.

If a vote were taken upon Stettinius or King in the senate today, King would win overwhelmingly, at least upon the single issue of whether we should own those bases which are essential to our postwar cause of a peaceful world. A superficial canvass shows little sympathy for mandates or "trusteeships," which might prove insecure or embarrassing.

Ev a Foreign Relations Chairman Connally, an administration man, thinks we should have New Caledonia which was French. However, he has not gone so far yet as to permit hearings for the McKellar resolution which would take practically all the islands we are conquering, including the Japs.

Average senate opinion strikes firmly to the line that we should have as many bases as we need for our own security and thus for world security. Also as all these nations —all our friends—owe us more money than they can repay in cash or goods, it appears a bargain for bases might not be out of line.

Thus a more enlightened and practical future-visioning theory of world peace is fast gaining ground.

Mr. Morgenthau has done a superior job of propagandizing congress on the new world bank and fund.

Some lobbyists, objective in this matter, appraise it as the best ever. They say he got the advertising geniuses of the country to counsel him on the side.

Thus his Bretton Woods financial agreements have virtually become patriotically blessed and politically sacrosanct. Anyone who is against them is against peace. Anyone who wants to amend them is probably a Fascist or at least a banker.

Simplicity Is the Keynote for Entertaining
(See Recipes Below)

Tricks for the Hostess

No smart woman need be in a dilemma when it's time for her to entertain. It takes more than rationing and food shortages to do that. Indeed, if you don't breathe a word about how difficult it was to get it together, your friends will think you are giving them a glimpse of prewar entertaining.

You can stretch the precious meat with a supporting cast of vegetables. If you're serving nonrationed eggs, gild them with a bit of cheese and no one will dream that you had to do some fancy extending.

What about sugar? Well, there are syrups, point-free prepared puddings and molasses. No, there need be no difficulties; dress up your dishes and carry on.

Entertaining is fun, but that means fun not only for the guests but for the hostess. It's all up to you whether the party's going to be pleasant for you or not. Gather your point-easy recipes, plan accordingly and I'm sure it will all come out all right.

Let's pretend your guests are coming in for an evening of conversation and a bit of food later on. You'll want a good beverage or cool drink and with that an unusual cake. Here is one made to order for the occasion:

Prune Cake.
2 cups sifted cake flour
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon each, ground cloves, nutmeg, allspice
½ cup lard
2 eggs
1 cup prunes, cooked without sugar
¾ cup milk

Sift together all dry ingredients. Blend about ½ of the mixture with the lard until soft and fluffy. Add unbeaten eggs and beat light. Cut prunes into small pieces and sprinkle with 2 tablespoons of the dry mixture. Add remaining dry ingredients to creamed mixture together with ½ cup of the milk. Stir smooth. Add remaining milk and prune mixture and then pour into greased layer pans. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven until done, 25 to 30 minutes. This cake is good with a mocha or lemon icing.

Delicately spiced cookies are good to have in the cookie box because they're easy to fall back on when the crowd comes in for refreshments:

Maple Nut Balls.
½ cup lard
½ cup brown sugar
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sour milk or buttermilk
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon ginger
1 cup molasses
2¼ cups flour (about)

Cream lard, sugar and salt together. Add sour milk in which soda has been dissolved. Add ginger and molasses and enough flour to make dough that is not sticky. Shape into small balls and bake on oiled pans at 375 degrees. While still hot, press the flat sides together and roll in maple-flavored icing, made with confectioners' sugar. Roll in finely chopped nuts. It takes 10 to 12 minutes to bake cookie balls.

Oatmeal-Mincemeat Cookies.
(Makes 2½ dozen cookies)
1½ cups sifted flour
¼ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
¾ cup light brown sugar, firmly packed
1 egg
1 cup oatmeal, uncooked
½ cup chopped nutmeats
1 cup mincemeat

Sift together flour, baking soda and salt. Cream the shortening, add the brown sugar, then egg and beat until light and fluffy. Last fold in oatmeal, nutmeats and mincemeat, blending well. Add flour mixture and stir until all flour disappears. Drop by spoonfuls onto greased cookie sheet. Bake in a moderately hot (375-degree) oven for 12 to 15 minutes.

As main dishes for luncheons or suppers, I'm suggesting two fish dishes which will be substantial enough even if there are hearty appetites present. They can both be as pretty as a picture to please the ladies:

Shrimp Curry in Rice Ring.
(Serves 6)
3 tablespoons butter or fat
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups shrimp, fresh, cooked, cleaned
Milk
2 teaspoons curry powder
4 cups cooked rice
¼ cup dark corn syrup

Melt butter or fat; blend in flour. Gradually add milk to flour mixture, enough to make about 2 cups sauce. Cook, stirring constantly until thickened. Place over hot water, add shrimp. Add curry which has been mixed with a little water. Combine rice with dark corn syrup and pack firmly in a quart mold. Set in a pan of water and bake in a moderate oven for 20 minutes. To serve, unmold rice ring and fill center with shrimp mixture.

Salmon Loaf.
(Serves 4 to 6)
2 cups steamed salmon, flanked
½ cup bread crumbs
½ cup milk
1 egg
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter, melted

To flaked salmon, add other ingredients in order given. Grease loaf pan and line with cut sweet pickle slices. Pack salmon mixture into this. Set in a shallow pan containing water. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees) about 1 hour or until loaf is firm. Unmold onto hot platter and garnish with parsley and stuffed olives or pickle fans.

Quick Tips: To make a novel dinner or luncheon dish, broil slices of bologna from which casings have been removed. Then fill the cups with creamed potatoes and onions or any other creamed vegetable.

When making hamburgers for a crowd, wrap each individually in waxed paper. The rounds may be cut with a cookie cutter to make them an even size.

When making scalloped potatoes, prepare a complete main dish by placing slices of dried beef in between the sliced potatoes.

Combine mashed sweet potatoes and cooked, crumbled pork sausage meat in a casserole. A topping of freshly sliced pears or apples sprinkled with brown sugar makes this a big favorite. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes.

Housing Project to Attract the Birds

IF YOU would attract birds, remember that they are discriminating tenants. Bluebirds like a house with nest space six inches deep below an entrance an inch and a half in diameter, and they prefer a sunny location five to ten feet high. Robins want a roof but no front on their house; a high location and a little shade, please. Wrens like a tiny house tucked under the eaves of your own dwelling.

The bird house designs shown here are planned to suit prospective tenants and their lines are so pleasing that you will be proud to make them permanent features of your yard or garden. They make wonderful gifts or items to sell too. It is easy to cut out their simple curves in scraps of outdoor plywood or other lumber.

NOTE—Pattern 277 gives an actual-size cutting guide for all shaped parts of these three bird houses and illustrated directions for their construction. A list of all materials is included. To get pattern 277, send 15 cents with name and address direct to:

The establishing of the National Archives by congress in 1934 ended a century-old fight for the construction of a permanent repository for federal records, during which time thousands of important national papers were lost, stolen, destroyed by fire or sold as wastepaper, says Collier's.

In 1935, Archives men, searching for existing records about the capital, found many stored in garages, barns, cellars and other strange places. For instance, the long lost plans for the Washington monument were discovered under layers of dust in the attic of an old abandoned house.

Colored Church News And Social Happenings

Monday night, April 2, 1945, the 40th anniversary of the pastor, Rev. R. C. Mixon, and spring revival were held at the Enon Baptist Church, with the Rev. J. C. Henderson of Welch, W. Va., doing the preaching. Each night was attended and the sermons were very helpful and inspiring.

The different churches in and around Clanton played well their parts Monday through Sunday night. Sunday School at the usual hour with the Superintendent, W. A. Dickerson, in charge.

The lesson was timely received by the visiting preacher, Rev. Henderson. All classes made splendid reports.

At 11 o'clock Rev. Henderson preached another wonderful sermon. At 3:00 p.m. Sunday afternoon Rev. T. D. Wesley of Centreville, Ala., preached the anniversary sermon. The Morning Star, Church of God, Hopewell choir and Chism No. 1, 2 and 3 sang during the day and night, which all enjoyed.

Thursday, April 5th, Circle No. 1 met with Mrs. Marie Jackson, with Mrs. Emma Benjamin, chairman, in charge. The lesson was timely taught by Rev. Henderson, which all enjoyed.

Friday afternoon Martha Moore had as dinner guests Rev. and Mrs. R. C. Mixon, Rev. J. C. Henderson, Mr. T. S. Draper and Mrs. Ellena White. All enjoyed themselves nicely.

At 6 o'clock the Rev. and Mrs. R. C. Mixon, Mr. T. S. Draper and Rev. Henderson were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Benjamin for supper.

The Queen and King contest which was held Sunday night at the Union Baptist Church was won by Miss Martha Moore and was crowned Queen. Mrs. Etta Sawyer won crown No. 2.

Monday at 3:30 p.m. Circle No. 3 met at the home of it's chairman, Mrs. Minnie Davis. It was also her 61th birthday. Each member carried a token of love to her. She received many useful gifts. The lesson was timely taught by the president, Mrs. L. M. Draper.—Martha Moore, Reporter.

600 BUSHELS SEED SWEET POTATOES HAVE BEEN SOLD

Montgomery, Ala. — Some 600 bushels of seed sweet potatoes of the Lauisiana copperskin variety have been sold since the first of the year to Alabama farmers by the State, Director E. P. Russell of the Department of Corrections and Institutions said today. He introduced this improved variety to prison farms, and sold surplus seed potatoes to farmers with cooperation of county agents This is similar to the policy followed of selling breeding stock from the State's beef and dairy cattle herds to farmers. The department is "sold out" on seed sweet potatoes, Mr. Russell said.

Total acreage in prison field and garden crops this year will approximate 14,000, about the same as last, with around 3,900 acres in corn, 1,200 acres in cotton, 1,750 in oats and 235 acres in peanuts. The heavy increase in food crops, inaugurated in 1943 to make the prison system more self-supporting, will be continued this year, including beans, peas, cabbage, sugarcane for syrup, and 300 acres in upland rice at Atmore. Irish potatoes will occupy 700 acres, part of the crop to be sold and part used to feed prisoners. Director Russell said that Irish potato planting machines are being used this year for the first time and that the acreage was reduced by 50 acres, in the belief that more uniform setting with machines will make possible as big a crop on 700 acres this years as was produced on 750 acres in 1944. Besides fresh vegetables for prison use, large amounts are canned and help hold down food costs.

STATEMENT ISSUED BY REPRESENTATIVE PETE JARMAN

The tragic and untimely passing of President Roosevelt, for whom the entire world mourns today, will of course cause the postponement of the celebration of Pan American Day, which was to have occurred in the House of Representatives tomorrow pursuant to the passage of a resolution recently introduced by me. While plans have not yet been formulated, it is my purpose to request the House to indulge in this celebration at an early date.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS IMPORTANT

Was your baby born between January 1, 1944, and February 28th of this year?

If so, Dr. E. M. Moore, your County Health Officer, urges you to be certain that it's birth has been properly recorded, if you have not received official notification from the State Health Department's Bureau of Vital Statistics that it has already been done.

"The success of our public health program depends to a great extent upon our knowing when and where births occur," he said. "This knowledge makes it possible for us to give the mothers and babies the assistance and advice to which they are entitled, such as the services of the well-baby clinics, post-natal care and preparation for later pregnancies. The county health departments decide which aspects of their long-range programs should receive particular attention, and there is danger that maternal and child health will receive less attention than they deserve unless we know how many births are actually occurring. It approximately 15 per cent of the births are not recorded, as is estimated Alabama as a whole, then it is clear that rurals will be allocated and personnel will be assigned to only 85 per cent instead of all those needing such care."

Dr. Moore explained that birth registration in rural areas is much less complete than in towns and cities. For this reason, he said, it is especially important that the birth registration campaign be intensified among the county's rural residents.

"As soon as a child is born, the mother should remind the attending physician, midwife or other attendant at birth to be sure to file a properly filled out birth certificate with the local registrar of vital statistics,' he said. "In order that this may be done, a name for the baby should be selected prior to its birth, or immediately afterward, so that it will not be necessary to delay the filling out of the certificate or obtain this information after the birth certificates has been filed. Parents receive pictures of the certificates stating that their babies' births have been registered within three months after registration occurs. So those who have received these pictures may be certain that their babies' births have been registered. Those who have not received them should inquire of their physicians, midwives or other birth attendants whether the certificates have been filed. If this has not been done, they should urge them to send in the certificates without delay."

Dr. Moore pointed out that the registration of his or her birth is a great advantage to the individual, because, he explained, "it establishes an official record of the essential facts of birth, such as age, parentage, American citizenship, etc., which information is available when proof of these facts is needed to enter school, obtain certain types of employment and engage in other forms of worthwhile activity."

"CASH ASSISTANCE" IS AVAILABLE TO FARMERS

Alabama farmers may earn and collect the AAA "cash assistance" in the following "soil-building" practices:

No. 1. Construction of standard terraces for which outlets are provided—80 cents per 100 linear feet.

No. 2 Application of superphosphate: (a) 18 per cent—63 cents per 100 pounds; (b) 19 per cent—67 cents per 100 pounds; (c) 20 per cent—70 cents per 100 pounds.

No. 3. Application of basic slag—35 cents per 100 pounds.

No. 4. Application of liming materials—(Ask for county rate).

No. 5. Establishing a satisfactory cover of kudzu—$6.00 per acre.

No. 6 Establishing a stand of lespedeza sericea for the prevention of water erosion—$6.00 per acre.

No. 7. Establishing a satisfactory cover of crotalaria artificially seeded in the spring of 1945—$1.50 per acre.

No. 8. Planting forest trees—$1.60 per 1,000 trees.

Winter legumes seeded in the fall of 1944 is an approved practice that has already been carried out and reported.

Crop Insurance Offers Excellent Opportunity

The new 1945 crop insurance program offers an excellent opportunity for Chilton County cotton growers to stabilize their financial operation and enjoy insurance protection similar to that enjoyed by other business men, is the opinion of Mr. M. R. Glasscock, County Agent.

"Putting it a little more simply," Mr. Glasscock said. "The grower who insures his crop will have cotton to sell no matter what happens—and only a cotton grower knows all the things that can happen to a cotton crop. Crop insurance can take a mightly lot of the risk and guess work out of cotton growing. The crop insurance program is worth full investigation by every cotton grower."

Insuring a cotton crop is just like insuring a barn against fire, the county agent said. The man who insures his barn isn't hoping—or even betting—that his barn will burn down. He just doesn't want to be caught short if it does.

Under the 1945 cotton crop insurance program, he pointed out, the grower can insure his crop for 50 per cent or 75 percent, whichever he wishes, of his average production. If the crop is sold before harvest, the insurance contract can be transferred to the new owner. An insurance contract can be assigned as collateral for a production loan, for instance, or can be assigned to any person for any purpose just as a life insurance policy. It thus constitutes a new source of credit and aids in sound financing.

MISSISSIPPI'S BIRTHPLACE

This state monument marks the site of the "Old Brick Church," scene of the First Mississippi Constitutional Convention and the first State Legislature's meetings. Under French, Spanish and English rule at various periods of its early history, Mississippi experienced all the growing pains of colonial development. Now it produces great quantities of cotton for U. S. armed forces. Money from War Bond sales helps the Government buy garments and other military equipment produced from that cotton. *U. S. Gold to Be Had in City's Streets for the Digging

Digging for gold in the street with penknives is not a sign of lunacy in Kalgoorlie, Western Australia. Prospectors walking through the main thoroughfare of Hannan street sometimes notice gleaming patches of gold in the pavements and stoop to chip out pieces with their knives.

The explanation given is that when, in 1899, the municipal council sought a suitable mixture of metal and concrete, they bought ore from the Golden Zone Mine at one shilling a ton. While the ore carried four pennyweights of gold to the ton, it was unprofitable to recover it, but now the tread of thousands of feet has worn the pavements till bits of gold in the ore have begun to show.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Greater facilities are now provided farmers for recapping rear tires on tractors and other rubber-shod farm equipment. B. F. Goodrich is active in this extended farm rubber conservation.

Industrial machinery and consumer durable goods, such as automobiles, refrigerators and the like, use the major portion of molded and extruded mechanical rubber goods made in the U. S.

The Belgian Congo is still providing natural rubber for the Allies' stockpile. Last year's output has been put at 3000 tons, compared with 2,400 tons in 1943.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived at Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to replace the town bell stolen by the Nazis, and in other ways to build confidence among the people. He wanted to start the fishermen out again and arranged with Lieut. Livingston, senior naval officer, to open the waters to their boats. He allowed the carts to enter the city with food and water, despite orders from General Marvin that the carts be kept out of the city. Capt. Purvis reported to headquarters the cart orders given by the Major, by sending off the delayed letter to headquarters.

CHAPTER X

At each meal there were also some idlers in the place, but they just came in to listen to the noon and six-thirty broadcasts from Rome.

On the day that Mayor Nasta came down from the hills, Major Joppolo and Captain Purvis had just finished their pasta and were talking about the stuffy Navy fellow, Livingston, when they heard an unusual noise out in the street. There were shouts of anger, and whistles.

But the noise outside grew, and seemed to be coming up the street. And soon several of the idlers who had been listening to the radio in the restaurant ran out. As the noise grew still louder the two women picked up handfuls of fruit and ran out, pursued by their guests. Then the owner of the place and his wife and son ran out with their mouths full of pasta and eggplant.

Finally Major Joppolo said: "Let's go see what it is." So he and Captain Purvis ran out too, with their napkins in their hands.

This is what they saw:

Up the center of the street a forlorn looking man walked. He was very short, and rather heavy-set. His clothes were dirty and torn. His shoes were covered with dust. His face was very sad, and he walked slowly, hanging his head. There was only one proud touch to his whole figure, and that was a pair of pince-nez spectacles balanced on his big nose.

Behind the man, keeping a safe distance as if there still might be some dynamite in him, a large crowd walked, shouting and whistling its derision. The derision was ten times louder than it would otherwise have been because this was the first time the people of Adano had ever been able to express their feelings toward this man. Even behind their own closed doors they had held their tongues about Mayor Nasta in the past, because he seemed to have ears in every house, and his eyes peeked in every window, and his punishments were sadistic.

But now they shouted what they thought.

"Fascist Pig," they shouted. This was what they shouted most.

But they also shouted: "The murderer always goes back to the scene of his crime!"

They also shouted: "Where is Mayor Nasta's whip now?"

Curiously the two women shouted, and there was a kind of pride in the way they shouted.

There was a priest in the crowd, and he shouted: "Blasphemer!"

There were some children in the crowd, and they ran along shouting: "Pig! Pig! Pig!"

The anger of the mob bordered on violence. When the unhappy Mayor got opposite the Albergo dei Pescatori one of the women raised her arm and threw a plum at him. It missed him and splashed in the street.

A boy of twelve threw a stone. Then several brickbats flew, and the shouts of long repressed hatred became shrieks of revenge.

Captain Purvis looked at Major Joppolo and Major Joppolo said: "We've got to put a stop to this."

Captain Purvis was not a subtle American, but he was a brave one. He ran out in the street between Mayor Nasta and the crowd. He held up his hand and shouted: "Stop! Stop," you ignorant fools."

Captain Purvis pulled his pistol out of his pocket. That was enough. The ones in front held back the others, and the mob halted in the street. Captain Purvis went back to the sidewalk.

Mayor Nasta, seeing that he was saved, ran over to his deliverers, and he stood in the gutter blubbering his thanks. "Americans! Oh, my friends. Thank you for saving me from the ungrateful people. I have served them for years and see how they behave. I am all alone, Americans. I have been in the hills all alone for days. No one would stay with me. All the others gave themselves up. I have thought everything over. I wish to help you if I can. . . ." And he rattled on, his voice going higher and higher.

Someone in the mob shouted: "Mister Major, if you help that man you are not our friend."

Major Joppolo acted quickly to save the situation. He walked into the street and held up his hand for silence; he was careful to make it his left hand, so that it would not be mistaken for a Fascist salute.

"Go home, people. I will take care of this man as he deserves. He is under arrest."

And the Major said quickly to Captain Purvis in English. "Arrest him, Purvis, show this gang that you're arresting him."

This was the kind of thing Captain Purvis enjoyed, and as he clapped his hand heavily on Mayor Nasta's shoulder he shouted: "I wish I understood Eyetalian. This is wonderful."

Purvis said: "Who is this little squirt, anyway? They sure hate him, don't they?"

Major Joppolo said: "He's the one who used to be Mayor."

"Oh, he is, is he? Well, according to what Borth says, they've got plenty of reason to hate him." And the Captain kicked Mayor Nasta in the seat of the pants simply because he didn't know the Italian for: "You're a little squirt."

Mayor Nasta whimpered in Italian: "What are you going to do with me? If you are going to kill me, please tell me first. Don't shoot me from behind."

What Major Joppolo did with Mayor Nasta was to take him up to his office. Everyone, even little Zito who had once worked for Mayor Nasta, even D'Arpa, the weasel-like vice mayor who had once worked with him, everyone made faces of disgust when they saw Mayor Nasta, and some made obscene remarks within his hearing.

When word passed around the Palazzo that Mayor Nasta was back, many people stuck their heads in the door at the end of the Major's office, which had once been the Mayor's office, to have a look at him in his disheveled condition, and to laugh at him to his face.

Major Joppolo said to Zito and Giuseppe: "I want to have a talk with Mayor Nasta alone. Go and tell the people in the other offices that I do not want to be disturbed, not even by a cracking open of that door. I do not even want to be disturbed by the brushing of ears on the keyhole."

"Yes, Mister Major," Zito said.

"No, Mister Major," Giuseppe said.

Major Joppolo sat at the desk and said brusquely: "Sit down."

Mayor Nasta sat in one of the chairs in front of the desk.

"Well, what is it that you wish?" Major Joppolo said.

Mayor Nasta brushed his hand along the wood of the desk pathetically, and he said: "It seems strange to be sitting on the wrong side of this desk."

Major Joppolo said: "It may seem stranger to sit on the wrong side of the bars of your municipal jail. What do you want?"

Mayor Nasta rearranged the pince-nez on his nose, but he did not look Major Joppolo in the eye as he said: "I just want a chance, Mister Major."

"You want a chance!" Major Joppolo spoke angrily. "To whom did you ever give a chance?"

"I have thought it over," Mayor Nasta said. "I have been all alone for days. It was awful at night. I have thought it over, Mister Major. I want to help if I can."

"How many years were you in office?"

"Nine, Mister Major."

"After nine years in office, you have thought it all over, have you? After nine years of graft and stealing and keeping these people down, you've thought it over, you want to help, do you?"

"You have other Fascists in office here. I saw the face of D'Arpa a minute ago. I saw Tagliavia who was my Maresciallo of Finance. I saw Gargano of the Carabinieri. If you could use these, why not Nasta, the Mayor?"

This hurt. "Who is this Mayor?"

And the former Mayor said: "Yes, Bellanca is honest. But surely you have something for Nasta to do? I would accept something less than Mayor." Nasta rubbed the wood of the desk wistfully. "There is not much left of the old Nasta," he said. "I would accept something less than Mayor."

Major Joppolo's eyes grew angry. He stood up abruptly. "Oh, you would, would you? Yes, I have something for you to do. You are to report every morning to Sergeant Borth of the American Army. You will find him in the Fascio. That is all you have to do each day. But see that you do it, Nasta, or you will be put in jail."

"You mean that Nasta has become a common probationer?"

"Oh, so Nasta is familiar with the practice of putting people on probation? That is very genteel of you, Nasta. I thought all your punishments were more ingenious than that."

"Please be generous with me," Nasta said. "Please give me some work to do."

"Generous? Nasta, what do you expect? For the crimes you have committed against the people of Adano, you deserve to be shot outright, without a trial. You certainly never would give a fair trial, unless it brought you some kind of profit. I am being more than generous. I am putting you on probation. See that you behave, you Fascist."

Mayor Nasta was obsequious now. "Yes, Mister Major," he said. "What did you say was the name of the American officer to whom I must report?"

"His name is Borth, and he is not an officer. He is a sergeant. You are not worth an officer, Nasta."

"Yes, Mister Major."

This is how it happened that Mayor Nasta reported once every morning to Sergeant Borth at the Fascio. Because four or five people followed the Mayor everywhere he went out of curiosity and hatred, there was a small audience on hand the next morning when he reported to Sergeant Borth for the first time. The audience enjoyed what it saw and heard, for this kind of situation was meat for Sergeant Borth, who thought the whole war was a joke.

The tattered Nasta stepped into one of the M.P. offices, rearranged his pince-nez, and said: "Where will I find the Sergeant Borth?"

"I am Borth."

"I am Nasta."

"Oho," roared Sergeant Borth. He stood up, rubbing his hands. "So you are the Mayor. I understand that you have come to Adano to repent your sins. Is that right, noble Mayor?"

"I was told that I was to report here each morning. I was to report, not be humiliated, Sergeant."

"You will call me Mister Sergeant."

Borth said sharply: "Listen, Nasta, I know more about you than you know about yourself. You be careful how you behave here. Now, answer my questions civilly. Is it correct that you came to Adano to repent your sins?"

Mayor Nasta was white with anger, but he said: "I suppose you might say so."

"Thank you," Borth said with exaggerated politeness. "In that case you will repent one sin each morning when you report to Sergeant Borth. Would you like to choose your own sins, or would you like Sergeant Borth to choose them for you?"

Mayor Nasta couldn't keep himself from snorting.

"I see," said Borth, with his overpoliteness, "you would like Borth to choose. Very well, let's see. This morning we will discuss the sin of your disgraceful running away from your post in the face of the American invasion. What is this sin called, Mayor Nasta?"

"What do you mean, what is it called?"

"You are at a loss for words? Very well, Borth will answer his own question. It is called the sin of cowardice."

Mayor Nasta snorted.

"No matter what side you were on, no matter if you were on the side of the crooks, it was a sin to run away, was it not, Mayor?"

Mayor Nasta rearranged his pince-nez with a trembling hand.

"Answer my question: did you or did you not give rifles to the Carabinieri and grenades to the Finance Guards, make them a beautiful speech about fighting to the last man, and then run to the hills?"

Mayor Nasta said with a trembling voice: "You tell me, clever Sergeant."

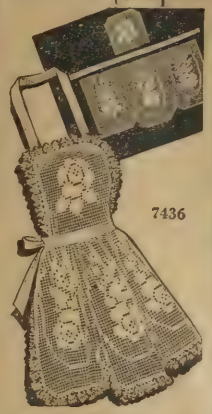
Sergeant Borth shouted: "Answer me, probationer."

Mayor Nasta said quietly: "I did, Sergeant."

"Mister Sergeant!"

"I did, Mister Sergeant."

"Are you sorry for this disgraceful sin, Nasta?"



Mayor Nasta could hear the people snickering behind him.

He said meekly: "I am, Mister Sergeant."

Household Hints

Turn the mattress every week, first from end to end, next from side to side to get maximum wear and comfort from it.

Dental floss is fine for mending elastic, because it wears so long. Take care in mending that tiny rubber threads are not damaged. Sew between them.

When painting woodwork, coat the door knobs, locks, etc., with vaseline, so that the paint can be easily wiped off if it splashes on these surfaces.

Daddy's worn-out shirts can be made over into cunning blouses, dresses or suits for the one-year-old, provided a little trimming and imagination are used.

An easy way to give ferns their weekly watering is to place them in the bathtub, draw shower curtain and turn on the shower, adjusting spray until it is about room temperature.

To remove rust from nickel, grease well with any kind of lubricant, let stand for a few minutes, then rub with cloth soaked in ammonia. Rinse with water and polish.

Equal parts of salt, flour, and vinegar make an effective paste to clean brass, copper, or pewter. Apply the paste, let stand for an hour, rub off, wash with water, and then polish.

You can clean glazed chintz by spreading it on a flat surface and sponging quickly with lukewarm water. Press on the wrong side with a warm iron or on the right side using a slightly dampened pressing cloth.

How Men Love These Raised Doughnuts!

DOUGHNUTS

1 cake Fleischmann's Yeast
1 tablespoon sugar
1¼ cups milk, scalded and cooled
4½ cups sifted flour
1 egg, well beaten
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg

Dissolve Fleischmann's Yeast and 1 tablespoon sugar in lukewarm milk. Add 1¼ cups flour and beat well. Cover and let rise in warm place, free from draft, about 1 hour, until bubbles burst on top. Cream butter or margarine and sugar. Add salt, egg and nutmeg. Add to yeast mixture. Add remaining flour to make moderately soft dough. Knead lightly, then place in well-greased bowl. Cover and let rise 1½ hours. When light, turn out on floured board and roll ¼ inch thick. Cut with doughnut cutter (3-inch). Place on floured board, cover with cloth and let rise about 1 hour. Fry in deep fat, hot enough to brown 1-inch cube of bread in 60 seconds, or 375° F. Fry on both sides, turning only once. Drain, cool and roll in powdered sugar. Makes 3 dozen.

MARY CLYDE MIMS MAKES EXCELLENT RECORD IN MUSIC

Mary Clyde, the talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Mims, of Clanton, has made a wonderful record of advancement in her three years of music study. She began playing for church services after she had taken only eight lessons with Mrs. J. J. Mims. Afterwards she studied with Mrs. Raymond Mims for only a few months at which time Mrs. Mims disbanded her music class to teach English in The Chilton County High School.

During this time she studied with Mrs. Erle Ellis for about a year except the month of June when she went to Dallas, Texas, where she had ten lessons with Mrs. Frank Stamps. This time spent in Dallas proved to be a great inspiration for Mary Clyde as she has always had a desire to go there for another session.

The hard knock come to all of us and Mary Clyde had hers in 1943 when there was no music teacher to be had anywhere for several months. Finally she had the privilege to study with Mrs. Percy Pitts for a short time.

The situation became better in the Fall of 1944 when C.C.H.S. employed Mrs. Raymond Mims to teach music and do Glee Club work. Mrs. Mims is using Mary Clyde as accompanist in much of her Glee Club work, and this also has been a great help and encouragement to her.

Mary Clyde's determination is to major in music and the help Mrs. Mims and others are giving her is highly appreciated by her parents and friends.

Dorothy, a younger sister of Mary Clyde's, is also musically inclined, and is making wonderful progress with both her piano and Glee Club work under the supervision of Mrs. Mims.

Twenty-five thousand tons of reclaimed truck parts were shipped to ordinance repair shops in one month by a salvage depot in the Mediterranean Theatre of Operations, and more than 45,000 used tires were salvaged by the depot.

Jarman Sponsors Pan-American Day Celebration

Washington (Special)—Many have doubtless either wondered why the House of Representatives, which meets on Saturday on only rare occasions, met on Saturday, April 14th, or believed it to be a special meeting resulting from President Roosevelt's death on April 12th.

The fact is that some weeks ago the House passed a resolution introduced by Representative Jarman (D) of Alabama, setting aside April 14th, which is Pan American Day for the celebration of that day by the House, and stipulation that no other business except that germane to such an occasion occur. When this body adjourns each day, it does not simply adjourn, but the Speaker announces that it adjourns until a specific hour and date. Therefore, it is always necessary under the rules of the House to meet as previously ordered regardless of any unusual intervening occurrence. Consequently, the House having adjourned on April 12th, shortly before the President's death, until April 14th, for the purpose of celebrating this occasion, it was necessary for it to meet on that date even though this celebration was not referred to and no business or remarks whatever ocurred during the five minute session except those necessary to the passage of a resolution of regret and sympathy.

On Wednesday Representative Jarman introduced a similar resolution designating Tuesday, April 24th, for the postponed celebration of Pan-American Day, at which time no other business or remarks will occur.

LOUISIANA'S CAPITOL

The tallest building in the South, Louisiana's capitol at Baton Rouge—34 stories, 450 feet in height—stands on the campus of the old State University. It supersedes the modest structure completed in 1849 and equipped with furnishings from Europe that had been dispatched to Emperor Maximillian of Mexico but arrived after his death. The present capitol proclaims Louisiana's faith in its opportunities for future generations in industry and agriculture. Thousands of Louisiana's sons are fighting to preserve those opportunities, and War Bonds supply them munitions. U. S. Treasury Department

ST. LOUIS CATHEDRAL

When fire swept the city of New Orleans in 1788, Don Andrea Almonaster, a truly great philanthropist, saw to it that some of the city's finest buildings arose from the ashes of their historic predecessors — the Cabildo, the Presbytere and the St. Louis Cathedral. Liberty creates and encourages such men. It's the spirit that inspires Americans to buy War Bonds to equip their service men who fight all enemies of individual freedom. America will always have Almonasters to give their fellowmen a lift in dark hours if enough War Bonds are purchased and held to keep those service men in munitions. U. S. Treasury Department

•FOR SHAME, AMERICA•

By B. F. AUSTIN, M. D., State Health Officer

"What do you mean? 'For shame, America'," says Joe Smith. "Why this is the greatest country in the world!" Sure it's a great country, Joe Smith, but let's don't kid ourselves. The day we begin to believe we're perfect is the day we class ourselves with the maniac dictators who rave about a super-race.

So we say again, let's don't kid ourselves. We're a great nation, and we're on our way to being greater. But a great nation should be a healthy nation.

"Well, so what," says Joe Smith, "aren't we a healthy nation? Aren't our fighting men the fittest in the world? Haven't we got the best doctors and the best medical equipment in the world?"

Maybe so, Joe Smith, but there's one count on which we can't give our country a clean bill of health. We mean venereal disease. Did you ever stop to think about that, Joe? Did you ever stop to think that a big, powerful nation like ours is still ridden by diseases that cripple and kill and maim hundreds of thousands of Americans each year?

And why? Is it because we haven't the means of diagnosing these diseases? Is it because we haven't the drugs to cure them? Is it because we haven't the laws to fight them? No! Our medical men have the means of diagnosing and curing venereal diseases. We have the laws to control venereal disease.

Then why is venereal disease still prevalent in our country? Why do we look at other countries, Sweden, where the syphilis rate has been reduced to seven in every 100,000; Denmark, where the rate is 20 in every 100,000; and say for shame America? Because in the United States it is estimated that there are 796 cases of syphilis to every 100,000 people.

Maybe it's because you, Joe Smith, average American citizen, haven't done your part to help your country to get rid of these diseases. What do you know about the venereal disease problem? What do you know about what you can do to help? Get busy, Joe Smith. It's time to find out. It's time to help lift this heavy burden from America.

CATAMOUNT TAVERN

The Second Continental Congress met at Philadelphia on May 10, 1775. That day Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain boys demanded the surrender of Fort Ticonderoga, N. Y. They were not going to let any overseas dictators tax or rule them, and neither are Americans today. That is one reason why we buy War Bonds. The preparations for that drive against the Lake Champlain stronghold were made secretly at a night meeting at little old Catamount Tavern at Bennington, Vt. The catamount monument shown above now stands on the site. U. S. Treasury Department

To keep lemons from wilting and shrinking it is a good idea to put them in a covered jar in the refrigerator.

Workers Council Methodist Church Will Meet Monday

All members of the workers council of the Methodist Church School and everyone interested in Church School are invited to attend the regular worker's council at the Methodist Church on Monday May 7. The meeting will be held in the Ladies parlor at 8 o'clock.

PHILATHEA

The regular monthly meeting of the Philathea Class of the Methodist Church School was held at the ome oi Mrs Sophia Jones, with Mrs. Herbert Newell and Mrs Walter Haywood as co-hostesses.

The meeting opened by singing God Bless America, Mrs Jones had the Devotional in charge.

After a brief business meeting, Mrs Joe Mullins, the chairman of the entertainment committee, announced that everyone present was a school child again. As pupils of her school, the class played games and took part in contests. The most interesting contest was the fashioning of hats out of material furnished by the entertainment committee. The results were unique. Mrs Warr and Mrs Connell won first prize on their hat, which was useful in more ways than one. Mrs Wade and Mrs Jones took second prize.

At the conclusion of the games the hostesses served sandwiches, cookies, and punch to 15 members and visitors.

MOTION PICTURES

"A Heritage We Guard" is the title of a sound motion picture which has been booked for several showings in Chilton County. The picture shows American wild life in its native haunts — buffalo, deer, fur bearing animals, birds, snakes, fish, forests, mountains and streams. The Farmers Union Cooperative, and the United Congregational Church are sponsoring the picture in the following places:

Pleasant Grove, Thursday May 10.
Mt. Springs, Friday May 11.
Mt. Pleasant School, Sat. May 12.
Thorsby, Sunday May 13.
Eastview, Monday May 14.

J. D. YEARGAN PROVES HIS POINT

When J. D. Yeargan of the Enterprise Community tells you that hail fell at his farm as big as goose eggs—he can prove it. Mr. Yeargan brought two small chinaberry trees to the News office Tuesday that the hail had worked on. They were cut to pieces. The hail was so large and hit with such force that large hunks of wood was cut out of the small trees. The leaves and branches had been completely stripped off, of course.

Mr. Yeargan said it also ruined his oat crop and all of his tomatoes were beaten to pieces. His corn, he thinks, might come back.

Incidently, he says that the corrigated tin roof on his home looked like someone had gone all over it with a hammer, beating on it, Boy, that was hail.

DRIVE TO AID CHILDREN'S CLINIC STARTS

Chairman I. S. Levine announced Tuesday that the drive in Chilton County to aid crippled children would start next Monday morning, May 7th.

Officials of the Drive this year include I. S. Levine, chairman; Bob Oglesby, co-chairman; Judge Victor Heard, secretary and Grady Heflin, treasurer.

According to plans made by the committee this week the campaign will be over before it is well started. Beat chairmen will be named as in the War Bond drives and each Beat chairman will have his crew out bright and early Monday. Before the day is over the committee wants every citizen who is contacted to aid in raising the money needed so badly for the good of the crippled children in this county, of which there are 206.

Last year $3,754.00 was spent in Chilton County in Crippled Childrens work. Of this amount only about $500.00 was raised in the county. The balance was paid by the state and government agencies.

This year the quota has been set at $1,000.00. It can be subscribed the first day. Be ready when you are called upon. There is no better way to help those who cannot always help themselves than to make a substantial donation to the Crippled Children.

Bonds Over America

KANSAS WOMEN

Following the signing of the treaty with the Delaware and Shawnee Indians in 1854, settlers poured into Kansas. Women and children accompanied the men on steamboats, on horseback, in prairie schooners and wagons. They went to make it a home territory and courageously stayed to make permanent homes, despite the bloody years of border warfare over the slavery issue. They were strong, purposeful women who foresaw the opportunity for prosperity and good homes for future generations. Kansas has a monument to them on the capitol grounds at Topeka. Their grandsons battle for an unspoiled future for all the Nation and War Bond funds equip them.

BAPTISMAL FONT DEDICATED AT METHODIST CHURCH

The Baptismal Font given by Mrs. V. J. Elmore, in memory of her late husband, Virgil Jackson Elmore, was dedicated at impressive ceremonies at the Methodist Church Sunday morning.

Christened at this ceremony were Mary Kate Tucker, daughter of T-5 Geo. Tucker and Mrs Tucker; Myra Lynn Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Williams. The little girls were dressed in all white and a white carnation was used for the christening which was administered by Rev. E. A. Childs, former pastor of the church. The altar was banked with standards of white gladiolus and carnations. The choir presented special music and Mrs. Raymond Mims sang, "Open My Eyes That I May See," requested by Mrs. Elmore.

Rev. E. A. Childs preached at this service.

Y. W. A. MEETS WITH JOYCE KING

The Y. W. A. of the First Baptist Church of Clanton met last Monday night with Joyce King. The main subject of the meeting was "Horizons of History."

The introduction was given by Doris Bossenger. The rest of the program was given as follows: "Landing of the Pilgrims," by Joyce King; "The New England persecutions", by Blanch Glenn; "The Pioneer Missionary", by Norma Davenport: "The "Founding of Your Church", by Miss Marguerite Perry (in this she gave the history of the First Baptist Church of Clanton up until what it is today which was very interesting) and "Conclusion" by Murrel Armstrong. The meeting was closed by a scripture reading by Dalene King.

There will be a special meeting next Monday, May 7 at 7:30 with Dalene King. All members are urged to attend as this is a very important meeting.—Alene Johnson, Reporter.

Southwide Young Peoples Leader To Address Meeting

Every good gift should be shared. Realizing what a special privilege will be ours in having Miss Juliette Mather as guest speaker at the First Baptist Church of Clanton on Tuesday, May 8, at 8 p. m. we urge all friends in the community and in Unity and Chilton Associations to attend this open meeting.

Miss Mather has been Young Peoples Secretary of the W. M. U. of the South for many rich and fruitful years. She is editor-in-chief of the young peoples missionary magazine, "World Comrades" and "The Window of Y. W. A.", as well as the author of many outstanding books on W. M. U. work. One of her greatest contributions has been as director of the Y. W. A. Camp at Ridgecrest each summer.

May 8th will become a red-letter day for everyone within reach of Clanton who attends this meeting.

We extend a most cordial welcome to all young people and their parents.

Chilton County Women Organize

On Wednesday afternoon, April 25, several women of Chilton County who are graduates of college on the approved list of the American Association of University Women met in the Home Economics building of CCHS to organize a local branch of AAUW. The initial step was the election of temporary officers as follows: Miss Elsie Shurter, chairman; Mrs. Sarah Green Palmer, co-chairman; and Miss Elizabeth B. Barton, secretary. At present these officers have received the names of forty women of Chilton County who are eligible for membership in the local branch. Within a few days letters of invitation will be mailed to those whose names have been received. Other women who desire to affiliate with the organization may communicate with the officers named above to ascertain the requirements of membership.

MOTHER OF EIGHT SONS IN ARMED FORCES in World War II, Mrs. Charity Mize Deason, of Beat 4, Chilton County, is shown at home with her pictures and memories. One of her sons has been killed in action, two have been wounded. With undaunted spirit she and her husband are doing their best on their 45-acre farm. "My grandfather was killed in the old war," Mrs. Deason said. "My grandmother carried on then. We all must now. We cannot look for happy endings from wars," she added, summing up the lesson women have learned from war through the ages. Mrs. Deason has been nominated by the American Legion, and will receive citation from American War Mothers, as Alabama's "War Mother of 1945." (State Newsphoto.)

CCC TO POOL 1943 CROP LOAN COTTON

The War Food Administration has announced that all 1943-crop cotton still under loan on August 1, 1945, will be pooled for producers' account by the Commodity Credit Corporation Producers meanwhile may repay outstanding 1943-crop loans and redeem their cotton under the terms of the 1943 cotton crop loan program.

WFA stated: All of the 1943-crop loan cotton which is not redeemed by August 1, 1945, will be placed in a pool, as provided in the loan agreement, and sold in an orderly manner by the Commodity Credit Corporation. On final liquidation of all cotton in the pool, the net proceeds— if any after deduction of all advances and accrued costs, including storage, insurance and handling charges — will be distributed among producers whose cotton has been placed in the pool in proportion to their interest. No payment will be made to the producers at the time the cotton is placed in the pool, and after August 1, 1945 individual producers will not be entitled to order the sale of the particular cotton which they placed in the pool.

The average 1943 loan rate for 15-16 inch Middling cotton, net weight was 20.06 cents per pound.

Sparks Says States Surplus Should Pay Debts

Convening for its 1945 session Tuesday, the legislature received Governor Chauncey Sparks' message at its opening session. Highlights of the Governor's message included:

Declared that the State surplus should be used for paying debts, not for buildings, not for operating costs. Asked creation of a building commission that the general surplus be set aside as a building fund, and that $12[illegible] from the educational trust fund surplus [illegible] for use by the commission for school buildings exclusively.

Recommended consideration of a constitutional amendment removing limitations on use of income tax [illegible] the additional income tax surtax as of October 1, 1945, be used [illegible] and Relief, [illegible] after that, placing income tax revenue in the general fund, from which it could be appropriated to boost education, welfare and other services; continuation of exemptions from the income tax.

Recommended consideration of repeal of cumulative feature of poll tax law, and "either strenghtening or completely repealing our absentee voting law." Voiced belief that cumulative feature of poll tax, which requires delinquents to pay for back years, keeps many good people from voting. On absentee voting: "We know the absentee ballot has been the avenue of much corruption and fraud. I do not think any agency which induces such should be permitted, even though it may deny to a few of our people the right to vote on election day." Recommended, however, "easier facilities" for soldier voting.

Called for creation of a State Veterans Assistance Department, declaring that Alabama must be prepared to give the returning veteran service.

Suggested that the legislature give the Governor authority to delegate to existing agencies the "carrying out any part of necessary reconversion and readjustment activities" after demobilization.

Favored a State wage-hour law to end discrimination against thousands of workers not covered by Federal law: "If it were not for the existence of a Federal wage and hour law, I would not recommend a wage and be no excuse for making fish of one hour law for Alabama. But there can and fowl of the other."

Took note of the Department of Education request for increased appropriations, and expressed [illegible] "some way will be [illegible] to meet it, and also to provide a [illegible] gram" of public welfare [illegible] tention to what he [illegible] basic" recommendations [illegible] ational Survey Commission [illegible] Recommended [illegible] Home for Confederate [illegible] Also recommended [illegible] tion: Erection of a [illegible] for exhibition of livestock, farm [illegible] est, mineral and manufactured products. YWA Banquet Honoring Mothers Of Service Men

May 6-11 is Young Woman's Auxiliary Focus Week all over the South land.

The Y. W. A. of the First Baptist Church of Clanton is planning a special feature in the observance of their Focus Week, by inviting the mothers of men and women in the service of their country to a banquet May 8, at 7 p. m.

A great deal of pleasure and enthusiasm is being demonstrated by the young women as they plan to honor the mothers whose sons and daughters are fighting against oppression and tyranny.

SPECIAL CAMPAIGN BULLETIN

The following letter received by the State Commander from Dr. Walter F. Scott should make us very proud and should also serve as impetus to go over the top in our April Campaign. I think that we should make every effort to deserve the praise that Dr. Scott has given us:

"My dear Mrs. Meade:

I want you to know that the Medical profession of Alabama is in thorough accord with the aims and efforts of the Women's Field Army for prevention of cancer.

Through me, the Alabama State Medical Association, expresses its gratitude and thanks. Without you and your associates, the Medical profession could do little for early malignancies. You are the ones who are making the people of Alabama cancer conscious, thereby causing many early cases to apply for examination and treatment.

I was in Sylacauga a few weeks ago and want to congratulate you on the success of your new venture there the first of its kind in this country. "It is grand work you are doing.

Sincerely yours,

WALTER F. SCOTT, M. D.

Canning Is Food Insurance for Winter
(See Recipes Below)

Early Canning

Strawberries and rhubarb, green peas and asparagus are all flaunting their gay colors before our eyes and begging to be eaten, either now or later.

One of the most basic rules in canning is that fruit and vegetables should be canned at the peak of the season to be their best. If you want a good product, you will have to put up a good food is another way of putting this rule across.

Canning at best does not improve the food, it simply preserves it for future use. Unless strawberries are sweet and bright in color, they will not become so in the jars. The same is true of everything else which we put up.

Less canning sugar will presumably be alloted this year than previously, and it would be well to decide just how much of what you are going to put up before you start in using sugar. It will have to be strictly budgeted if it is to reach over all the winter's needs.

Those of you who have canned while sugar has been rationed know that it is possible to can with a great deal less sugar if you will put the fruit up not quite so sweet. Most of us can do with less sugar as long as we have nice looking jars of fruit.

One of the "musts" on your canning list this year should be several jars of jams, jellies and preserves to spread on bread next winter if butter supplies are low. The family will greet these fruit concoctions with cheers:

Strawberry Marmalade.
(Makes 12 6-ounce glasses)

2 oranges
2 lemons
¼ cup water
¼ teaspoon soda
1 quart strawberries
7 cups sugar
½ bottle fruit pectin

Remove peels from oranges and lemons; cut off white membrane. Force peels through food chopper. Add water and soda. Cover and simmer for 10 minutes. Add orange and lemon pulp and juice. Simmer for 20 minutes. Add crushed strawberries. Measure 4 cups prepared fruit; add sugar. Bring to boiling and boil 5 minutes. Remove from heat; stir in fruit pectin. Let stand 5 minutes; skim; seal in hot, sterilized glasses.

Currant Jelly.
(Makes 4 to 5 small glasses)

1 quart currants
¼ cup water
Sugar

Wash and pick over currants but do not remove stems. Mash a few in the bottom of a preserving kettle and continue until all berries are used. Add water, cover and heat slowly. When fruit is thoroughly heated, put into a jelly bag or in several thicknesses of cheese cloth and drain off juice. Measure 4 cups juice, bring to boiling point and boil 5 minutes. Add 3 cups of sugar and boil 3 minutes, or until jelly sheets off a spoon. Pour into several hot sterilized glasses, cover with paraffin and store.

Strawberry and Rhubarb Jam.
(Makes 6 to 8 Glasses)

2 cups cooked pink rhubarb
3 cups strawberries
4 cups sugar

Use tender red rhubarb, trim off hard ends, wash without skinning, cut into small pieces. Mix fruit and sugar, let stand several hours. Cook gently in preserving kettle until thick and clear. Pour into hot sterile glasses and paraffin at once.

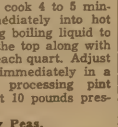
For canning spring's first fruits, use the directions given in these recipes to save color, food value and quality.

Canning Strawberries.

Use only fresh, ripe, firm and sound berries. Wash and stem. To each quart of berries add 1 cup sugar. Place in a porcelain enameled kettle (to prevent the berries from turning dark), let stand until juice flows. Cook slowly to the boiling point, then rapidly for 3 to 4 minutes, then cover kettle and let stand overnight. Drain berries and pack into hot sterile jars. Heat syrup until it boils, pour immediately over fruit to within one-half inch of the top of the jar. Adjust cover and process in hot water bath 8 minutes or in pressure cooker 5 minutes under 5 pounds pressure. Remove jars, let cool and store.

This is an excellent, if unorthodox method for canning rhubarb. It is prepared by baking the fruit and then canning:

Canning Rhubarb.



Wash tender, rosy rhubarb and cut into ½-inch pieces with a sharp knife. Measure the rhubarb and place it in a baking dish and add ¾ as much sugar by measure as rhubarb. Cover and bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven 30 to 35 minutes until rhubarb is tender, but whole. Pack into hot sterile jars immediately after removing from oven and process 10 minutes in a boiling water bath or 5 minutes at 5 pounds pressure in pressure cooker.

Canning Asparagus.

Wash young, tender asparagus and remove tough ends. Cut to fit into jar or in ½-inch lengths. Tie into small bundles and place in a saucepan. Add a small amount of boiling water and cook 4 to 5 minutes. Place immediately into hot sterile jars, adding boiling liquid to within ½ inch of the top along with 1 teaspoon salt to each quart. Adjust cap and process immediately in a pressure cooker, processing pint jars 35 minutes at 10 pounds pressure.

Canning Peas.

Select tender, even-sized green peas. Shell and wash. Place in saucepan with boiling water to cover. Heat to boiling. Pack as hot as possible into sterile jars. Add 1 teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon sugar to each jar. Process in the pressure cooker 50 minutes at 10 pounds.

Vitamin Value and Retention.

The more quickly you work once the fruits and vegetables are collected, the better will they retain their nutritive qualities. Everything should be in readiness so there is no time lost going from step to step.

If jars are stored in a cool, dark place there is a better chance of their keeping their vitamins and minerals.

THE latest war-caused shortage to plague Hollywood movie-makers is one of swords. With about a dozen swashbuckling dramas in various stages of completion around town, Warner Bros. faces the likelihood of having to call on armorers in other parts of the country before the dueling scenes in the Errol Flynn opus, "The Adventures of Don Juan," can be staged. Modern swords won't do; these fights took place before 1786.

Only one girl star under contract to David O. Selznick has not won the Academy award, and he's predicting that she'll get her Oscar next year. She's Dorothy McGuire; "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn" and "The Enchanted Cottage" are the pictures on which her claim will be based. The Selznick winners, who've taken four awards in the last six years, are Ingrid Bergman, Jennifer Jones, Joan Fontaine and Vivien Leigh. Kathleen Norris Says:
The Women We Need

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"When Pete was five years old he was killed by a car driven across the sidewalk."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"MY WIFE is so darned cheerful," writes a man from Butte, Mont., "that you can't help loving her!"

It seems to me that no sweeter or more sincere tribute was ever paid a woman. There was a soundness and fineness about this man's letter that struck a heartening note in these days of broken homes and easy divorces.

"We've had 14 years of joys and sorrows," his letter goes on, "and when the smoke blows over, just one person is carrying on, sensibly and quietly and bravely, and that's Molly. When we were married I was making $200 a month, and three years later, with a second baby coming, I was laid up with muscular rheumatism for almost a year. Molly carried on, had her baby, worked, borrowed, managed somehow—and always was cheerful!

"Financially we got straightened out again, paid bills, began to buy a home, and our third child, our first boy, was born. Those were good years. But when Pete was five years old, he was killed by a car driven straight across the sidewalk and into the garden where he was playing with his sisters. Molly carried on. Our third girl was born a few months later.

"Then came the war, and the importing firm for which I worked went to the wall; no job, no savings, and my mother, widowed and an invalid, came to live with us. We rented our house, moved into town, shortened sail everywhere. This was before the big defense plants and the big salaries got started.

'Never Failed Us Once.'

"The joy and hope Molly put into our lives then will never be forgotten by me. She never failed us once. Her life had been shattered; motherhood had brought her anguish, I had contributed months of sickness, helplessness, unemployment. But wherever she was, the little girls were laughing, and she was laughing with them; hospitality wasn't ended, nor good home meals, home fires, home talk. Her affectionate appreciation of my mother's help—for mother, with mending and watching the children, did all she could, made my mother love her like a true daughter.

"This is my tribute to the most gallant wife any man ever had. We have no money troubles now, and we have three lovely little girls to go on into better times with us. But whatever is ahead, I can never be afraid while this woman is beside me."

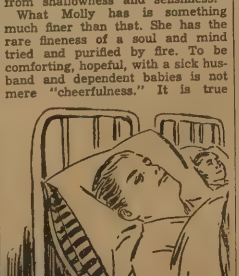
Could a letter be pleasanter reading? I don't know how. But about one thing you are wrong, Walter. This is not mere "Cheerfulness." Cheerfulness is a more or less natural quality; it can come from perfect health, from youthful optimism and high spirits, even from shallowness and selfishness.

What Molly has is something much finer than that. She has the rare fineness of a soul and mind tried and purified by fire. To be comforting, hopeful, with a sick husband and dependent babies is not mere "cheerfulness." It is true saintliness. Cheerfulness will not carry a woman over the dark abyss that opens before her feet when an only son is torn from her by the cruel carelessness of an irresponsible driver. Cheerfulness does not face illness, weariness, doubt, anxiety and change with a head held high and colors flying.

'Others Come First.'

With Molly, fundamentally, and first of all, comes thought for others. She will not let them see that she is hurt. Nobody must feel any worse because Molly is stricken. Selfish grief will not bring little Pete back; and if the others see her serene and busy, interested in their welfare, their interests, just as she always was, it will go far to make life seem good to them again.



We are going to need many women like this in the years immediately ahead of us. Women will look at the conditions of their lives and say to themselves; "this is just what I have said I couldn't bear—and here it is." Women will find the men who come back from war are almost strangers; women must care for a crippled husband or son, a blind husband or son, all the rest of their lives. Women who have been financially independent, will find now that they must go back to the status of housekeeper, or else sacrifice marriage itself. Women must meet every mental and psychopathic problem in those they love; depression, despair, distaste for work of any kind, cynicism as regards the future, bitter disillusionment.

Brace your soul for this postwar ordeal. It won't last; things do adjust themselves; conditions that seem insufferable have a way of smoothing out. Normal home life is a great tonic for bruised nerves and spirits, and even the blind—once the first shock is over, are not necessarily unhappy people.

One woman like Molly in every home would solve the whole world's problem in the approaching days of reconstruction. Be that woman in your household.

Blocking Hand-Knit Garments.

To "block" a new or newly-washed hand-knit garment, here is an easy method. Sprinkle two heavy bath towels slightly and spread the garment between them, pulling to desired measurements and pinning to shape. (Before washing it is handy to lay garment on paper or cloth and draw outline to use in re-shaping.) Cover with a board or other firm, flat surface. Weight this down and leave until the garment is dry. A light steam-pressing, without washing, also gives a finished look.

I was laid up for a year. . . .

'BEYOND CALL OF DUTY'

We seldom read about the wives and mothers who are quietly doing their part without fanfare, in good times and bad, in happiness and in sorrow. The selfish, the unfaithful, the undutiful wives get in the news, but the great majority, who are doing all that can be expected of them, seldom get a line of commendation.

Then there are some women whose courage, energy and unalterable cheerfulness is so extraordinary, that they seem almost to be superhuman. They are daily giving the best that is in them—and far more than anyone has a right to demand.

Such a wife is described in this article—one who carried on in poverty and sorrow with a bouyant heart. On the other hand, she was not changed by a touch of prosperity—she did not ask for luxuries to compensate for her endurance of difficulties.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The contented cow will be more so after the war, when B. F. Goodrich research men expect low-cost rubber will make possible rubber mattress or floor covering for stables.

War-born synthetic represented 80 per cent of the nation's rubber consumption in 1944, reports John L. Collyer, President of The B. F. Goodrich Company. In 1941 man-made rubber was less than one per cent of our consumption.

The destruction of some 5,000 tires a day on the American battlefronts is one understandable reason for subordination of civilian tire needs to those of the military.

Constipation is the cause of Much Suffering

Constipation may cause no symptoms for a long time, but unless corrected will finally impair the health. Symptoms associated with advancing constipation are loss of appetite, heavily coated tongue, tired feeling and mental depression. Headache, dizziness, anemia, and skin disturbances such as acne, are commonly experienced. In severe cases, neuralgia and joint pains occur. Indigestion, with gas formation and colic, and piles and fissures frequently add to the discomforts of severe chronic cases.

No matter how many other medicines you may have tried for constipation, we urge you to try B-L PREPARATION, with the understanding that B-L PREPARATION must bring you satisfactory results or your money back. Caution: Use only as directed.—Adv.

THE HEBREW MONARCHY AT ITS HEIGHT

LESSON TEXT—I Kings 9:1-7, 26; 10:26-28; 11:4, 11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33:12.

Keeping up with the neighbors is not always a desirable thing, but both men and nations do it. When the last judge, Samuel, had become old, Israel began to demand a king like the nations round about them.

Although the rejection of His direct rule over them through His chosen men was a sad development, God permitted them to choose a king. Saul, their first king, was evidently selected for his appearance and his physical superiority. He began well, in dependence upon God, but came to a tragic end because of sin.

David, who followed Saul, had his failings, but was essentially a man after God's own heart. He wanted to build a temple for God, but because he was a man of war, God decreed that his son, Solomon, who succeeded him, was to build it.

With the reign of Solomon, and especially with the building of the temple, the monarchy in Israel reached its highest development—only, to go down to disaster.

Our lesson opens after the remarkably fine prayer with which Solomon dedicated the temple.

I. Dedication Accepted (9:1-3).

God was pleased with Solomon's intelligent and spiritual prayer and the act of dedication, and He hallowed the house of the Lord by putting His name on it and assuring them of His continual presence.

It is a delightful thing that God is willing to accept at the hands of a man the dedication of either himself or his possessions for God's glory. The Lord is Maker of heaven and earth and surely has no need of what we have. And yet He does have need of it, and is ready to use it as we present it to Him.

Our act of dedication results in His act of acceptance and consecration of our talents, our time, our money, or our goods for His glorious service.

But God expects His people to continue in devotion to Him if they are to have His continued presence and blessing.

II. Consecration Expected (9:4-7).

The throne of David was to remain in the lineage of Solomon as long as he and the people of Israel walked uprightly before God. He expects obedience to His commandments, and apart from it He cannot give His blessing.

Note the faithfulness of God. No man would ever have introduced such a note of solemn portent and of warning into an occasion which seemed all gladness and light. Prosperity was at its height. The king was in favor with both God and man. Into that picture of success and grandeur God paints with bold strokes a great and striking "IF."

It is presumption to think that we can coast along on past attainments or former piety. If we are to be used and blessed of God tomorrow and the day after, we must look to our consecration to Him and our obedience to His will.

III. Possessions Glorified (9:26; 10:26-28).

We read in 10:23 that "King Solomon exceeded all kings of the earth in riches and wisdom." He had reached the pinnacle. The Chinese have a proverb, "The man who stands on the pinnacle has nowhere to step but off."

It need not have been a snare for Solomon to be rich if he had maintained his simple faith in God, but the temptations brought in by heathen wives whom he foolishly married, coupled with the deceitfulness of riches (Matt. 13:22), soon led him into the downward path.

The almost unbelievable riches of Solomon could have been used for the glory of God, but instead they were an end in themselves.

When money takes the ruling hand in a man's life, he loses out spiritually. His life becomes an empty farce; his soul can be satisfied with only more and more gold.

Solomon was soon led into the folly of turning to the worship of heathen gods. Little wonder that we find:

IV. Judgment Decreed (11:4, 11).

It would seem that a man who knows the Lord should grow in grace and become even more intimate with God as he grows old. One might expect that the passing of years should mellow and sweeten life. But sad to say, it is often not the case.

"When Solomon was old," he went after false gods. How tragic! Little wonder that one of the saintliest men this writer ever knew prayed constantly as he went on into his eighties, "Lord, keep me from ever becoming a wicked old man." Other old men and women (yes, and all of us) could well pray the same prayer.

So it became necessary for God to wrest the kingdom out of the hands of the great Solomon, and Israel goes on to its history of a people divided, of disobedience to God, and of ultimate judgment. Of that we shall see more in the weeks just ahead.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived at Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. It was the hope of the Major to build confidence and replace the town bell stolen by the Nazis. He arranged with the navy to permit the fishermen to return to the waters. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Major Joppolo recalled the order to permit food and water to enter the town. Nasta, former mayor of Adano, returned from hiding, but was placed under arrest by the Major to save him from an organized mob. He was ordered to report daily and repent his sins.

CHAPTER XI

One morning Tomasino the fisherman called on Major Joppolo at the Palazzo. As he entered the building, and even as he walked into the Major's office, he looked like an American sight-seer. His neck bent back on itself and his eyes wandered around in dull amazement.

Major Joppolo was pleased to see him and said cheerfully: "Good morning, Tomasino."

But Tomasino's face changed from curious to sullen, and he said: "I did not want to do it."

"Do what, Tomasino?"

"Come to the place of authority, this Palazzo. I have never done it in my life. My wife made me do it."

"Why? What did she want?"

"She said that if you had lowered yourself to come and see me on my fish-boat, I could lower myself to go and see you in the Palazzo. She wanted me to invite you to come to our house tonight to help eat some torrone which my daughter Tina made. My wife is a difficult woman. I hate her. She thinks she is the authority in my house."

Major Joppolo said: "Please be so good as to tell your wife that even though her husband was so reluctant in the delivery of her message, the Major would be delighted to accept."

Tomasino said: "I am of half a mind not to tell her. I hate her."

Promptly at nine o'clock Major Joppolo knocked on the door at 9 Via Vittorio Emanuele. Tomasino opened the door, but did not show the slightest pleasure at having a visitor.

"Come in," he grumbled.

The Major stepped in and tried to shake his hand but could not find it in the dark.

"We have to climb many stairs," Tomasino complained.

As a matter of fact, there was only one flight. At the top of it they turned into a brightly lighted hallway. Tomasino led the Major through the hallway to a narrow parlor. This parlor belied the unsociability of Tomasino, for its furniture consisted almost exclusively of chairs—a sure sign, in Adano, of frequent and numerous guests. Besides the chairs there were only a large Italian radio in one corner and a round table in the center. The room was so narrow that from the chairs on either side one could reach whatever was on the table.

Two guests had arrived before the Major, and their identity surprised him.

"Hi, Major," said Captain Purvis, who looked as if he had been into a couple of bottles of wine, "Giuseppe told me the old fish-hound here had a couple of pretty daughters. I was getting kinda lonesome. Giuseppe here told me he'd bring me up. Good old Giuseppe."

"Good night, a boss," said Giuseppe. He was much embarrassed; he had had no idea that the Major would show up.

The Major was just as embarrassed as Giuseppe. He was thinking of those sentences from the Amgot notebook: "Don't play favorites. . . . . Be careful about invitations . . ."

"Why, hello," the Major said.

"Haven't seen the quail yet," Captain Purvis said. "The old lady's out in the kitchen. She's a honey."

The Major sat down stiffly.

Captain Purvis said: "Say, I didn't know you were an old hand around here, you dog. Why don't you tell me about these good things? You old bum, I thought you never did anything but work. Tell me, how are these chickens?"

Major Joppolo said weakly: "I haven't seen the girls, except one of them in church. This is my first time here."

Captain Purvis, who was unquestionably tipsy, said: "Hey, speaking of chickens, I heard one the other day. You remember where Hoover said once that he was going to fix it so there would be a chicken in every pot? Well, I heard the other day that after the U.S. Army was around these Italian towns for a while there was going to be a chicken on every lap."

The Captain roared with laughter. Giuseppe, although he had no idea what the point was, laughed politely. The Major was horrified. Tomasino sat in depressed silence, understanding nothing.

Tomasino's wife came in from the kitchen with a platter of torrone and saved the day. She must have weighed two hundred and fifty pounds. She put the candy down.

Giuseppe jumped to his feet and introduced the Major to Tomasino's wife. Her name was Rosa.

She said in her husky fat lady's voice: "I am delighted to see you here, Mister Major. That wet stone"—she pointed at Tomasino—"almost refused to go and ask you."

Captain Purvis said: "Where are these pretty mackerel the old fish-hound is supposed to have? Say, Major, we got to make a deal here. Giuseppe here says he thinks I'd like the dark one best."

Giuseppe said quickly to the fat Rosa, "Where are the girls?"

The mother said: "If you think you can hurry, two pretty girls trying to make themselves prettier, you'll find them in the bedroom."

Major Joppolo was alarmed to see Giuseppe get up and go into the bedroom. He wondered what kind of girls these were, anyhow.

But in a few moments Giuseppe came back, leading a girl by each hand. He had apparently explained the situation to the girls, because Tina went directly to Major Joppolo, shook his hand, and sat down beside him, and the dark one, Francesca, went straight to Captain Purvis, shook his hand, and sat down by him.

"Mmm," said Captain Purvis, "not bad." He felt secure in the certainty that the girls did not speak English.

"Take it easy," Major Joppolo said.

Tina said in Italian: "I heard you breathing in church last Sunday.

"I've never been so happy in my life."

You ought to take more exercise, Mister Major."

Major Joppolo said: "I was late, I was very late. I got working on something, and I lost track of time. I had to run to church. It was very embarrassing."

Tina said: "You had Father Pensovecchio worried. I could tell by the way he got mixed up in his service."

Major Joppolo said: "Do you go to church every Sunday?"

Tina said: "Of course."

Major Joppolo was able to talk with Tina, interrupted only once in a while by bursts from the mother and gales of laughter all around the room, except from Tomasino, who stared moodily at the floor.

The Major said: "Do you always go to the Church of San Angelo?"

This time it was Tina who blushed. "No," she said. "Giuseppe told me you were going to be there. I wanted to see what the American Major was like. Most Sundays I go to the Church of the Benedettini."

Major Joppolo said: "What did you think of the American Major?"

Tina said: "He breathes very loudly, like the leaky bellows of the pipe organ at the Benedettini."

The Major laughed.

"Have a piece of torrone," Tina said. "I made it."

One could not very well turn down an invitation put just that way, so the Major took a big piece. The candy was passed all around the room, and for a time all conversation stopped. Nothing could be heard except the crunching of nuts between teeth and the smacking sound of boiled sugar coming unstuck from teeth. During this time of chewing, Major Joppolo couldn't help thinking how strange it was to build a whole evening around the eating of torrone, but that seemed to be the program.

When he dared, Major Joppolo said "Good."

Captain Purvis could afford to be more honest in English. He said: "What did we come to, a glue factory?"

"Another piece," Tina said to the Major cordially.

"In a few minutes," the Major said.

"We must have some wine," the fat and happy Rosa said. "Go out in the kitchen, fool," she said to Tomasino, "and get a bottle of Marsala."

Wine on top of torrone, and probably mixed right up with it. Major Joppolo could think of nothing less tempting, but Captain Purvis, hearing the word vino, shouted: "Vino, hurray for vino."

Major Joppolo stood up and said: "Purvis, either you shut your big trap or I'll throw you out of here."

Captain Purvis said: "Aw come on, Major, don't be a spoil sport. You know you feel the same way, if you were just honest enough to say so."

"Shut up, Purvis!" The Major's eyes blazed. "That's an order. Now you behave yourself."

Tomasino came back with the wine, and Captain Purvis saluted the bottle, bending slightly at the waist and aiming the breakaway of the salute straight at the bottle.

Rosa, sensing that something was wrong, shouted desperately: "My buy, my buy!" But nobody laughed.

Tina jumped up and said: "Let's dance," and she ran over to the radio and turned on Radio Moscow. "Moscow always has the best music," she said.

Francesca, with Major Joppolo's help, carried the table from the middle of the room to the end away from the radio. Captain Purvis rushed over to Rosa, held out his arms, and said: "Okay, fatso, let's dance."

Rosa understood from his gestures what he meant, and she stood up laughing. The tipsy Captain and his huge partner careened around the room. After a couple of turns Rosa collapsed into a chair.

Then Captain Purvis danced with Francesca, and Major Joppolo with Tina. They stamped and laughed and talked above the music until Tomasino said glumly: "You are making too much noise. You will wake the girls."

Tina ran over and toned the radio down a little.

"The girls?" the Major said.

Tina blushed. She said: "My sister's daughters."

"Francesca's?"

"Oh, no, of my sister who is in Rome."

Major Joppolo did not think to ask why the daughters were in Adano and the mother in Rome; or why Tina blushed; or why she did not seem very anxious to talk any more about the sleeping girls.

"Let's dance some more," she said.

So they danced until they were both sweating in the midsummer heat.

It was Tina who said: "Some fresh air, Mister Major?"

He said: "That would be a good idea."

She slipped out through wooden shutter doors onto a narrow balcony over the dark street, and the Major followed her.

Tina closed the shutter doors behind the Major.

The two stood against the cool iron of the balcony railing and looked up at the sharp stars. Tina said: "Do you like it here?"

Major Joppolo said: "I've never been so happy in my life."

"That seems strange," Tina said, "when you're so far from home."

"I'm not so far from home, in a way. Florence is almost a home to me. My father and mother were from a little town near Florence."

"Where are you from, in America I mean?"

"The Bronx, Tina."

"Where is that, the Bronx?"

"New York."

"The Bronx is part of New York City?"

"Sometimes I think New York City is part of the Bronx."

"Oh, I should love to go there. Is the Bronx beautiful? Is it beautiful for Florentines in the Bronx? How would it be for someone from Adano?"

"For my Florentine parents, I think it is beautiful, yes, it is beautiful. In Italy they were just poor peasants, and you know it is not very beautiful for most of the peasants here. There my father is a waiter. He has a very good job, in the University Club, it is a very nice atmosphere, all the chairs are leather like in the Palazzo and the walls are all panelled. My mother has a washing machine. Father has a car. It is very beautiful for them, I think. For me, it was not always so beautiful."

"Why not, Mister Major?"

"Well, it's hard to explain. You see, I grew up in America. I could see that the Bronx was not the most beautiful place in America. I always wanted a little more than we had. I don't know, it's hard to explain."

"No," said Tina, "you don't have to explain. I know what it is to be restless. That's why my hair is blonde, I guess."

Major Joppolo had made up his mind that Tina's hair was dyed. But he didn't expect her to talk about it.

Tina sensed his embarrassment. "Oh, my hair is not natural, Mister Major. I dyed it because I was not satisfied. My dark hair was my Bronx. Every one had dark hair. I wanted something different."

Household Hints

To avoid a musty odor in a metal teapot that is seldom used, keep a lump of sugar in the pot.

Wash your oil cloth in a mixture of skim milk and turpentine. It will make it look like new.

To clean a vase, cut newspapers into small pieces and swish the pieces around in soapy water on the inside.

To keep the potholder handy when working around the stove, tack a piece of tape onto the holder and place around your neck.

Hang up dresses and suits, but not sweaters. Lay them flat in a drawer so they will retain their shape.

When sweetness of cream is doubtful and there is no more on hand and it must be used, a pinch of soda stirred into it keeps it from curdling, even in hot weather.

Odds and ends of soap can be saved by putting them in a small bag made from a wash cloth. When taking a bath, this bag full of soap can be put into the tub and you'll have wash cloth and soap in one.

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

Nations Must Cooperate

Not many Americans are familiar with the technical details of the proposals formulated at Dunbarton Oaks or the procedure to be followed at the United Nations conference at San Francisco.

About all the average American knows is that a group of nations have formulated a proposal that is related to future peace and that the scheme has been assailed by some individuals and nations because of vague mysteries connected with the voting rights of the nations of the world.

As the conference gets underway in San Francisco, it is well for the people of this country to realize that the United States is represented by an able and intelligent delegation. Obviously, they will not go to the parley with the power to "write the ticket." They must discuss proposals and amendments and, after everything is said, try to secure an agreement that will be satisfactory to all nations

The people of this country who are in favor of international cooperation will be well advised to accept the conclusions drawn by their representatives. If, after hearing from various nations, our delegates are willing to make compromises to meet the viewpoints and fears of other peoples, we may safely assume that they have carefully considered the effect of their action upon the United States and that they have concluded that our safety and security have been adequately protected.

It is important to remember that San Francisco is a beginning. Whatever is done in details can be progressively improved if the nations of the world are willing to make a start on international cooperation. Without a beginning, however ill-advised some compromises may be, there is no hope.

The time has come to make a start with faith in the ability and willingness of most loving and friendly nations to readjust whatever needs correction.

Youth Ready To Leave Home

Nearly every urban community in the United States, regardless of it's size, seems to be imbued with the idea that the greater the population, the greater the municipality.

While there may be some difference of opinion as to the advantages of increased inhabitants, there is much rivalry between municipalities in the matter of acquiring larger populations. The effort to attract new residents receives attention from the go-getters of the various booster associations that add variety to modern life.

While it is entirely proper to seek to induce others to move into Clanton and Chilton County there is much to be gained by developing a program that will induce the boys and girls who grow up in our midst to continue their residence here. This observation naturally applies to community efforts to persuade local men and women now in active service of the nation to make their homes in Chilton County when they are ready to begin private life again.

More than 50,000 senior and junior high school students in 1,267 schools, in all sections of the country, were asked whether they expected to stay in their home town or community when they completed their education. Only thirty-five per cent said that they expected to stay where they now live and go to school.

The percentage was the same for boys and girls, but varied somewhat as the size of communities varied. Students living in large cities, of more than 100,000 population, expressed the greatest degree of satisfaction, with forty-three per cent of the boys and fifty-one per cent of the girls expecting to stay.

In the small towns (2,500 to 10,000 population), seventy-five perdent of the girls and seventy-three per cent of the boys expect to leave.

In rural areas, eighty-three per cent of the girls planned to go elsewhere, with only seventy per cent of the boys giving expression to similar views

A review of the poll shows that better job opportunities elsewhere is the main reason for leaving. Second on the list of reasons is that, despite family ties and friendships, there is a desire to labor in another part of the country, or world, a different size town or city, or in another type community. Other reasons are the dislike of settling down and the dislike of the communitics in which the students live.

The chief reason given by those who expect to stay in their home towns is that their present community offers what they want out of life. The second highest percentage of votes was based on family ties and friendships, and the third was the existence of good job opportunities.

We call attention to the comment of M. R. Robinson, publisher of the magazine which announced the poll's results. He says: "Young people in small towns and rural communities are most discontent and small town must wake up, if they are interested in keeping their young people as citizens of the community, after this war."

This is one of Chilton County's major problems and should be given serious thought by every adult citizen of every community.

HOLLIS-LAWRENCE VOWS SOLEMNIZED AT CLANTON CHURCH

Miss Geraldine Hollis, daughter of Mr and Mrs John Lawrence Hollis, and Sgt. Harold Lawrence, USAAF, son of Mr and Mrs John P. Lawrence were married April 22, at the First Baptist Church of Clanton by Rev. Roswell Owens.

Mrs Machugh Duncan attended her sister as matron of honor clad in yellow marquisette, Miss Betty Hollis, another sister as maid of honor, in blue marquisette, Miss Jerry Alred & Mrs Lawrence H. Bodden as bridesmaids, in pink lace and net over taffeta They all carried bouquets of garden flowers tied with matching ribbon.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore her sisters wedding gown, a "Tafel" model of white duchess satin, made with shirred, fitting bodice, square neckline, outlined with lace, long sleeves, pointed over the wrist, full skirt extending into an elaborate train. The circular veil of bridal illusion fell from a tiara of seed pearls, and the bridal bouquet was of orchids and white carnation hearts.

Capt. Melvin Weil, Jr., was best man, and the ushers were Dick Hayes, Pfc Lawrence H. Bodden, Willis Adams, and John Deramus.

The reception, given by the bride's parents, was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J Hance Alred. The bride's lace covered table was centered with a tiered wedding cake.

Serving at the reception were Miss Ann Callen, Mrs Jefferson Miller, Miss Helen Patterson, Mrs Doris Anthony, Miss Elizabeth Lawrence, Miss Dot Clayton, Miss Mary Frances Duke and Mrs James Minor.

For the wedding trip, the bride wore a black and white checked dressmaker suit, with hat of black straw trimmed with pink ostrich feathers, other accessories to match and orchid corsage.

Out-of-town guests included Mrs Edward Hebson, Mrs Walter Christian, Mr and Mrs Edward Pitts, Mr. and Mrs Henry Dunham, Mr and Mrs Aubry Harris, A C Wood, Miss Mary Ruth Riddle, Miss Mary Frances Duke, Miss Helen Patterson, Miss Jeanne Welch, Willis Adams, all of Sylacauga, Mr and Mrs Rother Harris Mrs Virgil Elmore, Miss Dot Cunningham, Miss Ruth Burns, all of Birmingham, Capt and Mrs Wales Wallace of Columbiana, Mrs W. How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion, thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

LETTER FROM THE PHILIPPINES

Philippines, April 12, 1945.

Dear Aunt Ada and Granny:

I received two letters from you yesterday. I don't have to tell you how happy they make me. They help my morale so much. I'm gonna try to write more often from now on.

Since last writing, I've taken another "cruise" on the Calm Pacific. The trip up was most peaceful and again there was no trouble with the Japs. I enjoyed the long hours spent on the sun deck, reading and soaking up the sunshine. I've a lovely sun tan.

I suppose my office will be all set up by tomorrow and that will mean long hours of work for a while until we get caught up with the work. At this moment I'm up here in the teletype office trying to get a few letters written while I have the time. This is a telegram typewritten which is the reason all this is in "caps."

You wrote, Aunt Ada, of getting a new Easter outfit. That is one worry I didn't have this year. Easter, I was sailing and sailing. We had a lovely Easter service out on the deck of the ship. I was just looking about the crowd during the service and wondering. Some of the WACS sat on the cots placed about the deck, and others on the deck floor. There were a few G.I.'s also, sitting here and there. Some were in fatiques, some in khakis and others in shorts. So different from their Easter suits of bygone days. One G.I. sat the entire service with his head in his hands and not once did I see him look up. One WAC held her dog in her lap and patted him now and then. One of the WACS had brought her monkey with her and it was hopping from chair to cot. One huge colored boy (one of the ship's crew) put all he had into the songs and had a splendid voice. Some had frowns on their faces, probably caused by the strong sunrays or perhaps they were thinking to themselves, "What Am I Doing Here?" I get to thinking that same thought at times myself. I also get to wondering sometimes if this mess will ever end. May it be soon.

I am now back in a city and civilization again. We have the best setup here than at any place since coming overseas. We are living on the campus of an university. The buildings are like mansions compared to tents and warehouses and such that we have been living in. There are eight of us in my room and beds for four more. We have Filippinos to do our details and also do the K.P. They are paid by the Government. Our working hours are from 8:15 to 5:30. Of course, if there is night work to be done, we work. The food is much better here and the mess hall is very nice. It is screened in and has a floor believe-it-or-not. The mosquitoes are terrible. I asked one of the little Philippino boys the other day if they had always been this bad and his reply was that the Japs brought the flies and the mosquitoes and when they left they only took the flies with them.

I went to church Sunday in one of the Protestant churches which is just around the corner from camp. The people were so friendly and lots of them came around after the service and shook hands with us and talked. Their choir was just out of this world. They wear white robes and black collars. One G.I. had already been made a member and was in the choir Sunday singing. A group of us WACS went back to the evening service. The pastor's wife is very sweet and yesterday she took another WAC and me for a walk about the city. She showed us the ruins of her home and pointed out some of the most important buildings that were also burned by the Japs. The only things that they managed to salvage was a little of their silverware that they dug out of the ashes. She told us of how hundreds of Filippinos were lined up and shot. Men, children, women and all. Of course, most of this was done after the Yanks had landed on the island. When the fighting was at it's worse, the Japs drove the people into buildings, packng them in until it was almost impossible to breathe and guarding the buildings so they couldn't escape to the other side of the city where the Yanks had already liberated. Then as the Yanks came closer, they would set fire to the buildings including the ones where the Philippinos were, burning them alive. The Japs told them that the Yanks were coming with plenty of good food and clothing, but that they wouldn't live to see. Mrs. Catley, the woman mentioned above, and her husband and two small children escaped from one of these buildings and told of the dreadful experience that they went through trying to get on the other side of the city. Their only food for seven days was a handful of peanuts. While packed in one of the buildings, her friend who had a six months old baby was standing by her and the baby was crying because of hunger. The mother hadn't had any food for days and so had no milk for the baby. A Jap guard came up to her and told her to stop the baby from crying. He waited for about five minutes and when the baby kept crying he shot the baby and the mother. That is just one of the "minor" tales that Mrs. Catley told me. I hope the people back home will believe anything they hear about the Japs. And maybe this is not the right thing to say, but I hope that every lasting Jap is killed before the Yanks get through with them. Let's change the subject.

We expect to go into skirts again in the near future. I'm so tired of wearing these G.I. pants. We are getting the nice WAC off-duty dresses and from the latest rumor I hear that we will be able to wear these dresses to work. They will be so much cooler than the khaki uniforms. We have some Philippino women working in the offices now and they are so nice and friendly.

Oh, I almost forgot to tell you about

AWARDED BRONZE STAR

He is serving with the Fifth Army Front in Italy with the 337th "Wolverine" Infantry Regiment, 85th "Custer" Division.

When a member of his company was wounded while manning an observation post, related the citation with the award, Ellison dashed forward from his covered position through the continuing enemy artillery fire to render aid to the wounded man.

After assisting him to the company command post where he received medical treatment, Ellison courageously returned through the intense fire and without regard for his own safety, continued to man the important observation post.

Pfc. Ellison's mother, Mrs. Arvie Z. V. Ellison, lives on Clanton Route 3.

RECEIVED PURPLE HEART

Cpl. James E. Wallace of Maplesville, Ala., who is with the 80th Infantry Division on the Western Front, has recently received the Purple Heart for wounds received as a result of enemy action.

AWARDED AIR MEDAL

Ensign Julious Perry Martin, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. U. Martin of this city, was recently awarded the Air Medal for meritorious acts while flying over enemy held bases in the Pacific.

Ensign Martin graduated from C.C. H.S. in 1935 and was sworn into the Navy at Birmingham in April, 1936.

During the period from May 28, 1944, to September 15, 1944, he participated in 32 combat missions, totalling 324.2 hours of flight over enemy territory.

Cpl. Warren C. Benson is now serving with the U. S. Service Forces in France. He is with the Quartermaster Depot behind the lines, that daily supplies the men at the front lines with the countless items of food, clothing and equipment, all designed to make the combat soldiers lot just a little easier.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allied Forces Join in Smash on Nazis' Vaunted Alpine Redoubt; Shape Postwar Security Body

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Completely underground, this V-2 factory fell to U. S. 1st army troops at Kleinodungen, Germany. Rocket bombs stand on assembly line.

EUROPE:
Fortress Goal

Fires still burned hotly in Berlin as U. S., French and Russian forces beat down on Adolf Hitler's vaunted Alpine fortress to smash that last mountain redoubt where Naziism was expected to put up its dying stand.

Coming as other U. S. and Russian forces reportedly joined hands in a historic junction on the Elbe river below Berlin, the steady reduction of the German capital and the drive on the Alpine retreat signalled the fall of the great empire the once Austrian paperhanger built up only to lose as the U. S., for the second time in the 20th century, tipped the scales of victory.

Some of the fiercest fighting of the whole war raged in rubbled Berlin where the Germans, obeying Gauleiter Goebbels' order to resist to the end, offered a fanatical block to block, house to house defense. With the capital reduced to an inferno by massed Soviet artillery and airplane bombardment, Germans reportedly fought from house tops, from rooms and from basements in a desperate effort to stem the advance of over a million Russian troops.

Even in Berlin's dying hours, the Germans, reputedly led by Hitler himself, poured reinforcements into the city as the 1st White Russian and 1st Ukrainian armies gradually forged a ring of steel around the capital. Signifying the totality of the war between the two countries, the opposing armies employed women in auxiliary front line services.

No less than 350,000 U. S. and French troops were engaged in the drive on the Germans' last Alpine fortress, with Lt. Gen. Patton's 3rd army closing in on the northeast, Lt. Gen. Patch's 7th from the north and the French from the west. Birthplace of Naziism, Munich lay in the path of the advancing Allied forces as they moved on the foothills of the rugged mountains enclosing the enemy redoubt.

To the east, Russian forces drove on the redoubt from Austria, while farther north, U. S. and Red troops also joined in a fight to clamp a pincer on the Germans' last great arsenal of Czechoslovakia.

While fighting raged to the north, German forces made a desperate scramble to withdraw northward from the Po valley in Italy, with rearguards seeking to slow up U. S. and British efforts to overtake the main body of enemy troops and cut them to ribbons.

PACIFIC:
Clever Foe

Having first displayed his ingenuity at constructing defensive fortifications at Iwo Jima, the Japs gave another demonstration of their ability on Okinawa, where U. S. forces encountered bitter opposition in their drive to clean up this stepping-stone, 325 miles from Tokyo.

Making use of the hilly terrain of Okinawa in much the same fashion as on Iwo Jima, the Japs built strong entrenchments in the slopes, with connecting tunnels permitting the transfer of troops to endangered sites. Concealing themselves in these caves, the enemy frequently burst out after Yanks had moved past to attack them from the rear.

With the Japs strongly holed up in the rolling countryside, big guns from the U. S. fleet were brought into play to help artillery and airplanes pound the hilly defensive network and allow the foot soldiers to pick their way forward through the battered foe.

PUBLIC PAYROLL:
Big Increase

The total public payroll—federal, state and municipal — and the total number of public employees, has more than doubled in 12 years, the National Civil Service league claims.

Since Pearl Harbor, the league states, the federal service has increased by 153 per cent and its payroll by 233 per cent, while employment of state and municipal workers has decreased 3½ per cent, with payrolls up 10 per cent.

SAN FRANCISCO:
Security Parley

Though 800 delegates from 46 United Nations took their seats for the momentous postwar security parley in San Francisco with strong resolve to shape an effective organization to maintain peace, the conferees faced no easy task with need for reconciliation of U. S. and Russian differences over the character of the new body.

As the delegates entered into their historic deliberations, the Russians insisted upon the adoption of the Dumbarton Oaks plan, along with the Yalta agreement for three votes for the Soviet government to match Britain's six, and the right of any of the major powers on the permanent Big Five security council to veto the use of force against it.

Though the American delegation accepted Dumbarton Oaks as an adequate framework for building the postwar security council, there was some sentiment for amendments to assure more safeguards for peace, particularly one empowering the new organization to alter any peace-

With virtually all executive power lying in the hands of the security council dominated by the U. S., Britain, Russia, France and China, smaller nations indicated a desire for the broadening of their voice in the formation of decisions. Under the Dumbarton Oaks plan, six smaller countries would be picked yearly to serve on the security council, while the others would constitute an assembly for discussion and recommendation.

Even as the conference got under way, Russia signed a 20-year treaty with the Moscow-sponsored Polish provisional government looking toward mutual assistance in the event of future warfare.

The treaty accentuated the differences between the U. S. and Britain with Russia over the formation of the future Polish government, with the western Allies insisting on the inclusion of various democratic elements in the present communist dominated Warsaw regime.

ATROCITIES:
Congress Boils

Boiling over revelations of Nazi atrocities, congressmen leaned toward the imposition of a hard peace on Germany, while the Allies warned the enemy that mistreatment of war prisoners would lead to punishment for those responsible.

Revulsed by stories of abuse and starvation of American POWs and the brutal torture of deportees inside the Reich, congressmen declared that a harsh peace must bring home to the Germans the enormity of the cruelties and wipe out the Nazi philosophy.

With their warning contained in leaflets showered upon the rapidly dwindling Reich, the Allies vowed to ruthlessly pursue any person guilty of maltreating POWs until he is brought to punishment. Meanwhile, the U. S. accepted Germany's offer to leave American POWs in camps in the path of the advancing American armies.

Rabbit Boom

Demand for food brought about by the war, and shortages of beef, pork, mutton and poultry for civilian consumption has resulted in an increase in the production of domestic rabbits of from 200 to 300 per cent.

The tender, white - meated flesh of the domestic rabbit has grown so in popularity that in southern California 13,000,000 pounds were produced in 1944.

EMPLOYMENT:
Readjustment

Laid off from high-paying war jobs, discharged workers should realize that a tapering off of the war program necessitates their return to lower-paying civilian industries, with early shifting spelling a quicker restoration of the peace time economy.

Deprived of manpower in favor of the metal and armament industries early in the war effort, the logging and lumber and textile industries are in need of 250,000 workers, the War Production board said, with the government seeking to channel people back into these trades.

In concentrating on the return of workers to these fields, WPB said that reemployment was necessary to assure the smooth operation of other civilian industries in the postwar period, with automobile production, for instance, dependent upon textile supplies, and construction and output of paper and packaging materials related to the lumber business.

LEND-LEASE:
Soviet Pact

The extent of lend-lease assistance to Russia may well depend upon Moscow's course in the war against Japan, it was indicated, as the U. S., Britain and Canada signed their fourth mutual aid agreement with the Reds for the year ending next July.

In keeping lend-lease restricted to wartime supplies, the new agreement excluded long-range heavy-duty goods for which the Russians might pay later, as provided in pacts between the U. S. and British and French. With Russian participation in the Pacific war, however, necessitating the use of heavy-duty goods, a similar understanding might be reached with Moscow.

The decisive factor in Russia's great comeback against Germany after Nazi armies had swept deep into the country to cripple agricultural and industrial production, U. S. lend-lease assistance to the Reds totalled 7½ billion dollars by the end of 1944.

U. S. Nest-Egg Grows

With total deposits of businesses and individuals amounting to 66 billion dollars at the end of the year, and with heavy holdings of government bonds, America faces the immediate postwar period with a strong financial structure.

Of the 66 billion dollars in deposits, businesses owned 40½ billions, individuals 21½ billions, trust funds 1½ billions, non-profit associations 2 billions, and foreign concerns 800 millions. Recent trends, however, have seen bigger businesses investing more in U. S. securities, while smaller enterprises and individuals have been building up their bank balances.

Exceeding all other records for a similar period, deposits increased almost 6 billion dollars during the last half of 1944, the Federal Reserve board reported, with farmers contributing 700 million dollars of the total amount.

MEAT:
New Program

Acting shortly after congressional hearings on the tight meat situation, the Office of Economic Stabilization, working with the Office of Price Administration, the War Food administration and the war department, devised a new program to bring about a more even distribution of meat throughout the country and give packers relief from close price policies.

Also as part of the program, the government agencies mapped an all-out drive on black markets, with OPA enlarging its investigative staff by 500 and intensifying its court action for triple damages on overcharges, revocation of slaughtering permits and withholding of subsidies.

In attempting to obtain a more equitable distribution of meat, the government seeks (1) to divert more cattle from local slaughtering houses to federally inspected plants which can ship across state lines, and (2) persuade more local packers to apply for federal inspection and sell to the army, taking the load off present suppliers, who have had to cut their deliveries to civilians accordingly.

To assure packers of more profitable operations, the new program increases subsidies to slaughterers when live prices reach within the peak of market ceilings; retains the present additional 50 cent payment on all grades, and boosts the maximum charges on army beef. In addition, the government promised to pay the difference between packers' losses and costs to assure their continued existence.

POSTWAR AIR:
Big Future

Speaking before the Bond club in Chicago, Assistant Secretary of Commerce William M. Burden predicted the growth of civil aviation into a $2,000,000,000 industry employing 400,000 people 10 years after the war. Because of the development of the airplane, air lines will have attracted most of the first-class passenger traffic both for domestic and trans-Atlantic flight, Burden forecasts.

'Five Freedoms' Designed To Spur World Air Travel

Differences Between American Traditions of Free Flight and European Concepts of Regulation Composed at Parley.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

(This is the second of a series of articles on the "Freedom of the Air," first of which appeared in this column last week.)

In a previous column I set forth the achievements of the conference on international aviation, implementation of which it is hoped will be reached by a second gathering in May, probably before the United Nations deliberations at San Francisco have been concluded. I set forth certain views on the accomplishments of the first aviation gathering, as expressed by Lt. Col. William Mitchell of the army air force, which, although they were his own and not the official opinions of the government, were known to represent the attitude of a number of high air force officials.

I think that the satisfaction expressed by Colonel Mitchell, in what has already been accomplished toward establishing the "freedom of the air," reflects the general feelings of the industry. Although the point was not expressly brought out in the comment in military circles, I believe the one thing which pleased the industry was the fact that a conference, supervised as it was by a government official (then Assistant Secretary of State Adolph Berle), had built a framework within which private enterprise and business and technical ingenuity could be rewarded and not "fenced in" by restrictive bureaucratic regulation.

Freedoms Essential To U. S. Flight

You will recall that the delegates recognized the fact that "freedom of the air" was not as simple a thing as "freedom of the seas," because vessels stop at frontiers since ship lanes lead only from harbor to harbor, while aircraft crosses borders and passes over the sovereign territory of foreign nations.

Thus it was necessary to divide the perquisites of the airways into five freedoms. The first two are the right of innocent passage—that is to stop at a foreign airport for refuelling or other facilities. These two are essential to America since our aerial ambitions encircle the globe, and that can't be done, either from a practical or a profitable standpoint, in one jump.

Because of complications which I will mention later, involved in the other freedoms, the first two were grouped in one form of multilateral agreement drawn up at Chicago.

The other three freedoms, embraced in the second agreement, were described as follows: the right to disembark passengers, mail and freight from the country of origin of the aircraft; the right to embark passengers, mail and freight destined for the country of origin of the aircraft; and, in addition, at the suggestion of Canada, a fifth freedom was added in the form of certain provisions of right of entry and technical regulations.

Of course, Russia's last-minute refusal to attend the Chicago conference was a great disappointment to all concerned, but the reconciliation of what appeared at first to be a sharp difference between the United Kingdom and the United States, finally reconciled through the "honest broker" efforts of Canada, was considered a great achievement. Hope exists that a successful outcome of the United Nations negotiations will bring the Soviets into the fold.

The clash between the British and the American viewpoints is described this way by one of the American observers at the conference who has been working steadily for the consummation of the Chicago plans:

"In the United States," he said, "we have always looked upon air transport primarily as an instrument of trade. We are still a young country with an expanding and highly competitive economy and with no bitter memories of recent bombings of our homeland. The British viewpoint, which was shared to some degree by many European countries, reflected a mature and stabilized economy, to be parcelled out among those participating in it, plus a fear of explosive international rivalries. Canada's position possibly reflected British desires, plus a fear of being crowded out by its more powerful neighbor under a system of unrestricted competition.

"The United States was seeking an opportunity for free commercial intercourse between nations, with resulting benefits to all of them; the other two countries (Britain and Canada) were seeking protection against cut-throat competition and international mistrust."

Reducing these different points of view to specific operational plans, boiled down largely to whether or not a global authority would be set up which would govern the location of international routes, regulate the "frequencies" (number of flights or stops, which is where the competition comes in) and rates. In fact this central authority as the British viewed it would have even more authority over internal air activity than our own Civil Aeronautics board, which cannot limit frequencies at home. In our domestic services a line may make as many flights as it can get a pay-load for.

The United States on the other hand wanted everything except transit and non-traffic stops worked out separately between the countries concerned.

In other words, the United States felt that if an airplane company could offer more to a patron, regardless of where he wanted to get aboard or get off, that company ought to have the right to try to show to the country where the getting on and off would take place, that it was mutually advantageous to let that particular line have the business.

Agreements Reached On Technical Norms

There were other questions concerning technical standards and the future admission of devastated countries unable to furnish facilities for airports, that were settled, and the mooted points mentioned, all of which were met with what might be called substantial agreement. Both forms of agreement (one with the first two freedoms, the other—all five) provided that the country whose territory is involved may designate the routes and airports used; but charges for use of airports may not be greater than those imposed on its own airports engaged in similar international services.

In addition to these agreements the diagram for the international organization was laid down in the form of a treaty which must be approved by the various countries. This organization is composed of an assembly, on which each nation would have one vote, and a council of 15 members, 2 from the British Commonwealth, 2 from the Soviet Union, 2 from the United States, 1 each from Brazil, Chile and France, and the remaining 6 to be elected on a regional basis. The council would act as a clearing house for information and would provide minimum uniform technical standards but would have no power over commercial matters. An interim council was also proposed, to function until the permanent organization is created, but not more than three years.

America has a great stake in the outcome of the San Francisco conference. It has a great stake in international aviation, too. "We have learned and must not forget," said General Arnold in speaking of the air transport service, "from now on air transport is an essential of air power, in fact of all national power."

Thirteen out of every 20 American high school students expect to leave their home towns and live elsewhere, after they have completed their education. This is revealed in a nation-wide survey just completed by the Institute of Student Opinion under the sponsorship of Scholastic magazine.

Better job opportunities elsewhere, either in general or in their chosen fields of work, is the main reason for leaving, according to the student voters.

World Peace Hopes Converge On Conference in San Francisco

An Organization With Responsibility, Power Envisioned by Planners

By JOHN E. JONES
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Out of the Yalta conference of the Big Three came the electrifying news that San Francisco had been selected for the coming United Nations conference — "We have agreed," they said, "that a conference of United Nations should be called to meet at San Francisco in the United States on April 25, 1945, to prepare the charter of such an organization, along the line proposed in the informal conversations at Dumbarton Oaks."

Official announcement came to San Francisco's Mayor Lapham from Acting Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew with the further advice that "Representatives of the department of state will get in touch with you in a day or so with regard to necessary arrangements for the conference."

And so San Francisco, most western of our American cities, founded in 1776, the same year as our Declaration of Independence, becomes the focal point of men's hopes from all parts of the world for enduring peace. San Francisco, the Golden Gate of the '49ers, becomes now the new Golden Gateway to future security for all mankind.

If you take a map of the world and draw lines from Russia to South Africa, from Egypt to China, from Central Europe to India, from the Philippines to the Scandinavias, from Greenland to Australia, and from Canada to New Zealand, all of these lines will cross or converge at San Francisco. So San Francisco becomes the world peace center.

'No World War III.'

Indicative of the importance of this meeting are some of the statements made by statesmen and pressmen. Veteran newsman Mark Sullivan: "The greatest present need of the world is to see that there shall be no World War III. This is the beginning of everything and the objective of everything."

Lt. Cmdr. Harold Stassen, delegate: "I hope that San Francisco may mean for the world of tomorrow what Constitution hall at Philadelphia meant for the United States of America."

Anthony Eden, foreign secretary of the British empire: "This may be the world's last chance to create an effective peace organization combining responsibility with power."

Attendance at the meeting bears out this importance. Forty-four nations from all continents of the earth are represented. It has been estimated that delegates and their attendants, secretaries, advisers—experts on all matters of government—total some 1,500 persons. News gatherers—press and radio—number upwards of 1,000. San Francisco is host to from 2,500 to 3,000 persons.

Our state department has had representatives in San Francisco since March preparing for the big meeting, which taxes every facility of the coast city. Hotels, which have already been full to overflowing for the last two years or more, have to take care of several thousand more. The department of state has reserved 3,200 rooms in the larger hotels, taking over entirely several of the largest. The San Francisco chamber of commerce has advised people not directly connected with the conference to stay away from the city during April and May.

No one knows how long the conference will remain in session. First plans were for approximately four weeks. It may last eight weeks or longer, for a big job has to be done. East meets West, and all of the differences between them must be ironed out in order to build an organization that will be effective and enduring.

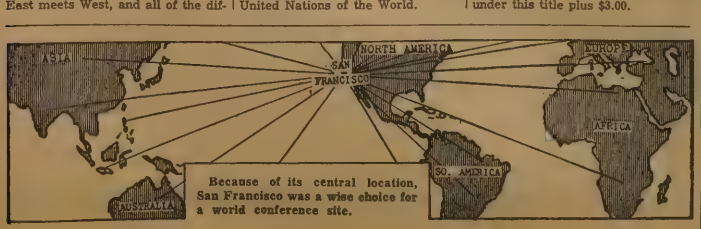
Everything Arranged Early.

Experienced protocol officers have had to work out in advance details of seating arrangements at meetings—both general and committee—as well as at banquets and dinners, and hotel room assignments. Transportation from air fields to hotels and from hotels to meeting places had to be provided.

San Francisco is a cosmopolitan city with a population made up of persons from all parts of the world. Many of its taxi drivers speak other languages in addition to English. Each taxicab carries a sign indicating the languages that its driver speaks, so that foreign delegates may pick out a driver conversant in his own language.

Headquarters for the United Nations convention are in one of the large hotels on Knob hill. Meetings are being held in several of the large public buildings in San Francisco's Civic center, such as War Memorial Opera house, Veterans' auditorium and the Civic auditorium.

Rules governing the press and the public follow in general the pattern established at the Chapultepec conference in Mexico city, where the press had admittance to all general meetings and information sources from committee meetings. Many of the general meetings are open to the public, so far as space makes that possible. It is a privilege long to be remembered to sit in on a session where a constitution of the United Nations is being created.



Details to Committees.

Much of the actual business of the convention of necessity is done in committee meetings where plans and details are formulated, discussed, changed, and worked up into a cohesive program, to be presented to the general conference. Here differences come up necessitating reference back to committee, often time and time again. It is no easy job to create an instrument to govern international relations acceptable to people from every continent of the earth.

But present day transportation and communications have erased the barriers of distance and isolation. There is no isolation, we are a part of a family of nations. Kipling wrote, "East is east and west is west — and ne'er the twain shall meet." But Kipling was probably wrong. The "twain" are meeting where the east and the west come together geographically and spiritually in San Francisco, at the Golden Gateway to future peace and security among the nations of the earth.

The peoples of the United Nations look to San Francisco—Australians, Asiatics, Europeans, Africans, Americans — north and south — all have their hearts and hopes in the convention beginning on April 25. Who knows but that in their hearts the common people of our enemy, both European and Asiatic, are putting their hopes in this world meeting for an end to the catastrophe which they started but could not finish.

Atop Mt. Davidson, 900 feet above the city of San Francisco, is a huge cross. Here annually some 50,000 of the city's diverse population have gathered on Easter Sundays to worship at the foot of this cross. Here all forget their differences of race and creed in a common reverence. Never before has this cross been lighted at any other time than Holy Week and Easter. Now, however, it is illuminated during the entire international conference—that it may be a guiding light to bring together the east and the west; and—in the spirit for which it stands—make brothers of us all in the United Nations of the World.

Vets Opportunities Under 'G.I. Bill' Explained by Legion Auxiliary Workers

By MRS. CHARLES B. GILBERT
National President,
American Legion Auxiliary.

The American Legion Auxiliary, ever since its organization, has centered its work on aiding the war veteran and his family. The Auxiliary in past years has aided veterans of the last war. With the increasing number of veterans in the present war, the Auxiliary has stepped up its program to help the veteran in every possible way.

A million veterans returned home in 1944. More and more are coming home each month. There are bound to be questions they will want to ask and problems they will have to solve.

To ease this burden the Auxiliary under the leadership of its national president, Mrs. Charles B. Gilbert of Norwich, Conn., has prepared questions and answers on some of the problems which will affect the veterans and their families. Here are some pertinent questions:

Mrs. C. B. Gilbert

A.—Under Title III of the servicemen's readjustment act of 1944, provision is made for the guaranteeing by the administrator of veterans affairs of a loan to be used in purchasing land, livestock, machinery to be used in farming operations conducted by the applicant.

Q.—Does this mean that the veterans administration will make the loan?

A.—No. The law provides that the administrator of veterans affairs may approve an application for the guaranty of a loan within certain limitations, but the actual loans are made by regularly established banks, lending agencies and private lenders.

Q.—What does the law specifically provide regarding the purchase of a farm and farming equipment?

A.—Any application made under this title for the guaranty of a loan to be used in purchasing any land, buildings, livestock, equipment, machinery or implements or in repairing, altering or improving any buildings or any equipment to be used in farming operations conducted by the applicant may be approved by the administrator of veterans affairs if he finds—

1. That the proceeds of such loan will be used in payment for real or personal property purchased or to be purchased by the veteran, or for repairing, altering or improving any buildings or equipment to be used in bona fide farming operations conducted by him.

2. That such property will be useful in and reasonably necessary for efficiently conducting such operations.

3. That the ability and experience of the veteran, and the nature of the proposed farming operations to be conducted by him, are such that there is a reasonable likelihood that such operations will be successful.

4. That the purchase price paid or to be paid by the veteran for such property does not exceed the reasonable normal value thereof as determined by proper appraisal.

Q.—Who is eligible to apply for this farm loan guaranty?

A.—A veteran who (1) has served in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after September 16, 1940, and before the officially declared termination of World War II; (2) shall have been discharged or released from active service under conditions other than dishonorable either after active service of more than 90 days or because of injury in line of duty irrespective of length in service; (3) applies for the benefits of this title within two years after separation from the military or naval forces, or within two years after the official termination of the war. In no event may an application be filed later than five years after such termination of such war.

Q.—Who is eligible to receive readjustment allowance?

A.—A veteran described above who is residing in the United States and is completely unemployed or who is partially unemployed in that services have been performed for less than a full work week and the wages are less than the allowance under this title plus $3.00.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

ROOSEVELT'S DEATH ENDS GREAT ERA

WASHINGTON. — The meaning of the death of Mr. Roosevelt to the country and the world escaped searching examination in the period of shock and mourning.

His law partner Basil O'Connor, in a tribute which was great in its simplicity, said portentous estimates of the changes to be expected might not be safely made for a long time.

Yet the passing was not a shock to those who knew the condition of the President, and in that fact lies the substance of the immediate situation. A week before his death he had lost his taste for food. His general condition had become so weakened, a bad cold might at any time have brought the end which came through hemorrhage of the brain.

He had not been able to work at the White House for many previous weeks but had been at Hyde Park and Warm Springs. Indeed, he had been a sick man for at least 18 months. The greatest of men, while ill, cannot do their best job.

The immediate change, therefore, will go no further than to place a protege of the late President at his desk. The difference of administration at first then will only be personal. Mr. Truman has been saying by every action and word that his guiding inspiration will be the thought:

"I would like to do this as Mr. Roosevelt would have wanted it done."

He went beyond the normally expected announcement promising to keep the Roosevelt policies, and proposed to keep the Roosevelt personnel as well.

No Market Change.

The war-sensitive stock market showed no discouragement at these prospects. There was no selling. National reaction generally shared this interpretation.

As far as the war is concerned, not the slightest change is possible. Our plans were all in the hands of the army and navy, and not only have been long-since adopted, but all near fulfillment.

Some changes in the peace I think will eventuate. I believe Mr. Roosevelt was near some alterations to meet the newly-arising international situation. Whatever these turn out to be, they will not be far from his plans.

His State Secretary Stettinius knows the situation thoroughly, is realistic, and a far greater man than yet recognized (his handling of Argentina successfully gave evidence of this).

Furthermore, the personality of Mr. Truman is bound to inject itself more and more in all decisions, domestic and foreign, as time goes on. In a year or so, necessity may well force him into assumption of policy - originating initiative.

Remember he has nearly four years to serve, and time swiftly covers graves.

Yet I cannot escape the conclusion that this is the end of an era.

Great men, I have found, are like artists. When they produce a great work in a certain style which gains them popularity and fame, they think that is the only way to do things always thereafter. It becomes the only way for them. Writers who make a hit with a certain line of endeavor adopt that style and a change of it later becomes physically impossible for them. Actors who gain success playing a certain part, always thereafter live that part in other roles. They become that person.

Indeed all of us cling to the theories which once proved successful for us, long after they are successful or popular. New minds come along and capture popularity with new methods, and they supplant the old who cannot change.

Depression Era Gone.

Mr. Roosevelt was of the era of depression. He came into the thick of it, devised a successful and popular line of thought, illustrated by the spend - lend theory. Although times changed, he did not. He could not. Human nature would not allow him to discard or greatly alter the ideas which brought him to the top of the world, and he wanted to pursue them internationally as a postwar measure.

Truman is a new man, although also a product of the depression era. Indeed he has been a senator only since 1934. His knowledge is on the subject of war contracts.

Student of Roosevelt.

He has been raised politically to the worship of Mr. Roosevelt's methods, particularly in the political sense.

Yet the basic Roosevelt political principle was to keep his organization and his setup as a one-man unit. He did not even groom his successor.

What kept the government and organization line on straight center was the magic of the Roosevelt name and personality. Can anyone else do that? I doubt it

What George B. Shaw Really Meant Was 'I'

George Bernard Shaw has never been accused of being excessively modest. At a gathering one evening, the English writer was introduced to an admiral. Delighted with this opportunity to get first hand information about matters nautical, Shaw deluged the naval man with questions.

"And now, Mr. Shaw," queried the admiral, "will you answer some literary questions for me?"

"I'd be glad to."

"Can you tell me who is the ablest contemporary playwright?"

"Ay, ay, sir," replied G.B.S.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

On passing church bulletin boards, I usually stop to read the announcements. Here is one that I read with a degree of wonder, Subject, "God's Disappointment." Dr. Smith will deliver the message. That announcement was a bit personal for Dr. Smith. A lot of our preaching must be a disappointment to God. We have the great plan of salvation and a wonderful Savior, and yet we dilly dally around with programs, drives and social reforms, while men and women are being lost by the millions. When a preacher stands before a lost world, if he fails to plead for its salvation, that sermon is truly, "God's Disappointment." Jesus said, "Let your loins be girt and your lamps be lit." If we lift Him up He will do the drawing.

One day I stopped near a church and with one ear I heard the choir singing, "Jesus Savior Pilot Me." Down the street a block away there was a stable where they bought and sold mules and horses, and with my other ear I could hear the horsemen's whip and the salesman's profanity. My friend, we are living in a strange world. On one side we see Zion stirred with a passion to save men, and on the other side we witness the world at its worst. With one ear we hear, "Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," and with the other ear we listen to the roar of battle and the cry of the dying. Truly, there are two forces at work in this world, and in this our day. Good and evil everywhere.

We are all school children and one of our best teachers is none other than Professor Disappointment. He deals with us a sharp voice and with a rough hand, and we complain much as he deals out to us the lessons of life. Professor Disappointment gives to us lessons that are hard to learn, he often uses the road upon our backs, the thorns prick our feet as we walk in search of his knowledge, often does he strip our backs from the luxuries of life, and under his lash we are made to cry, but some day we are going to be able to understand his plans in teaching us to learn the lessons of life. Dear old rough-handed teacher, when we do understand, we will build a monument to thee and crown it with garlands and upon its base we with write, "Blessed be the Memory of Dear old Professor Disappointment." Some day we will understand this teacher.

A group of little girls were invited to attend a church party, and I noted that one little child about eight years of age brought her best doll along. For a while she sat around in the room, nursing her doll. She observed that she was the only girl present who had a doll and she slipped to one side and left the doll and soon was in the midst of their fellowship. Many a time at Church gatherings have I seen grown ups who would bring their denominational dolls along and they would sit to themselves and nurse their own faith, having nothing to do with other Christians. We do well in this great Christian fellowship that is created by the different churches to leave off the hugging of our own dolls, and join in with others in one great unity of fellowship.

KANSAS CAPITOL

On the wall of the conference room in the State Capitol at Topeka, Kansas, is a painting of a covered wagon drawn by oxen with the inscription: "They crossed the prairie as of old the pilgrims crossed the sea, to make the West, as they the East, the homestead of the free." To keep all America the homestead of the free today, service men cross seas to the west and east and Americans at home buy War Bonds. This great Kansas emblem of liberty, costing $3,200,000, was started after the site was chosen by a vote of the people in 1866. The ground on which it stands was donated in 1862 for that purpose by C. K. Holliday, president of the Topeka Association.

FORT RALEIGH

Seven English expeditions invaded Roanoke Island between 1584 and 1591. Fort Raleigh blockhouse marks the site of the first English settlement in America. Amadas and Barlow took possession of the continent for Sir Walter Raleigh there July 1, 1584. It's wide open shore now, too. But for the effective patrolling of U. S. submarines, planes and ships—and the Coast Guard shore patrols—enemy landing parties could seize beachheads in this war. War Bond funds help supply those patrols with dependable weapons.

the taxi service here. They consist of a two-wheel cart pulled by a pony. The cost of a one hour ride used to be about one peso, but now they seem to be charging about five or six pesos.

There are watermelons and more watermelons here. We cut a couple the other night and they were indeed delicious. There are a few places to eat in the city but no one will catch me eating in any of them until they are passed by our medical doctors.

This is all for now. Got lots of letters to write. I'll write again soon and let you know more about the place and how I'm liking it and, etc. Excuse all the mistakes, but I'm not use to a typewriter like this one.

ARRIVES IN STATES FROM HOSPITAL IN HAWAII

Mrs. Edgar Littlejohn was surprised and delighted Tuesday when she received a telephone call from her son 1st Lt. J. L. Littlejohn, who arrived in San Francisco, Calif, Monday. Lt Littlejohn has been in a hospital in Hawaii since January 16th and has been overseas 21 months. He will now be stationed in the States where he will be assigned to another hospital for furthr hospitalization.

Upon arrival in San Francisco Monday, Lt Littlejohn telephoned his wife and young son who are in Murray, Ky. He has never seen the baby but looks forward to a reunion with his family soon.

A recent letter from my brother, T-5 Arthur Cox, Jr., who is with the First Army in Germany, says that he is now in a hospital suffering from a fractured foot. "Nothing serious," he says, "I'll be out again in a few days, but until then, I'll have plenty of time to write you all."

Bud also says that he might be able to see us in two months, and I'm sure hoping that he is right, 'cause that is one guy that I'm anxious to see.' "

He has been overseas eighteen months.

Cpl Wilson E Maddox is now assigned to an Air Service Squadron at Oklahoma City Air Technical Service Command, Tinker Field.

Cpl. Maddox is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen D. Payton of this city. His wife resides in Clanton also.

Pvt. Jessie Cox, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Cox, arrived in New York Saturday, April 28, after the German Prison Camp, where he had been a prisoner for 108 days, was liberated by the Yanks.

He is expected in Clanton this week where he will spend some time with his parents, wife and daughter.

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

VOLUMN XXIII — CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1945 — NUMBER 19

CHILTON COUNTY TO HAVE FLAG RAISING CEREMONY FOR 7TH WAR LOAN WORK

Monday, May 14th, at 12 noon a wounded soldier will bring to Clanton the Seventh War Loan Banner. This Banner is to be raised to full mast in Chilton County in recognition of the fact that we have made our "E" Bond quota. Remember? The Mighty 7th in 7 Days.

This is a nation wide program and a similar banner will be carried at the same time to every County in the nation. The Flag will be raised to half-mast in counties that have not made their quota and it will be gradually heightened as the goal is approached. But we are glad in Chilton that it will go to the top the first day.

Home Bands To Play

The Jemison High School and C. C. H. S. Bards will present a program beginning at 11:30 and lasting until 12:30.

The program will also consist of other interesting features such as escorting the wounded soldier into town,—welcome address—presentation of the flag by the soldier—introductions of the school children who earned the titles of 4 and 5 star generals in the 7th War Loan Drive in Chilton County.

You will enjoy this program. It is not a bond selling rally but a celebration of Chilton County Victory in making "The Mighty Seventh In 7 Days."

Harp and Harmony Singing Convention

The old Harp and Harmony singers met with Highland Baptist church on last Sunday May 6th. The singing was called to order by the Chairman Bro. Cleve Jackson from Sylacauga Prayer by T. W. Billingsley. Directors for the day directing three songs each.

Brother Marvin Jackson, Roy Jackson, W. B. Cooper, S. A. Henley, Bro Acres from Sylacauga, Bro Becket from Sylacauga, J. W. Hayes from Clanton, L. A. Brown from Sylacauga, Mrs. Bates from Selma, Mrs. Ruth Henley, Mrs. Pauline Lecroy, Mrs. Irene Headley.

Special songs were sung for the memorial hour, directed by Cleve Jackson, J. W. Hayes, Marvin Jackson. Prayer was offered by Bro. S. A. Henley for the boys in the armed service on the battle fronts.

We the convention want to extend our sincere thanks to Highland Community for their hospitality shown us in this session of the singing convention.—Lawrence Hayes, Secretary.

Refuge Changes Date Of Annual Singing To May 20th

Editor Chilton County News:

Will you please allow space to announce to the public a recent change in the date of our annual singing at Refuge Baptist Church?

It will be recalled that a former and recent announcement is to the effect that our singing would convene on the regular date, the third Sunday in May. It was decided in regular conference on Sunday, May 6th, that we would consolidate our annual singing and Father's Day or homecoming into one annual affair. Heretofore, we have been holding our annual singing on the third Sunday in May and our home-coming on the third Sunday in June. Hereafter, we will combine the two services into one on the last mentioned date above. Therefore, it will be our annual singing and home-coming combined on the third Sunday in June.

It was an easy change since we were conscious of the fact that Corinth Baptist Church, which is not far away, holds their annual singing on the third Sunday in May also. It is sometimes a problem to keep off the dates of our neighboring churches—hence, one great reason for the change. Another reason for the change was because of having two annual occasions close together.

It is indeed a short notice of a change in our services, but we are asking the cooperation of our friends in this matter.—Reporter Refuge Baptist Church.

NOTICE COAL

Those who have not signed up a Consumer Declaration card for their coal for this winter can sign up at Wingard Bros. Store on May 14th and 15th I will be there with the blanks on the above days—W. B. Crowe.

CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH

To All Members and Friends of Concord Baptist Church:

We have said a great deal about building a new church at Concord, and so far we have done nothing else about it. We decided at church last Sunday to set aside the third Sunday in June as the day to begin to bring in the cash that it takes to build churches. We have a few thousand dollars in sight that will be brought in that day and we want to give you an opportunity to bring yours in. Let us make that a great day. Begin now to make your plans to do worth for our Master on that day.

Sincerely,
R. W. STUCKEY, Pastor.

E. J. And Pauline Klinner Win Honors At Fat Stock Show

GRAND AND RESERVE CHAMPION OWNED BY BROTHER - SISTER

Chilton County 4-H Club boys and girls have set an enviable record in the Birmingham Fat Stock Show. Not only did a Chilton County boy and girl get the coveted honor of having both Grand and Reserve Champion of the Show, but they showed many of the top animals of the show, including the Champion of the Shorthorn Division.

It was E. J. and Pauline Klinner of Maplesville that had the thrill of seeing their animals judged as Grand Champion and Reserve Champion of the Show. This is an honor that falls to very few showmen and for both honors to be shared by brother and sister was an unusual climax.

To Perry Sorrell of Cooper went the honor of showing the Champion Shorthorn. Perry presented an animal that stood well above any of the other contestants' animals in every respect.

To both E. J. and Perry went the award for the best animal of the Augus and Shorthorn breed. This award is a trip to the National 4-H Club Congress and National 4-H Club Fat Stock Show in Chicago with all expenses paid.

Perhaps one of the deepest satisfactions came in seeing Chilton County boys and girls present a group of animals that sold for some of the high est prices given in the show. The majority of the animals were sold for prices ranging from 30c to 36.5c per pound.

The Chilton County 4-H Beef Club has done an outstanding job and have received acclaim that was justly merited. No other group of boys and girls have ever entered a show ring with any better group of animals.

To the boys and girls listed below of the Chilton County 4-H Beef Club, we of the Extension Service as well as all of Chilton County, extend to you our congratulations on carrying such an excellent job in feeding and showing your animals:

COMING TO CLANTON THIS THURSDAY NIGHT

The Jenkins and Falkner families in a double header Concert at the First Assembly of God Church on this Thursday night, May 10th at 8 o'clock.

These Gospel singers are from Birmingham and are heard over the radio every week. Their intertainment is clean, wholesome and inspirational. Don't miss it. Admission 40 and 25c.

A long-handled dustpan works as well as a short-handled one and may save many backaches.

Pre-School Children To Get Physical Check-up

To the parents of the County who anticipate having their children enter the first grade in school next year: We shall meet the following schedule in order to give all preschool children a physical examination so that any defects found may be corrected before they enter school. Any child with defective vision or hearing or mal-nutrition or any other physical defects is at a marked disadvantage trying to compete with those in his grade who are free of defects.

We will be glad to have the parents present at the examination and also at this time we shall offer protection against diphtheria, smallpox and typhoid fever.

For the betterment of the first grade and the improvement of the defective children, I am very sincerely yours,

E. M. MOORE, M. D.
County Health Officer.

ALL-DAY SINGING AT CORINTH

There will be an all-day singing at Corinth Church the third Sunday in May, which will be May 20th.

We invite all singers to come and be with us and enjoy a day of good singing.—Vallie Howard.

CARD OF THANKS

No words can express our appreciation for the sympathy and care given us in the sickness and death of our wife and mother, Mrs. Eva Esco.

Especially do we thank our friends and neighbors, all of the good Church members of Clanton who so unselfishly came to us in our bereavement. May God's richest blessings be with each of you.—O. N. Esco, Opal Acton.

A HERITAGE WE GUARD

Tonight, the sound, motion picture, "A Heritage We Guard," will be shown at Pleasant Grove. This interesting picture of wild animals in their native homes brings us close enough to see how they protect and feed their young, the dangers they meet and the good they do. Every one is invited to see the picture in any of the following places:

Pleasant Grove—Thursday, May 10.
Mountain Springs—Friday, May 11.
Mt. Pleasant School—Saturday, May 12th.
Thorsby United Church — Sunday, May 13th.
Eastview—Monday, May 14th.

V-E DAY PROCLAIMED JAPAN NEXT SAYS TRUMAN

PRAYER SERVICES AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH ON V-E DAY

President Truman proclaimed defeat of a crushed Germany Tuesday and served notice on Japan that her doom was sealed.

Exactly 11 months and two days after General Eisenhower's armies stormed into France to liberate a Nazi dominated Europe, Germany bowed to the most overwhelming defeat ever inflicted upon a nation.

In a special message to Allied processors of war, Gen. Eisenhower said they must remain where they are for the present, but their return home would be made as soon and speedily as possible.

In Clanton stores and offices closed all-day Wednesday.

Tuesday morning, V-E Day, at 10 o'clock at the First Baptist Church in Clanton, a most impressive Prayer Service was held conducted by Rev. Roswell Owens. This was a service of Thanksgiving and praise to God for the victory that has been won in Europe and prayers from everyone that He would help bring peace and victory in the Pacific soon.

Sunday, May 13th, has been proclaimed by the President, as a day of prayer throughout the nation.

Fighting in Germany has ceased, her guns are at rest, her U-Boats have been ordered into the nearest Allied port to give up.

Next comes Japan.

Recreation School Will Be Held Sept. 17-21

The Chilton County Board of Education has announced the sponsorship of a week of recreational instruction during the week of September 17-21 This first school of recreation to be held in the county is open to any church worker, club leader, teacher parent, or to any other adult particularly interested in community recreation. At the end of the school, a certificate will be awarded to each person attending the required ten hours. The Board will pay for a highly trained worker from The National Recreational Association and for other expenses incurred during the week

Workers with young people will find the methods taught in this school especially beneficial in their club church and school recreational programs. Those who have attended this school in Montgomery and in other cities report that the information they acquired there has been of great help in planning for parties, socials club meetings, dinners, banquets and for any other activity in which people need even a few minutes of recreation

Membership in the school will be limited to 200 people. Those interested are urged to turn in their names at once to one of the following: Mr. D. P. Culp, director of the recreational school; Mr. Patterson Hicks, chairman of general arrangements; Miss Elsie Schurter, secretary; and Miss Lillian McKee, chairman of registration. All heads of organzations who wish to send representatives to the school are requested to turn in the names of their groups with the names of their delegates to any one of the above four people.

AE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The regular Second Sabbath service will be held in this church at 11 a. m. The Sabbath School will meet at 10 a. m.: Mr. Robert Oglesby is the Supt.

The pastor expects to reach Clanton during Friday, and he will be glad to know of any sick among our people. The phone number in Clanton is 23-J.

All services in this church are open to anyone who will worship with us. You will find a welcome.

UNITED CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, THORSBY

In accordance with the request of our President we will unite in the Victory Worship Service at 11:00 a.m. "Judgment Unto Victory" will be the text of the sermon. All who are physically able should take part in this service.

Following the young people's meeting Sunday night there will be a brief evening worship before showing the picture: "A Heritage We Guard."

EASTVIEW CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH NEWS

Every one is invited to take part in the worship service at 2:30 p.m. The kind of service which we have will be determined by a vote of those present. Please help to remind folks about the motion picture which will be shown at Eastview on Monday night.

A BARBECUE

There will be a barbecue at Kingston Methodist Church in Autauga County on the Prattville and Clanton Road about six miles from White City on May 16th, beginning at 5:00 o'clock, and lasting until 9:30 o'clock. Plates are one dollar. Proceeds go to rebuilding the church.

A good way to use left over egg yolks is to poach them in boiling water, then drain, cool, push through a sieve and use as a garnish for salads.

Thorsby Had V-E Day Program

V-E Day was celebrated Monday night in Thorsby. The citizens assembled in the high school building along their families and a picnic supper. There was feasting and singing, praying and planning. The Star Spangled Banner, God Bless America, Home o the Range and Dixie. Happy birthday was sung for Mr. Goddard who was celebrating his 73rd birthday. She said to the crowd, she "would always remember this 73rd V-E Day."

The Boy Scouts in their uniforms marched with the flag and all at attention, pledged allegiance to the flag. At a short session of the Civic Club, plans were made to launch a campaign for a community house to be built as a memorial to the service men.

A contest for queen of the day was concluded. Out of six contestants Muril Franklin became Miss Thorsby, 1945. The ceremony was climaxed by Mayor Maddox crowning the queen. After long and loud ringing of the school bell, every one hurried home ahead of a thunder storm.

ENTERPRISE SCHOOL

The Enterprise Jr. III Class will present their annual Class Play in the school auditorium, on Friday night, May 11th, 1945, at 8 o'clock. This is a three act comedy called "No Bride For The Groom".

The public is cordially invited to attend. The proceeds will be used for the benefit of the school.—Lillian Collins, Class Reporter.

Passing of Dictators Climaxes Downfall of Axis in Europe; Map Swing to One-Front War

EUROPE:
Inevitable Ends

Accursed outside of his own country, with no hope of refuge as Allied armies closed on Germany's final redoubts, Adolf Hitler reportedly died amid the ruin of his own dreams, following his one-time partner, Benito Mussolini, in death by three days.

Adolf Hitler

A "has - been" for two years, Mussolini's death possessed none of the import of Hitler's although even his was tempered by the fact that the breakdown of the German army largely counteracted any fanatical resolutions he might have had to carry on the war.

Immediate effect of Hitler's death was to bring about the formation of a German government under Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz less offensive to the Allies at a time when peace negotiations were proceeding. Though Nazi, Doenitz principally has concerned himself with naval affairs, thus avoiding any of the stigma associated with the party's to surround himself with similar prominent men, who, at least, pretended to serve their country as Germans rather than as Nazis.

Bitter Cup

Reportedly dying with his boots on in the once grandiose, now rubbled, reichschancellory in Berlin where he was supposed to have directed the city's defenses through its fatal stand, Hitler did not pass on until he had seen his own greater reich split to pieces by advancing Allied armies.

Berlin itself was a shambles as the fuehrer died, with that once proud German capital lying in a ruin of masonry and twisted girders as the Russians took over street after street in bitter house to house fighting, with Nazi fanatics standing true to Hitler's orders to resist to the last.

To the north, Russian units were racing westward across the Baltic coast to clean up a formidable defensive pocket with British and American troops advancing eastward. Due west of Berlin, U. S. and Russ forces already had solidly linked up, while to the south, French and Yank columns drove deep into the Bavarian Alps and raced through Austria for another junction with Red troops, which would not only seal that country's fate but also forge a ring of steel around Czechoslovakia.

That was the picture of Germany that lay before Adolf Hitler as he went down fighting "against Boshevism."

Il Duce Philosophizes

"No tree reaches the sky"—thus spoke bald, stocky, bull-necked Benito Mussolini before his summary execution by Italian Partisans in northern Italy that touched off a wave of killings of ex-fascists, which prompted Allied officials to call a halt to spare the country a blood-bath.

Benito Mussolini

Captured with his dark and comely 25 - year - old mistress and neo-fascist accomplices while attempting to flee to Switzerland, the 61-year-old ex-dictator, who had ruled his country high-handedly for 20 years, was shot in the back shortly before Axis armies in Italy surrendered to Lt.-Gen. Mark Clark.

Looking back upon the events of this war the Duce said: "Stalin is a great man — the greatest man indeed—but Roosevelt is really lucky. Europe may still be saved if the Anglo - Americans erect a barrier against the onrushing Russian hordes."

PACIFIC:
Counter-Point

Ack-ack flew like hail at attacking Jap planes, and, being struck, they plummeted to earth in smoke and flame.

Aground, U. S. artillery hammered at the enemy's staunch defenses before the capital of Naha, and Yanks stayed close to the earth in pressing their advance against the strongly entrenched foe as bullets flew.

On all of southern Okinawa this was war—hard, relentless, merciless war. But like all war, there was the tempering touch of humanity under the brutal crust. For, under a shinto shrine back of the front, a U. S. Mormon chaplain married a captured Japanese officer and an Okinawan nurse upon their request. Standing by without indulging in any demonstration were 200 American soldiers.

WAR PRODUCTION:
V-E Plans

Maintenance of some controls to assure continued critical production for the war against Japan and relaxation of others to permit the limited resumption of civilian output are scheduled for effect after V-E Day to adjust the country to a one-front conflict, government officials disclosed.

To help relieve the shock of such an adjustment, it was revealed, cutbacks already are being made in war production, with the tempo expected to be speeded up in the coming months.

Even with Germany's defeat, war production will continue to dominate American industry, with military output for the first year after VE Day estimated at 48 billion dollars, 14 per cent less than the program for a two-front war. As a result, critical materials will have to be controlled to channel them into war production, and manpower regulations will have to be retained to assure an adequate labor supply.

With plants reconverted to civilian production expected to take up most of labor slack after V-E Day, War Manpower commission officials looked to a continued pressing employment situation. In tight labor areas, the WMC plans to continue the referral of workers to critical industry and require certificates of availability for job changes; maintain the 48-hour week with higher pay to attract workers from other sections, and to rate industries according to their importance in establishing priorities for hiring people.

The lumber, textile and rubber industries are among those which will receive a high rating, since supplies of these materials will remain short long after V-E Day and production will be necessary not only for the Pacific war but also for such civilian enterprises as building, crating and packaging.

To help take up the employment slack upon the reduction in war production, the so-called "spot" authorization program for civilian output will be restored, with plants showing idle machinery and workers permitted to return to peacetime manufacture. Altogether, 700 million dollars of such work has already been authorized through 1945.

NATIONAL INCOME:

Total income payments to individuals in the United States rose in 1944 for the sixth consecutive year and reached the record high figure of $156,794,000,000.

Income payments from every source reached new high records last year with the exception of income from interest and dividends. Income from interest and dividends, amounting to $11,195,000,000 in 1944, was larger, however, than in any preceding year since 1930.

For Farm

The wartime expansion in the farmers' income in 1944 was at a much slower rate than in either of the two preceding years. The increase last year was practically offset by the rise in the prices of goods which the farmers bought. Consequently, the farmers' purchasing power index (1929 equals 100) showed only a negligible increase to 162.9 in 1944 from 162.7 in 1943, after having advanced from the prewar level of 90.5 in 1938.

COAL PRICES:
New Hike

Because of OPA approval of soft coal operators' petitions for price increases to help defray some of the cost of the new miners' contract, producers will be allowed to boost prices an average of 16 cents a ton, with consequential small percentage increases in retail ceilings.

By granting an average price increase of 16 cents per ton while having the operators themselves bear an additional 5 cents of cost to cover the added expenses of the new contract, the government followed the policy laid down in 1943 of allowing the companies a profit margin equal to 1942 or 15 cents a ton.

Signed after 42 days of negotiation, the new contract awards the average miner 81 cents a day more in take-home pay by requiring full payment for underground travel time; calls for higher hourly wages for second and third shifts, and also raises vacation pay.

Meanwhile, the government strove for settlement of a new hard coal contract to prevent extended disruption of anthracite output as negotiations between operators and miners broke down and work virtually ceased in the principal producing state of Pennsylvania.

SAN FRANCISCO:
Turn Tables

Having dominated the early stages of the San Francisco postwar security parley of the United Nations, Russia's bristly V. M. Molotov was forced to give ground under the combined pressure of the U. S. and Britain and the South American states.

But before Molotov had been scored, the Russian Foreign Commissar had succeeded in dividing up the chairmanship of the conference assembly among the U. S., Britain, Russia and China instead of reposing it in U. S. hands as ordained by diplomatic custom, and had obtained three votes for the Reds at both San Francisco and in the future postwar organization.

Molotov was rebuffed on two counts: Over Russian objections, the conference agreed to the seating of Argentina upon the South American states' contention that the country had renounced its Axis sympathies and joined the inter-American defense systems, and then the delegates refused to recognize the Moscow-sponsored Polish provisional government unless broadened by inclusion of other than Communist elements.

EUROPEAN CROPS:
Bleak Outlook

With the prolonged German resistance this spring retarding seasonal plantings and adding to smaller acreages seeded last fall because of bad weather and abandonment of land in areas of military operations, 1945 harvests in liberated countries are expected to drop considerably below previous years. As a result, extensive overseas food shipments may be needed to provide relief.

Further aggravating the situation, it is said, is the breakdown of the German system of collecting surplus stocks from farmers for distribution to urban centers. With provisional governments slow in devising a distributive system, many farmers have hoarded excess supplies or sold them at fancy prices in the black market.

Pitching in to help relieve the critical European food situation, the North Dakota Farmers Union turned over 338,000 red ration points to the OPA for purchase of meat and butter for starving civilians.

Indicative of the already pressing food situation in many cities of liberated countries, civilians have been restricted to diets with an energy value of 1,500 calories a day compared to an average of 3,000 in America in 1944.

LOCKER RAIDS:
Seek-Excess Meat

With the meat supply growing tighter, OPA officials in the Chicago Ill., area moved against hoarded city locker holdings in an effort to get thousands of pounds of beef, etc., circulating in regular distributive channels.

Though the right of its course of action was challenged, OPA endeavored to have locker holders supply information as to how much meat they had and how they secured it, with those with an excess required to give up red points, sell it or turn it over to the agency.

With many locker holders swearing they owned farms, possessed interests in them, or were related to farmers, Attorney Harry Adler declared that under OPA order No. 16 a producer could store any quantity of meat, and up to 450 pounds could be loaned under condition it was repaid in six months and no cash was involved in the transaction.

FRANCE:
Political Straw

Polling nearly 25 per cent of an estimated vote of 18,000,000, the Communists displayed unexpected strength in France's recent municipal elections and indicated advances made by the party following its aggressive activity during the liberation period. As a result of the balloting, the Reds will control all important cities, including Paris, Lyon Bordeaux, Marseilles, Toulouse and Rennes.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—There is something significant, I believe, in the fact that this world conference which hopes to plot a happier course for the future of the world is being held at the Golden Gate. I can't help contrasting the atmosphere with that which enveloped the gathering on the banks of the Seine 26 years ago, which I also covered.

I think there is much more hope for success for this gathering than there was for the Paris conference two decades ago, although most of us who crowded into its opening session on the Quai d'Orsay in Paris on a sunny January day in 1919, were well supplied with hope, too.

I think the meeting place was well chosen and if the agenda becomes unfinished business, it might well be concluded on the same spot where the clean fog sweeps in from the Pacific whose wide waters unite the east and the west.

There still lingers on California's shores the memory of its multifold historical national contacts. It was here in "Drake's Bay" that the famous English explorer is said to have stopped to repair his ship. I say was Drake's bay for later, Cermeno, the Spaniard, on a voyage from Manila in 1595, was shipwrecked in the same body of water and gave it its present name of San Francisco bay. The Franciscan missionaries built missions a muleday's journey apart from southern to northern California. The sword followed the cross and Portola's Spanish soldiers fought their way up to what is still called the Praesidio, the very year the American nation was born.

Less definite are the records of the czar's explorers but the "Russian river" just north of here remains a flowing memento of their early visits.

Less distinguished Chinese and Japanese came and raised their problems; great settlements of Hindus remain in the state and colonies of Swiss and Italians toil among vineyards reproducing the products of their homelands.

Seek to Build On Firm Ground

As I write these lines two things appear as near certainties as certainties exist in this kaleidoscopic world. The United Nations are sincere in the hope of erecting some sort of structure which, if it is humanly possible to do so, can provide a place for the shelter, care and feeding of the dove of peace. A shadowy and almost paradoxical corollary of this statement is the frank acknowledgment that probably one desideratum primum omnium of only one of the great powers is the international organization itself. What Russia and Britain want, first of all, is an inner citadel girded by strong mutually protective alliances. The rest of the structure is, for them, largely window dressing. Nevertheless, to obtain cooperation among the strong few, they are willing to include the weaker many.

The second thing which I think even at this juncture can be predicted is that no matter how harmonious the building of this new temple of hope may be, the final edifice will be constructed on such a broad foundation and with such wide portals, that it will not confine its tenants to any very strict restraint of action. There will be plenty of room to turn around in it, in case some of the occupants feel they don't want to go in exactly the same direction as their fellows. This is not a cynical conclusion—it is simply the result of a practical desire not to put anything in the way of getting something started. The American delegation realizes that.

An agreement on major questions which could be decided following the meeting of Stettinius, Molotov and Eden was announced by the delegation before we left Washington, which meant that Senator Vandenberg was satisfied that the wording of the final agreement which the Americans would accept contained enough elasticity to provide an "escape clause." This assures the senate and the American people that this nation will not be bound, even by implication, to support injustices perpetrated by other nations, past or present.

Truman Understands Congress' Viewpoint

With Harry Truman in the White House the position of the delegation has been strengthened by his announcement that he would not attend the meeting in person, but would back up his delegates from his desk "where he belonged." There are several other things that augur well for harmony. The senate knows that Mr. Truman is not personally committed in any way to Britain or Russia since he did not participate in any of the talks of the Big Three; they noted his remark that Foreign Commissar Molotov when he arrived in this country would pay his respects to the President of the United States "as he should." This time the mountain had come to Mahomet, not the reverse.

Lastly, there is the very potent fact that President Truman was Senator Truman for a long while. He knows the legislative viewpoint and, to know the legislative viewpoint, not academically as an outside observer, but as a long-time possessor of that viewpoint, is of great practical importance. Remember the frequent controversies between the administration and congress in the past few years. Note, likewise, two of the outstanding successes in obtaining cooperation between the executive and the legislative branches: Cordell Hull and James Byrnes, both former members of congress.

So much for the hope for domestic harmony. Now consider the difference between the position of the United States in 1919 and the United States in 1945.

Then, it is true, our entry into the war made victory possible. But now we have taken over the major burden of the fighting and in so doing have become the most powerful country in the world and of all the powerful countries, the one which emerges with its military resources least impaired—by far the most powerful in terms of army, navy and war material and wealth.

On the whole I think it is fair to report a general feeling of optimism on the part of the American delegation and at least a feeling on the part of other delegates I have met, of willingness to try to justify that optimism.

A G.I. President

It is a long time since we have had an ex-soldier in the White House. President Truman is the first veteran of World War I to accept the mansion.

As you know he broadcast to the troops overseas soon after he addressed congress. Naturally the movie-cameras and the sound-track boys were there. So were the army photographers. But the Big Boys get the priorities at such shows. The newsreels, the top-flight magazines and the rest. The boys in uniform were pushed back. They didn't belong.

As a result they got a sad side shot that was strictly ng.

So the officer in charge went up and asked if he could have a retake. "Certainly," (or words to that effect since we don't quote Presidents) said President Truman. "Go ahead, we'll do the whole thing over."

Well, army pictorial does things right. It has some of the best Hollywood technical men in uniform. It took a long time to get just the right lighting. So an official came up and said:

"You have just ten minutes more."

Up spoke the captain: "Do you want the President taken right or wrong?"

The President broke in: "Take all night if you want to." (or, as I said, words to that effect). This picture was for the G.I.s.

And so they fiddled and fooled until they had the lights right, until they had everything just right.

And then the President went ahead and did his speech over again.

It is one of the best action shots taken in the White House.

But you won't see it. It was just for the G.I.s.

Breakfast Club Appeals To Millions of Air Fans

Audiences and Events Make Program of Ever Increasing Interest

By W. J. DRYDEN
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Radio stations and networks throughout the country revised their programs, cancelled outright or drastically revised all commercial broadcasts, when word was received of the death of President Roosevelt. Typical of programs undergoing complete revision was the Breakfast Club's broadcast on which Don McNeill, master of ceremony, paid tribute to the president:

"One of the qualities about Mr. Roosevelt that I always admired," said McNeill, "was his sense of humor. In the tremendous job in which he gave his life he needed a sense of humor for balance. In fact, if he could speak to us now, he might say something like this: 'Never mind the flowery language about me — when my time had come the Lord knew I was not an indispensable man, so get back in there and finish off the job in a hurry, and make a peace so binding, so secure, that this may never happen again. Get back to the days when you can quit worrying about your loved ones and when you can laugh and smile. Your face looks so much better that way.'"

Radio's favorite daytime variety show, the Breakfast Club, owes its popularity to its ardent fans in every city, hamlet and nearly every farm in America. It has been adopted and considered as a part of rural America. By making an appeal to those in rural districts as well as in metropolitan areas, it proved that a morning hour variety show could achieve immense popularity. Scripts have been entirely dispensed with and the cast depends on native wit rather than on gag writers.

Like the program following President Roosevelt's death, each program is created by circumstances and the audience itself. There is no monotony, for the program is life itself, the life as played by its many fans. They create the program, play the parts, give the questions and answers.

Audience's Contributions.

There are other reasons for this radio program clicking. Don McNeill, the genial m.c. of the program, which is carried over Blue Network stations of the American Broadcasting company, would say that the audience's contributions are what makes for the remarkable success of the program.

Many fans find other reasons. Some 875,000 of them applied for charter membership in the club in one week.

Each program from Monday through Saturday at 8 a.m. will find 600 fans watching the program. Hundreds are turned away daily from the Chicago studios where the broadcast originates. Tickets are now required two weeks in advance. These people come from all the states in the union. They come to see Don McNeill, who has served as master of ceremonies on more network broadcasts than any other man, woman or child in radio. He has spent more than 4,000 hours before the microphone, and still gains in popularity.

They come to see Nancy Martin, the singing schoolma'm, or songster Marion Mann. They come to see Sam Cowling, the heckler, or Ed Ballatine, the orchestra director, or Ray Grant's Vagabonds.

They come to see Fran Allison's characterizations of genial, gossipy, gauche "Aunt Fanny," which are so realistic that Fran's mother, back in Iowa, is in a perpetual dither for fear that kinfolk might be offended. They come to make the program, their program.

Memory and inspiration time on the broadcast has reached the heartstrings of the Breakfast Club's fans. The prayer and impromptu assignments for D-Day will go down in radio as a classic of the year.

When the program was started 12 years ago, no visitors were allowed. This rule was first broken in 1937, in response to a letter from a hopelessly tubercular marine, who wrote that seeing a performance of the club was chief among the things he wanted to do before his final hour. In 1938, the doors were thrown open to all comers. Since then half a million people have seen the program and watched the "gang" go through their paces.

The program has attracted national attention in its effective war work. They are given credit for having started the waste paper salvage drive in the United States. They focused national attention on the crucial manpower shortage in war industries — and early in the war received the government's thanks for this work. At one bond auction McNeill sold $1,114,000 worth of war bonds at the swank Winnetka district. For this he received a treasury citation.

M.c. Don McNeill is an honorary sergeant major at Fort Sheridan and a reserve recruiting official in the marines. He was recently awarded the degree of Doctor of Frustration by the Boswell institute. His greatest honor, however, he says, is the thousands of letters received from his fans.

The host of the Breakfast Club was born in Galena, Ill., December 23, 1907. That should make him 38 years old, but he insists that he is only 28. Several years later the McNeill family moved to Sheboygan, Wisc., where Don attended high school. There is no record of any previous schooling. He gained fame in high school by winning a fly-swatting contest. In 1925, he found his way to Milwaukee and enrolled in the college of journalism at Marquette university, where he edited the student newspaper and tooted a snazzy saxophone. His personal representative, Jimmy Bennett, says that the success of both ventures can be determined by the fact that he is no longer employed as a tooter of saxophones or a newspaper editor.

In 1928 he secured a job on a Milwaukee radio station, announcing programs, directing programs, riding gain in the control room, rounding up guest speakers, editing the station's publicity releases and answering the telephone. He was paid $10 a week, which was later increased to $15 a week. When he recently signed a new five-year contract with the Blue Network, it was at a figure slighly above what he was getting at Milwaukee.

After receiving his Ph.B degree he decamped to Louisville, where he became one of the Two Professors, a comedy team over WHAS. In 1933 he went to Chicago, took over the not-too-well-known Pepper Pot program and developed the present Breakfast Club.

Ever since Pearl Harbor, the Breakfast club calendar has been crowded with extra - curricular activities. The entire cast has appeared before hospitals and camps. They have appeared at the Great Lakes training station on several occasions.

When D-Day broke, Don McNeill was on the way to the studio. He cleared the way for the omission of commercials, had patriotic music played and offered up a prayer. The order was to stand by for news flashes and the prayer, which was written 15 minutes before air time.

When he was a Mack Sennett star, about 29 years ago, Chester Conklin used to pick up a youngster who had no car and drive him to the studio; the lad worked for $5 a day, with a three-day-a-week guarantee. His name was Eddie Sutherland, and, as director of RKO's "Having Wonderful Crime," he was delighted when he found a role suited to Conklin, and signed him.

When George Marshall, director of "Murder, He Says," started in pictures 33 years ago, he shared a room with two other $3-per-day actors. But they all changed professions—the others were William Seiter and Frank Lloyd, also directors, and good ones.

Gig Young, the promising young actor who took a "rain check" with Warner Bros. for duty with the coast guard in the South Pacific, came back on furlough and added his bit to the list of how-small-the-world-is stories. He met a marine officer named Obringer on Guadalcanal, and asked him if he knew Roy Obringer of Warners' legal department. "Sure," said the other. "He's my father."

Harriet O'Rourke, soprano soloist of "Steel Horizons," has a parrot, Sammy, who's the envy of her singing friends. Sammy practices right along with Harriet, and has developed a good ear for music—she says he squawks whenever she makes a mistake.

What Charles Boyer did for the movies, Jerry Wayne, star of his own show on the Blue, will do for the stage. He'll appear with Joan Roberts in a new musical, "Marinka," a musical version of the film, "Mayerling," in the role of "Prince Rudolph."

It's becoming an old story to Dinah Shore, this business of being named the No. 1 radio songstress of the nation, in a newspaper poll. So far this season it's happened 11 times—but to Dinah it's still pretty thrilling.

Probably the most carefully guarded plot in Hollywood was that of "Notorious," Ingrid Bergman's picture, which Alfred Hitchcock will direct for David O. Selznick. Hitchcock and Ben Hecht wrote most of the story in a hotel room in New York. Only they and Selznick knew for some time what sort of role Miss Bergman would play.

Among the many accomplishments of Felix Mills, band leader on "The Man Called X"—the summer replacement for the Bob Hope show—is the ability to play every instrument in the band. He can also read music upside down—though just why, he can't say.

Household Hints

Used crankcase oil may be used to paint fences and gates. Paint only during dry weather.

By cooking in dishes that you can bring right to the table, food will stay hot longer and you will save yourself dishwashing.

To avoid fatigue while you are ironing or doing any work where you remain long in one spot, stand on a heavy rug or rubber mat.

Eggs which are very cold separate more easily. Break them as soon as they come out of the ice box if the yolks and whites are to be used separately.

Squeeze a little lemon juice through the meat grinder before grinding dates, figs, prunes or raisins and they will leave the chopper more readily.

When making pancakes, here is a useful tip: Rub a little salt over the frying-pan when it is hot. The batter will not stick then.

Dusting with talcum or cornstarch will help keep rubber gloves from sticking together on the inside. The powder is dusted both on the inside and on the outside. This should be done to any rubber material that lies folded.

When opening a can of paint, jab two holes on either side of the can near the top. Stretch a wire through the holes and it can then be used to remove excess paint from the brush without causing the paint to harden on the sides of the can.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

In 1942, our first year at war, 4½% of the rubber consumed in the U. S. was synthetic; in 1943, 35%, and in 1944 80%. At the present time, more than 85% is synthetic.

The synthetic rubber industry is using soap at the rate of 100,000,000 pounds a year—enough to cover the needs of the population of Chicago for one year.

A new kind of synthetic rubber has been developed from lactic acid (buttermilk).

The B. F. Goodrich Company has made experimental tires of rubber produced from kok-saghyz, the Russian dandelion.

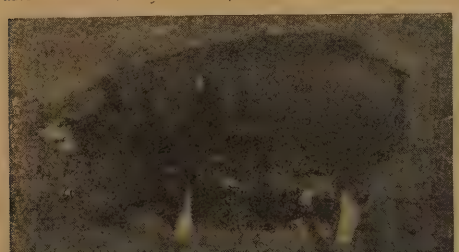
Hybrid Hogs Produce Super Meat

Development of a super meat yielding hybrid hog by the application of the same inbreeding methods that produced hybrid corn is the goal of farm authorities.

Thirteen state experiment stations are cooperating in what is known as the Regional Swine Breeding laboratory, George A. Montgomery writes in Capper's Farmer. They are inbreeding some of the more popular breeds with the hope of establishing superior types. In this they are following the methods of those who developed inbred parent stock for modern hybrid corn.



"The hog men are little further advanced in their program than corn men were 15 or 20 years ago," Mr. Montgomery points out. "They have their inbreds, but the work of combining them to see which ones nick has hardly started. Minnesota and Iowa, for example, have crossed inbred lines of Poland Chinas, with certain elements in the results highly encouraging; others distinctly disappointing.

"At the Minnesota station, Dr. M. L. Winters, working with Poland Chinas, has saved only individuals that best combine five economically desirable characteristics. To remain in his herd: 1. Sows must be able to produce large litters of live pigs. 2. A high percentage of pigs born alive must survive to market age. 3. Pigs must gain rapidly from birth to market weight. 4. Feed requirements for each unit of gain must be low. 5. Body form must be such as to produce high yields of the most desirable cuts of pork.

"He has succeeded in fixing the last three characteristics so some of his lines and crosses of these lines excel purebred Polands that have been propagated by ordinary breeding methods. However, inbreeding lowers vitality and, to a lesser extent, fertility; and crossing two unrelated inbred lines of the same breed does not produce the hybrid vigor that comes when two breeds are crossed. Winters explains that this is because the base is too narrow.

"Work done at the Minnesota station with ordinary purebred boars bears out this theory. A cross of a purebred boar of one breed with a purebred sow of another gave pigs that were superior to either parent breed. The crossbred gilts, mated to a purebred boar of a third breed were still better than a two-breed cross.

"If Winters' beliefs are borne out, a farmer of the future may start, for example, with sows obtained by crossing the best line of inbred Polands that come out of Minnesota's experiments on the fastest line of Hampshires developed at the Illinois Experiment station. These would then be bred to an inbred Duroc boar from the line developed at the Ohio station. Gilts of that line might be mated to an inbred Berkshire, after which the producer might go to a Hampshire boar and continue thereafter the Hampshire-Poland-Duroc-Berkshire rotation.

Pacific Coast Farmers Within Irrigation Project

Landowners on 1,029,000 acres in the Columbia river basin in eastern Washington are offered irrigation benefits at $85 per irrigable acre, payable over a 40-year period, according to plans approved by Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes.

Approval of the repayment plan brings a step nearer the interior department's largest of 200 irrigation and multiple-purpose developments of the bureau.

The Defense of America's Freedom is our First Consideration

When The Nazis Knew

The answers may be misleading, but Fritz von Papen, German diplomat, captured by the Allied forces in the West, was recently questioned by Russian, as well as American officers.

A Russian officer asked him when the German High Command realized that the war was lost and Von Papen promptly replied: "On June 6, 1944."

He was then asked when the German people knew that the war was lost and his reply was: "When the Allies crossed the Rhine."

Mother's Day, 1945

Since the year 1907, the people of the United States have been observing the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day, with appropriate services in the churches of the land, where individuals are accustomed to commemorate holy things.

In 1914, Congress designated the day which is widely observed in other countries, as well as our own. It differs from the earlier celebration of ancient peoples whose festivities did not carry the same sense of appreciation for individual mothers.

Words of man are incapable of expressing proper appreciation of the unselfish and devoted life of good mothers and it is given to the children to revere and appreciate their mothers as the noblest expression of the intimate human relationship.

Certainly, the day has been commercialized in some respects but so widespread is the recognition of the fittingness of the occasion that Mother's Day stands apart from other days and special occasions. It will be so for many years, and worthily so.

Clanton and Chilton County will observe Mother's Day this year with greater appreciation of mothers whose sons have gone forth to war. Millions of young Americans, engaged in battle, will stop amidst the fighting to breathe a prayer, and for the instant forget the slaughter and sacrifice in memory of happier days.

It is well for men to revere motherhood but it is better for them to honor their own Mothers, who will be pleased to witness some expression of a love that should not be assumed. Let us all join to make living Mothers conscious of respect and love and to reverently remember the virtues of those who have gone on ahead.

National Honor At Stake

The War Department is to be commended, for insisting upon strict adherence to the Geneva Convention, Article II of which provides for a food ration to prisoners of war equal in quantity and quality to that given troops in base camps.

The War Department has interpreted "equal" as meaning identical in nutritional value. Its menus vary from time to time in accordance with the food shortages in this country. A new menu, effective April 2nd, was drawn up weeks before the capture of prison camps in Europe, which revealed startling mistreatment of prisoners of war in Germany.

While there will be many Americans to demand "retaliation" for German treatment of American prisoners of war, clear-headed Americans will take pride in the reputation that the United States has as a law-abiding nation, and will, therefore, support the War Department in living up to the terms of such laws as the Geneva Convention, which this nation has solemnly accepted.

The same question has arisen in Great Britain where the War Secretary, Sir James Grigg, told the House of Commons that he did not believe Germany was carrying out the terms of the Convention and that the Japanese "have never made the slightest attempt to observe it."

The War Secretary pointed out, however, that he did not believe that the House of Commons wished the Government to imitate Germany or Japan in the repudiation of the Geneva Convention.

We make these observations without regard to the welfare of German prisoners of war. They deserve no special consideration in view of what has been reported from Germany. We ought not forget, however, that they have been captured in battle, that the conditions of their imprisonment are in accord with international agreements accepted by the United States and that this nation cannot afford to violate its pledged word, regardless of what may be done by international outlaws.

To imitate German brutality and to inflict injuries upon captured fighting men in a spirit of revenge will, in the long run, do more harm to the moral fiber of this nation than to the helpless individuals mistreated. The honor of Americans, prohibits the intentional mistreatment of helpless individuals, even though they happen to be prisoners of war.

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Jones brought a pigeon to the office this week. They had found it hung in a tree in front of their house. Leg bands indicated that it was not ordinary pigeon but had been marked. One leg carried a rubber band, similar to those used to carry "capsules." We promptly called Leo Thompson and he, in turn, called the C. O. at the FW Camp, who carried it to Maxwell Field for identification. The next day R. O. Ellison, who works at Lay Dam came in and told us that he had found the bird at the Dam and had brought it home a week before. In taking it from his house to the pen the bird had got away and been caught in the tree at Mrs. Jones. We haven't had a report on the bird yet, but when we get it we'll let you know.

Describe it to me, will you, Mac?

"Yeah, I hear 'em yelling.

"This is what I used to dream about in the jungle. God, if I could only see for just five seconds.

"That girl there—is she laughing . . . or crying? I had a girl—once. Sure I wrote her when this happened to me. I told her I was tired of her. What else could I say?

"Listen to that newsboy . . . 'GERMANY FINISHED!' I'd give anything to see those headlines. What else does it say? Anything about the Pacific? I hope you guys realize there's still the Pacific.

"Yeah. I was there, all right. If you could have seen what I saw, you wouldn't need to read any War Bond ads. Kids you grew up with, with their faces smashed to bits. Nothing left of your best friend but his helmet landing in your lap. Made me kind of mad, I guess. They say I was still fighting when I couldn't see any more.

"Yeah, it's bad enough. But it makes it worse when you hear someone saying the war's practically over. Acting as if it's time to ease up on War Bonds and all. Then you wonder what you did it for. It's not over yet. Those Japs can do a lot of damage. I ought to know.

BOOK REVIEW HEARD ON STUDY CLUB'S LAST MEETING

The Study Club held it's last meeting of the season on May 4th with Mrs. J. E. Gowan as hostess. This brings to a close more than 27 years of outstanding accomplishments.

During the business session, presided over by Mrs. J. P. Hayes, President, it was announced that "the Jessie Chandler Memorial Award" goes to Lloyd C. Warr, Jr., for 1945, the presentation to be made by Mrs. Omar Reynolds. This being the 21st award by the Study Club.

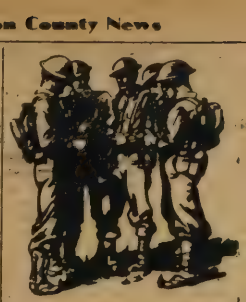
Mrs. Renfro Mullins, program leader, presented the guest speaker, Miss Elizabeth B. Barton. Her book review of "Foundation Stone," by Lella Warren, was most ably handled and thoroughly enjoyed by the assembly.

The hostess, assisted by her daughter, Mrs. John Higgins, and Mrs. Joe Mullins, served a delightful salad plate and coffee to 14 members and the following guests: Mesdames Roswell Owens, Arthur Willis, Percy Pitts, Ruby Pickens, J. D. Griffin, Floyd Dixon, Patterson Hicks, Oscar Jones and Miss Barton.

Third Class Petty Officer and Mrs. Durwood Robinson of Orange, Texas, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Robinson and Mrs. L. J. Wilhite of Birmingham were guests this week of Miss Kate Aldridge and Mrs. George Tucker.

Pvt. Marcus Polk, Jr., from Camp Lee, Va., was here for the week end with his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Bell were in Birmingham last Wednesday, Mrs. Bell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Oliver, who returned with them for a few days.



Miss Elizabeth Calfee had a group of her school friends at her home Friday night to celebrate her birthday.

Games were played, which everyone enjoyed. Later in the evening refreshments were served the guests.

John Ed Scott from Stark's University was home for the week end with his parents.

Mrs. Bill Minor and children spent the week end in Montgomery.

Pvt Joe D. Holley, 28, of Route 3, Clanton, is now serving 12 hours a day in the wards and post barber shop of the 117th General Hospital in England, cutting the hair of the battle veterans from France, Belgium, and Germany who are patients there.

"These battle vets are a great bunch of boys," says Pvt. Holley, "No matter what they have been through on the continent recently, they are always ready to joke when I cut their hair."

Pvt. Holley is the son of Mr and Mrs Steve Holley, of this city. Pvt Earl C. Holley, a brother with the Anti-Aircraft Artillery, is stationed in Panama.

Mrs. Murrell G. Holley, wife of this army barber, now resides in Sylacauga, Ala.

S-Sgt. Dan C. (Bottle) Alred from Gunter Field, Montgomery, spent the week-end here with his mother.

Navy Seabee Silas Watts, Machinists Mate, first class, USNR, formerly of Maplesville, who has received the Purple Heart and Bronze Star, has now recovered from wounds received in the Marianas operations and has returned to duty.

EXEMPTION OF FEEDSTUFFS AND BABY CHICKS FROM STATE SALES TAX

For some time now the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation has been advocating the exemption of feedstuffs and baby chicks from the State Sales tax.

The sales tax is levied on products produced from feedstuffs and baby chicks and, for this reason, the taxation of feedstuffs and baby chicks is plainly double taxation and unwarranted pyramiding of the sales tax burden.

Under the present sales tax law, twenty types or kinds of products are exempt from the sales tax. A brief discussion of a few of them will, in our opinion, furnish good reason why baby chicks and feedstuffs should be added to the list of products so exempted.

Baby chicks produce chickens and are comparable to seeds for producing plants and should likewise be exempt.

Fertilizers are exempt.

Feedstuffs furnish food for animals the same as fertilizers furnish food for plants and should be placed in the same classification in exemption from the sales tax.

There are other exemptions comparable to the ones proposed for feedstuffs and baby chicks.

For example, the gross proceeds of the sale, or sales, of coal or coke to manufacturers, electric power companies, and transportation companies are exempt.

Likewise, exemption is provided for the gross proceeds of the sale, or sales, of railroad rails and railroad cars.

Also, exemption is extended to the gross proceeds of the sale of machines used in mining, quarrying, compounding, processing, and manufacturing of tangible personal property.

WHY THEN AREN'T BABY CHICKS EXEMPT FROM THE 2 PER CENT SALES TAX ?

We urge you to impress upon your representative the value of this legislation to the farmer and the necessity of giving it his full support. If you cannot see him in person, write him a letter asking him to work for passage of this Bill.

Kathleen Norris Says:

To Our Undying Shame

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"There is going to be a bad time for the mothers and sweethearts and friends who have to answer their question, 'You gave blood, didn't you?' with an embarrassed 'Well, no, I didn't, darling.'"

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

A FEW days ago I was in a group of young women who were gathering wraps and parcels as they dispersed after a club luncheon.

"How many of you," I asked them casually, "have been to the blood bank lately?"

Lately! Out of 13 of them, only one had ever been, and that more than a year ago. These were healthy young women, busy, or course, burdened with responsibility for homes, kitchen, babies, school-age children, to be sure. But not so burdened, not so busy but what this confession of theirs constitutes the most terrible indictment that American women ever have had to face.

It constitutes the most shameful reproach that after-war memories will ever bring us, a shame never to be forgotten and never to be wiped out; that the Red Cross and the medical corps have to beg us for this life-giving blood, and that we refuse it.

My own blood burns when I think of it, and I wonder how we will explain it to the returned soldiers someday; how we can ever be happy again knowing that magnificent young lives have been sacrificed because we, safe and warm and well-fed and free from fear, just never gave a thought to the blood bank.

"Oh, I've meant to, and Marcia and I talked about it," these young women said cheerfully, "but it's so hard to get around these days. We were going to, remember, Jean? And then we didn't! Oh, yes, the blood bank. That's wonderful, isn't it? Mother says they didn't have it in the last war, and that thousands of lives were lost. Do let's try to get to it this week, or sometime."

Marines Attack.

The day before this conversation I had happened to see a movie reel of our marines taking possession of a tropical beachhead, as they have done so often. Past the camera flashed the line of young faces, as the heavy boots squelched in the mud and fixed bayonets glinted in the fast-falling rain. Such fine, strong faces, earnest and trusting and hard with the desperate courage and resolution of the attack. And even as we looked this splendid vigorous body and that one fell in the swamp, never to walk again in the pride and confidence of youth!

Our boys have seen grim sights in these war years, they have suffered all the agonies to which human flesh is heir. They have seen children mad with hunger, and dead with hunger; seen homeless thousands of women and old people seeking despairingly for food and shelter. They have seen their own friends fall and die, or carried away on stretchers, moaning, bloody, inhuman wreckage. They have known homesickness more bitter than death; known months, not hours or days, of loneliness and doubt.

To have these men pick up a paper from home and read that the Red Cross must solicit donations of the life-giving stream that alone will bring some of them home, is intolerable, and we ought not to tolerate it!

In every gathering of men and women — at men's luncheon clubs, women's club meetings, lecture halls, movie theaters, indeed in the actual churches, why doesn't the chairman or speaker ask those who have contributed life to our dying men to raise their hands? Or better yet, ask those who have not given their blood to the white-faced, bleeding boys in the service hospitals, please to stand? It ought to be the first topic of conversation wherever men and women gather together: "Have you been to the blood bank lately?"

'White Feather' Emblem.

And why not a white feather for the lapel of every man's and woman's suit who chooses to ignore this appeal? Surely if they are not shamed already the mere wearing of this sign of cowardice wouldn't hurt them? There isn't half enough fuss being made about all this. We have an emblem that means "I gave my blood" that hundreds are proud to wear. Why not another emblem meaning "I didn't pay the slightest attention to the fact that for the men who are shedding their blood for me—sometimes every drop of it, I didn't do anything in return. I knew what plasma is, I knew the miracles it works on the far-away battle stations, but we really haven't anything to be afraid of here, so why worry?"

Remember, you American men and women, our boys are going to come home an embittered and disillusioned lot. What they have had to endure is cruelly upsetting to mind and morale. For many months after honorable discharge we will have to give them special treatment; comforting, bracing, rebuilding souls and bodies. There is going to be a bad time then for the mothers and sweethearts and friends who have to answer their question, "You gave blood, didn't you?" with an embarrassed "Well, no, I didn't, darling. I thought that there would be so many others that my poor little pint wouldn't mean much, and somehow I never got around to it."

There is still time to save yourself that shame. For God's sake, and for the sake of humanity, do it today. Don't ever let anyone feel again the sting I felt when a young naval doctor wrote me from Guadalcanal to ask the caustic question: "Do you suppose that if they offered two red points a pint some of the men and women at home would get busy at the blood bank?"

THEY NEED YOUR BLOOD

We have all heard, over and over, that blood plasma, administered on the battlefield and in emergency hospitals, is saving thousands of lives. In this war less than three per cent of the wounded die—as compared with six or seven per cent in the last war. Blood plasma and whole blood administrations are responsible to a large degree for this great saving of young lives.

But this blood has to come from healthy human beings. As the tempo of battle increases, greater and greater quantities are needed. The Red Cross is asking and pleading constantly for more donations—not of money, but of blood.

After every victory there is a tendency on the home front to slow down. This is true of bond buying, of war plant production, of donations to the blood bank. On the far-flung fronts, however, there is still urgent need for blood plasma—and will be until the last battle is fought. Keep on giving!

"Healthy young women."

Decorating with Pictures

Hang pictures at eye level, if possible without cords showing and flat against the wall. Under an important picture place a substantial piece of furniture. Assemble your family photographs, simply framed, in large groups in your bedroom. Be sure the store you've chosen to do your framing knows its job, for the value of a signed picture can be ruined by too close trimming. Choose simple frames so that the frames will not compete in interest with the pictures themselves.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVES FOR F.D.R. PEACE PLAN

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—Mr. Truman called in privately most of the American delegation to this world conference soon after he took office (several days before the announced conference.)

He told them they had their instructions from Mr. Roosevelt and he did not wish to change those instructions in any particular. His words implied that while he could not go with them, he would hold them responsible for following every detail of the Roosevelt plan.

The plan, of course, has not been made public, any more than was this Truman warning, but it can be outlined upon the highest living authority as running along this following line:

We must not fail to establish the Dumbarton League of the United Nations, no matter what its defects, or the limitations placed upon our program. We must do this because our first duty is to do everything possible to see that war cannot happen again. The next war would destroy civilization.

No matter what we think the best answer to peace is, we must come out of this meeting with a final formula for international relationships. To do this we must give and take, but essentially we must make a beginning toward peace.

WE CANNOT FAIL

We have taken two or three big initial steps (Atlantic charter, Dumbarton, Livadia) and we are now ready for the next. We must succeed in this one. We cannot afford to fail. We cannot stick it out for perfection. We must make some start, whatever it is.

This is the explanation behind all recent Roosevelt - Truman international policy developments as well as the official background tone and guide for the conference.

In my opinion, there was a time a few weeks back when the late Mr. Roosevelt and his State Secretary Stettinius may have had their doubts about going ahead. Their inability to gain their most important objectives for small nations and full democratic freedoms universally may well have disappointed them, and at that time there was a chance this conference might have been called off.

Evidently they decided in favor of the above outlined course, and since then after direct request, Britain changed its mind and sent its Foreign Minister Eden and Stalin changed and sent the equally ranking Molotov.

This conference, in accordance with these objectives, is to be thrown wide open. It is to be a free forum for airing the causes of the little people primarily. Officially, Mr. Stettinius has been saying it will last four or five weeks, but is more likely to last a couple of months.

Discussion of everything is to be allowed. Every nation will be invited to say all it wishes. The Dumbarton Oaks setup is to be thrown literally upon the table, as if to say to all:

"Here it is; go to it."

Any hope that such a program can be concluded in four or five weeks is therefore, concededly optimistic.

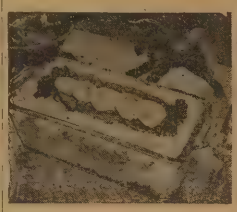
In the end, if there are "not too many changes" in the Dumbarton proposal, the conference will be judged by this government to have been a success.

ALTERNATIVE TO PLAN

Now some authorities may well differ with these fundamental conclusions of the government. The alternative to Dumbarton Oaks is not necessarily chaos or another world war. Rather it is bi-lateral agreements or hemisphere defense or spheres of influence maintained by individual understandings and alliances and substitute courses for peace.

These do not necessarily require wars, or make them any more likely, than a weak or impractical formula for a league, containing, as this one does, the right of big nations to veto any interference with their own wars—and no disarmament.

It is unreasonable to say that unless any specific course is followed there will be another world war, or, as the emotional extremist Mr. Wallace, to contend that anyone who is against his tariff views is "advocating another world war."



Russia's excuse for at first deciding to send an inferior ranking diplomat to this world conference was never made public, but it was passed privately and officially to Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Stettinius.

The Kremlin pointed out to them that Molotov was not only the foreign minister in the Soviet setup but the second man of the Stalin government. Stalin said he could not spare Molotov from his side for so long a period just at the critical time of victory in Europe, and because his government is desperately shorthanded on diplomats.

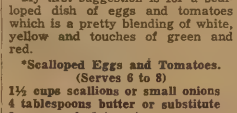
HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Vegetables Rescue Luncheon Time From Doldrums

Creamy rice, tinged red with tomatoes and garnished with eggs, peeks through this pretty loaf dish and flirts with winter-weary appetites.

If you have any luncheon obligations, take care of them during the spring. You have the fresh colors of spring flowers to help out your table motif and a gardenful of fresh fruit and crisp green vegetables. Yes, give your luncheons in spring.

A group of feminine guests won't expect the hearty substantial affair that a male gathering would, so you can lay aside the ration book and concentrate on point-free foods. There are eggs, plentiful in spring, asparagus, tomatoes, greens, strawberries and rhubarb. All make colorful and delectable eating.



Your table will be pretty carried out in the delicate shades of green and pale pink, green and yellow, or pale blue gray and yellow. Do have flowers if it's at all possible because they make for freshness and gayety. Or, work out an attractive arrangement in fruit. A fresh pineapple surrounded with oranges and shiny apples draped with grapes is effective.

My first suggestion is for a scalloped dish of eggs and tomatoes which is a pretty blending of white, yellow and touches of green and red.

Scalloped Eggs and Tomatoes.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1½ cups scallions or small onions
4 tablespoons butter or substitute
2 cups cooked tomatoes
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon marjoram
½ teaspoon celery seed
2 cups boiled rice
2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
¾ cup grated American cheese

Cook the sliced scallions in butter or substitute until they are about tender. Mix together tomatoes, salt, marjoram, celery seed and cooked scallions. Place half of the boiled rice in the bottom of a well-greased loaf pan; cover with tomato and scallion mixture and with a layer of sliced eggs. Place the remainder of the rice over the other ingredients in the dish; cover with sliced eggs and top with grated American cheese. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) about 30 minutes. Garnish with parsley and serve piping hot from the same dish.

Tomato-Bacon Luncheon.
(Serves 4)

4 firm ripe tomatoes
3 tablespoons butter or salad oil
½ pound fresh mushrooms
1 green pepper, chopped
1 cup cream
Salt and pepper to taste
8 toast triangles
8 slices bacon, broiled

Cut tomatoes in ½-inch slices and brown on both sides in butter or oil. Remove from pan and fry mushrooms, green pepper about five minutes. Remove vegetables from pan, add cream to drippings, bring to a boil and season. Arrange vegetables on top of toast. Cover with sauce and top each toast triangle with a slice of bacon.

The above is good when served with a cantaloupe salad, and ice cream with toasted almonds.

Macaroni Salad.
(Serves 8 to 10)

½ pound elbow macaroni
4 cups tomato juice
3 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water
1 cup diced chicken or ham or flaked salmon or tuna fish
½ cup diced celery
½ cup canned peas or diced green pepper.

Cook macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain. Rinse with cold water and allow to cool. Heat the tomato juice to boiling. Add gelatin which has been dissolved in the cold water. Cool mixture. Then add other ingredients and place in oiled mold. Refrigerate until set. Unmold and serve garnished with deviled eggs, pimiento and cucumber slices.

The dessert for the above main dish salad can be hearty. You might like applesauce cake with chocolate icing, icebox cake or lemon meringue pie.

Meatless is the description for this spaghetti with its vegetable balls that taste like meat and a savory sauce also made of vegetables.

Have you gone vegetarian enough to eat your spaghetti that way? Then you'll like this recipe which makes a tasty dish but still saves points:

Vegetarian Spaghetti.
(Serves 6 to 8)

½ pound spaghetti

Cook the spaghetti in boiling, salted water until tender; drain. In the meantime make up the following mixture:

1 onion, medium
1 green pepper
4 carrots
4 stalks celery
½ to 1 cup ground cooked meat, poultry or fish, if desired.

Grind vegetables and then blend with ground meat, poultry or flaked fish. Mix 1 egg and 1 cup fine dry bread crumbs into mixture. Shape into balls and fry in hot fat or drippings. Remove and drain, then place on top of vegetable sauce made as follows:

3 tablespoons drippings or oil
¼ cup onion, chopped
½ cup green pepper
1 cup diced celery
1 cup mushrooms (optional)
2 cups canned tomatoes

Cook the onion, green pepper, celery and mushrooms in hot drippings until lightly browned. Then add tomatoes and cook until thickened. Serve by heaping spaghetti on platter, garnish with vegetable balls and pour sauce over all.

To rip seams from garments, use a pair of tweezers for pulling out the shorter threads.

If bureau drawers stick, rub soap on bottom and sides. This helps the drawers to slide out easily.

It is easier to clean a room if you pick up all odds and ends first, then remove all small items like knickknacks, papers and magazines, pictures, lamps and other decorations.

To remove glue stains from washable articles, rub the stains well with warm water applied with a soft sponge or brush.

To clean painted walls, wash carefully with sponge dipped in warm sudsy water or solution of wallpaper cleaner. Wipe off the soil with a cloth and repeat until walls are cleaned. Rinse with sponge dipped in lukewarm water. Wipe dry. Walls should not be repainted until perfectly dry.

Cotton flannel cloths or rags are ideal for cleaning and polishing silverware. Keep several on hand and wash often in suds and water.

Keep all cleaning materials, cloths, etc. together in a small cart or box with handle. This can be carted from room to room as you clean and saves the time you would spend in getting each item from the cleaning closet.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE NORTHERN KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—I Kings 12:26-30; 19:1-4, 13b-18; II Kings 17:7, 8.

GOLDEN TEXT—O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together.—Psalm 34:3.

Nations as well as people come to crossroads in their history, and taking the wrong road then means future disaster. Solomon had built up a great national prosperity, but at the expense of heavy taxes. He had forgotten God, and was succeeded by a son who followed in his footsteps.

Offered an opportunity to ease the burden of the people (I Kings 12-14), Rehoboam in his folly made it greater, and the nation was divided. The ten northern tribes, which were henceforth to be known as Israel, followed Jeroboam, and the two southern tribes under Rehoboam became the kingdom of Judah.

Jeroboam started with God's favor, and might have led his people aright, but instead he became the king whose name stood for wickedness (see II Kings 15:18). The story of that downfall is a sad picture of unbelief and failure.

I. Religion Meets Politics (I Kings 12:26-30).

Jerusalem, now in the rival kingdom of Judah, was the center of Hebrew worship. While the people of Israel were free to go there to worship, Jeroboam saw that it might lead to their being led away from him. It was a shrewd political deduction, but it left God out of the picture.

He established new centers of worship, where calves of gold were set up. They were probably intended to be a symbol of God, but they bespeak the folly of mixing worldly things with the things of God. They become an abomination and a snare.

The people responded to the apparent interest of the king in their welfare, and worshiped at the most convenient place. Religion had met politics, and had let politics take the upper hand.

Someone has suggested that when we begin to find ways to make our religion easy, we can be certain that it is the enemy of our souls who is at work. When Satan begins to be solicitous about our welfare and suggest that it is too far to go to church, or that the weather is too cold (or too warm), etc., etc., we should be on guard.

Religious ease was a big step downward for Israel, and it can be for any other nation. Where does America stand in that important matter?

II. A Queen Meets a Prophet (I Kings 19:1-4, 13b-18).

Elijah under the mighty hand of God had defied the wicked king, Ahab, and his more wicked queen, Jezebel; yes, and all the prophets of Baal, and had been gloriously victorious (I Kings 18:17-41).

The queen, who was devilish in her wickedness and determination to destroy the worship of the true God, threatened the prophet. He who had met the challenge of the hundreds of prophets fled in fear before the relentless hatred of this venomous woman.

The prophet felt that all was lost, but God revealed to him that even in that dark day there were many who were still true to Him (v. 18). It is a precious and encouraging bit of light in an otherwise dark scene.

Our main interest in this lesson is not the experience of the prophet, but in seeing the cause of Israel's downfall. Here we see one great reason—every king of Israel was a wicked man. Some were better and some worse, but all of them forgot God.

A nation is on the downward path when its rulers forget God. What about our own nation? What about the elected representatives of the people? Do we choose men for public office because of their Christian faith and character, or on the basis of political expediency or affiliation?

III. A Nation Meets Its Doom (II Kings 17:7, 8).

The hour had struck when God's heavy hand of judgment had to fall on Israel, the northern kingdom of 10 tribes. Verse 8 of this chapter relates their carrying away into captivity to Assyria, and verses 7-9 tell us the reason for that judgment.

Ingratitude for God's blessing (v. 7) led to the worship of other gods (v. 8). They knew God's hatred for the sin of idolatry, and His judgment upon those who walked in that way, but they went right on.

Note in verse 9 that these things were done "secretly." "The same thing is true today of many who profess to be the people of God. The line of demarcation between the church and the world is not clearly drawn. We do well to note carefully the outcome of this course of procedure on Israel's part (vv. 6, 18). The fact that Israel did these things secretly did not hide them from the eyes of Jehovah (Ps. 139: 1, 2; Heb. 4:13)" (John W. Bradbury).

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived at Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to replace the town bell stolen by the Nazis. He arranged with the navy to permit the fishermen to return to the waters. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Major Joppolo recalled the order to permit food and water to enter the town. Tomasino, the chief fisherman, invited the major to his home for dinner. When he arrived he found Captain Purvis and the two daughters of Tomasino. Captain Purvis got drunk and the Major took him home early.

CHAPTER XII

"I thought at first perhaps you were from Northern Italy," the Major said politely.

Tina laughed. "Tell me some more about yourself," she said.

"There's not much to tell," he said.

"Did you go to one of those American colleges? I've seen them in the movies at Vicinamare."

"No, not exactly. I went to school until I was sixteen. Then I lied about my age, I said I was eighteen so that I could get a driver's license and take a job. I worked as a truck driver until I was twenty, then I had an accident, from lifting things which were too heavy."

"What kind of an accident, Mister Major?"

"It was a rupture. After the accident I had no job for two months. It is not very exciting to be unemployed in the United States. Finally I got a job as a clerk in a grocery store at twelve dollars a week."

"How much is that?"

"Twelve hundred lira."

"Twelve hundred lira! You must have been rich."

"No, Tina, twelve hundred lira is all right for Adano—"

"All right! I should say it is all right. Six hundred is high pay. My father used to think six hundred was a very good week—and he hasn't been out for a long time," she added sadly.

"But that's not so much in the States."

"You mean everyone is rich in the Bronx?"

"No, I wouldn't say so, Tina. It's just that our standard of living is higher than yours."

"What does that mean?"

"Well, that's hard to explain, too. It's just that everyone has a little more than they have here. They mostly have automobiles, in peacetime, that is. The food is a little better, everyone gets orange juice and milk and things like that. They get paid a little more. They have to pay more for what they get, though."

"In other words, it's just what I said. Everyone is rich in the Bronx."

"Well, have it your own way. Anyhow, I think fate has had a lot to do with my life, because one night a friend of mine told me that they were about to have examinations for jobs in the City Government."

"The City of the Bronx?"

"No, Tina, New York City. He told me I ought to take them. I said I hadn't had enough education, but he said I ought to go ahead and try. So I did and I came out number 177 out of 1,100. That made me feel pretty good, as if I knew something after all. They gave me a job as a clerk in the Department of Taxation and Finance."

"Did this make you rich again?"

"No, being a tax collector did not make you rich in New York. I was earning twenty dollars a week. That's two thousand lira."

"Two thousand, richer than ever."

"I did all right, too, only then they elected a man named LaGuardia, and since he was a different party from the previous man, a lot of people got thrown out, and I was one. I borrowed some money from my mother-in-law—"

"Your mother-in-law? Were you married?"

"Yes, Tina, I'll tell you about that some time. I borrowed this money and bought a grocery store in the Bronx, and it was all mine. Only then about two years later things went badly, we had hard times, and I had to sell out before it was too late. I went back to the City to see if they'd have me back, because they had sent me a couple of notices while I had the grocery store, saying they wanted me. They said: 'Why didn't you answer the notices?' I said: 'I never got them, I must have been in Florida when you sent them to me.'"

"Where is Florida?"

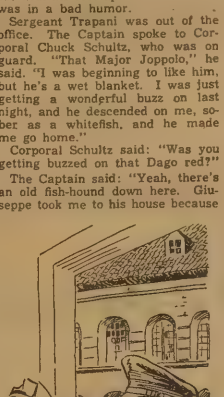
"It's in the south, I wasn't there at all. That was the second time I lied to get a job. Since then I've tried never to lie, the truth is much better and much safer. So they gave me a job in the Sanitation Department. Later I took my examinations for advancement to Third Class Clerk, and afterwards I got to be a Second Class Clerk. I was earning forty-two dollars a week when I went into the Army." Major Joppolo was getting a little boastful about his non-existent riches. "That was four thousand two hundred lira a week."

Tina said: "The wife, is she pretty?"

Major Joppolo said: "Yes, she is very pretty, at least she seems so to me. I miss her very much. She has a mole on the left side of her chin, but otherwise she is very pretty. She is of Italian parentage, so she has dark skin like yours. In some ways you remind me of her."

Tina had been looking up at the stars. But now she suddenly looked down into the dark valley of the street and said: "Let's go in and dance." And she opened up the shutter doors and went inside. Major Joppolo went in after her.

Captain Purvis had gone to work on Tomasino's wine, and he was making a decided nuisance of himself, so Major Joppolo persuaded him to go home. He and Giuseppe led the Captain home.



When he got back to his own villa, and was undressed and in bed, Major Joppolo felt miserable. It wasn't until nearly three o'clock that he realized why. Giuseppe was right. It made a man feel very unhappy to be as far from home as the Bronx, New York, is from Adano, Italy.

The next morning Captain Purvis sat with his feet up on his desk. He was in a bad humor.

Sergeant Trapani was out of the office. The Captain spoke to Corporal Chuck Schultz, who was on guard. "That Major Joppolo," he said, "I was beginning to like him, but he's a wet blanket. I was just getting a wonderful buzz on last night, and he descended on me, sober as a whitefish, and he made me go home."

Corporal Schultz said: "Was you getting buzzed on that Dago red?"

The Captain said: "Yeah, there's an old fish-hound down here. Giuseppe took me to his house because he's got a couple of nice quail, he gave me some red stuff."

"Hey, Schultz," he said. "Where's Trapani?"

Corporal Schultz said: "That vino's bad stuff, sir, you don't want to get mixed up with that vino no more'n you can help. Had some myself last night."

Captain Purvis said: "I'm still sore at that Major."

He leaned back in his chair, and put his feet up on his desk again. As he did so, he knocked some papers on the floor.

"I suppose I might as well clean up my desk. Got to do it sooner or later."

He reached down on the floor and picked up the stray papers. He began to sort and arrange papers in piles, and he threw some away, and he got up and put some away in his files. He read some of them aloud to Corporal Schultz, who was not in the least interested.

In due course he picked up a purple slip, and he said: "What's this?" And he read: "On July 19, orders were received from General Marvin, Forty-Ninth Division, to keep all mule carts out of the town of Adano. Guards were posted at bridge over Rosso River and at Cacopardo Sulphur Refinery. Order carried out. On July 20, guards were removed on order of Major Victor Joppolo. . . ."

Captain Purvis banged the flat of a hand down on the table.

"Hey, Schultz," he said. "Where's Trapani?"

"Said he was just stepping out for a couple of minutes, sir, said he'd be right back. Anything I can do, sir?"

"No. Wait till I get that Trapani."

Trapani came in in a few minutes.

"Hey, you, come over here," Captain Purvis said as soon as he arrived.

"Yes, sir," Trapani said.

"What's this?" the Captain said, and he held out the purple slip.

Trapani took it and looked at it. "That's the report on the mule cart situation, sir," Trapani said coolly. "You told me to make out a report, remember?"

"You're right I remember, and where did I tell you to send it?"

"It was to go to G-one of the Division, sir."

"Well, why didn't you send it?"

"I put it on your desk for approval, sir."

Captain Purvis huffed and puffed. He knew very well he didn't pay as much attention to his desk as he ought to. "Well, let's send it out of here. I want to personally see you put that thing in the pouch for Division."

Sergeant Trapani sat right down and addressed an envelope, and put the slip in it, and put the envelope in the pouch which was to leave the next afternoon by courier for Division headquarters. He addressed the envelope to the wrong person at Division, but then, Captain Purvis didn't notice that.

It said in English: "I got to seen you in the immediate." And it was signed M. Cacopardo.

Not five minutes behind the courier, Cacopardo himself showed up, all dressed for traveling. He had leather gauntlets on, and goggles up on his forehead, and he carried a green parasol in his right hand.

The eighty-two-year-old man trotted the length of Major Joppolo's office, leaned forward over his desk, looked over his shoulder at Giuseppe and Zito, then looked at the Major and said in a loud whisper: "I got to talk alone."

Major Joppolo asked his interpreter and usher to step outside.

"I have received a secret messages from the Mafia," the old man said, still whispering loudly. "I have the military secrets of where are the German troops. You must send your soldiers, Mister Major."

Major Joppolo said: "I have no soldiers, I'm just the administrator of Adano."

Cacopardo said: "I got to go to the General. I am ready."

"I will send you to the General, Mister Cacopardo," he said, "but I want to warn you. The General is a very impatient man. If your dope isn't straight, he'll be very angry. I don't know what he'll do to you, but it won't be nice. Also, old man, I've got to ask you not to get me in trouble with him. I'm already in Dutch with General Marvin. Promise me that you will be careful, will you?"

"I will be careful," Cacopardo said, "but the informations is important."

Major Joppolo made out a pass for Cacopardo and sent for a jeep from the motor pool.

Cacopardo stepped back, and raised his hand in a Fascist salute. Then, as his aged memory functioned, the hand wavered over to his forehead, and the salute became military. And he said: "Cacopardo is sulphur and sulphur is Cacopardo." He turned on his heel, as militarily as he could, and marched out.

Between the Palazzo in Adano and the headquarters of the Forty-Ninth Division, in a villa beyond Vicinamare, old Cacopardo did not say a word to the jeep driver. He sat leaning forward against the wind, his goggles down over his eyes and his parasol straining over his head. The jeep's windshield was down on the hood, with the canvas cover over it, as all jeep windshields should be when there is possibility of enemy strafing attacks, and so the wind was very strong. After a while old Cacopardo decided that sun was preferable to wind, and he moved the parasol down and held it in front of him, to fend off the wind.

The villa in which the Forty-Ninth Division was dug in for the time being had belonged to a friend of Cacopardo's. Cacopardo and this friend had shared an interest in Italian furniture, and the old man knew the value of the things in this villa. The friend was dead now, but Cacopardo had a hard time remembering which of his friends had died and which were still living; he therefore thought of them all as living. It was easier that way.

Because he was entering the villa of his friend, whom he considered to be living, Cacopardo approached the gate in the spirit of a cordial visit, and he expected to be received cordially. He was in for a surprise.

Anyone who has never tried to see a general could not possibly know what Cacopardo's reception was like.

A sentry stopped him at the gate. "Good morning," said Cacopardo, as if addressing a butler at his friend's door, "is my friend Salatiello here?"

The sentry said: "Ain't nobody here of that name as I know of. What is he, an M.P.?"

"Military Police, indeed. He is prefect of Vicinamare and a collector of wooden curiosities. He is my friend. This is his house. Is he here?"

"No," Buck shouted back. "No one round here with a name like of that."

"No one here that name," the sentry repeated.

Cacopardo said: "Then where is General Marvin?"

M.P.'s are trained to be mysterious with strangers. "Jeez, I can't tell you that, Bud," the sentry said.

"I have a paper to see General Marvin," Cacopardo said, pulling out his pass.

VOLUMN XXIII CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1945. NUMBER 20

SUMMER SCHOOL TO START MAY 28TH

There will be a summer school taught at the Chilton County High School again this summer as has been the practice for the past several years There are many good school men and women who do not advocate summer school work, and the principal of this high school does not approve of it except for students who are above the average in scholastic ability, or boys who are anxious to complete high school before going into the armed services of the United States. Where a student is retarded in his work, or has failed one or more subjects during the regular session of school, then the summer school is an excellent opportunity for him to remove these deficiencies before another school year.

Before a summer school may have the approval of the state department of education it must meet all standards laid down for high schools during the regular session. Credits cannot be allowed for any subject that has been given less time than one-hundred twenty clock hours. If only one half unit of credit is wanted, eighty clock hours of time are required. It will be observed from the above dates that this summer school will be in session ten weeks of six days per week. The state department of education discourages any summer school of less than nine weeks.

Three or more of the regular faculty will be employed to do the instructing, and classes will be given in any subject where six or more students ask for this subject, except in Agriculture, Home Economics, and the Sciences. The fees are $12.50 per unit of credit.

DOROTHY ARNOLD WILL GRADUATE AT JUDSON COLLEGE

Miss Dorothy Arnold, of Clanton, will graduate at Judson College May 21 with an outstanding record. She has been on the Student Government Council, the defense council, the Baptist Student Union Council, the Young Women's Auxiliary Council, and the Athletic Board. She has been on the variety tennis, swimming and hockey teams; has been assistant business manager of the annual, president of Jewett Dormitory and took part in the Junior-Freshman Wedding. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Arnold.

VFW Sets Deadline For Charter Members

The next meeting of the Chilton County Post of Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U.S., will be held at the City Hall at Clanton at 8 o'clock Monday night, May 21. The deadline for charter members is set for this meeting date. Any veteran who has had overseas service in any war under the American flag is eligible and is urged to attend this meeting and affiliate. The membership has more than doubled since the installation of the Chilton County Post two months ago.

It is the desire of the officials of this Post to reach every eligible veteran in Chilton County and every eligible man who has served his country outside the continental limits of the United States is urged to attend this meeting Monday night. What are you doing to protect the rights of yourself and the thousands now overseas if you don't become affiliated with an active VFW Post.

County Canning Plant An Asset

One of the most valuable services offered to the people of Chilton County by the County Board of Education is the use of the community canning plant at the Chilton County High School. This Plant was completed late last summer and is now ready for use by the people of the county. It is modern in every respect and is the means by which much food may be preserved that cannot be sold at a profit to the producer.

We are told every day that the year ahead of us is to be the leanest one of the war so far as food is concerned This being true, it would be wise for any one in Chilton County having any surplus meat, fruit, or vegetables to make use of the services offered by this plant in putting up this food for later use.

A staff of men and women have been trained to assist the people in using this project. The person wishing to can any kind of food, prepares it and does the work. The county furnishes the equipment, cans, and the supervisor and for this service a small charge per can used is made.

This is not a commercial project, but one for the use of any citizen of the county that may have some food that he would like to save,

The personnel in charge cordially invites anyone interested to visit this plant and see what the County Board of Educaion is offering the people.

SACRED HARP SINGING

The Sacred Harp Singing will convene at New Harmony Church one-half mile east of Lomax the third Sunday in May.

Many singers are expected to attend this convention. All local singers are expected to put forth every effort to make this singing a success. All singers and lovers of music have a special invitation. Come and don't forget to bring a well filled basket.

DAVE COHEN IN NEW YORK

Mr. David Cohen, owner of the Parisian Store left this week for New York where he will spend several days purchasing stock for the coming fall.

Store winter shoes with loving care. The shoes ought to be repaired before they're put away. Keep in a dry place out of dust.

Best Alabama Calf Brought $1,139.95

Alabama now holds the honor of having produced the highest priced calf ever grown in the southeast. It was produced by E. J. Klinner, 4-H Club member of Maplesville, and was sold for $1.25 per pound at the fat stock show and sale in Birmingham. It weighed 955 pounds, was judged the grand champion, and brought a total of $1,193.95.

Young Klinner's sister, Pauline, exhibited the 855-pound reserve champion which sold for 60 cents a pound or a total of $513.

Mothers of Service Men Honored

In honor of the Baptist Mothers of servicemen, a banquet was given by the Y. W. A. at the Baptist Church May 8, at 7 o'clock. There were also other special guests: Miss Juliette Mather who is our Southwide Baptist Young People's Leader; Mrs. Joe E. Jones, who is our Sunday School Field Worker; Mrs. Houston Nivens, president of the W. M. U.; Mrs. Raymond Mims, who directed the music, and Mrs Roswell Owens.

There was an estimation of about sixty eight present and a beautiful corsage was pinned on each guest The centerpiece was a trimming of red, white and blue with red and white roses.

Miss Marguerite Perry, president of the Y. W. A. presided. The program came as follows: "Thanksgiving" was sung in unison; Toast to Mothers, by Alene Johnson; a poem, "The Mother on the Sidewalk," by Betsy Jones; a solo, "Mother's Task" by Dalene King; a poem "Fuzzy Wuzzy Angles," by Norma Davenport; recreational singing by everyone; and the presenting of a gift to Miss Mather by Dorothy Bossinger. At 8 o'clock we went to the church auditorium to hear Miss Mather speak —Alene Johnson, Reporter.

FIDELIS SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS MET MAY 10TH

The May meeting of the Fidelis Sunday School Class was held in the home of Mrs Alma Burton with Misses Elizabeth Barton and Rubye Abbott, serving as co-hostesses.

The devotional consisted of the 23rd Psalm by Zora Guy Smith which was followed by sentence prayers. Mrs J. R. Mullins, class teacher, read an appropriate Bible story, after which she conducted the monthly Bible quiz, the prize for which was won by Marie Sims.

A delicious salad plate was served by the hostesses to the following guests

REFUND BILL MISUNDERSTOOD BY FARMERS

The gasoline tax refund bill pending in the Legislature is misunderstood by many farmers, John G. White, Uniontown, Association of County Commissioners Secretary, asserted today.

According to Mr. White, a great many farmers are under the impression that a refund law will permit them to buy gasoline for use in farm tractors at a reduced price. This is a mistake, he declared, because the farmer will have to pay the regular price on the gasoline at the time he buys it.

The bill provides that the farmer shall receive from the gasoline dealer a refund invoice, on a form prescribed by the Commissioner of Revenue, at the time of sale. On the first of January, April, July and October, he shall make out his claim on a Department of Revenue form, attach the refund invoice to this form and mail them to the Dpeartment of Revenue.

The Department will check all claims against copies of refund invoices mailed in by gasoline dealers at the time of sale and claims for refunds found to be in order will be approved by the Department for payment.

A farmer who buys gasoline in January, February and March for instance, will file a claim on the first of April. Several months later, as soon as the Department of Revenue can check and approve his claim, he will receive a refund check from the state.

Other rules and regulations also must be complied with. Refund gasoline may have to be colored black and the Commissioner may require that it be given a distinctive odor. Furthermore, separate storage will have to be provided because the bill makes it a violation of the law to use refund gasoline in automobiles or trucks or on the roads and provides heavy fines and sentences for violators.

Besides the red tape and other inconveniences of the proposed refund law many believe that such a law will deprive the state of necessary revenue it will be unable to match federal aid funds for farm-to-market roads.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Extended Allied Control Faces German People; U. S. Shifts to One-Front War Against Japanese

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Numbered in the thousands, New Yorkers gathered in Times Square to joyously celebrate German capitulation to Allies.

V-E:
Ends in Schoolhouse

Almost six years after the German army had struck Poland like lightning, inflaming the world in the most destructive war in all history, two men met in a little red schoolhouse in Reims, France, to bring the European phase of the conflict to an end.

With Germany's mighty wehrmacht ripped apart; with its cities lying in rubble, and with its railroad system a heap of twisted and scorched steel, Col. Gen. Gustav Jodl had come to offer his country's unconditional surrender to the Allies on order of Fuehrer Karl Doenitz.

It was 2:41 o'clock in the morning when Lt. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith accepted the capitulation on behalf of the Supreme Allied command. Later, the surrender was ratified by the Russians in Berlin, with Marshal Gregory Zhukov representing the Reds at his headquarters in the charred German capital.

No Delusions

Having levelled western Europe and run deep into Russia before being compelled to recoil under the weight of the combined Allied juggernaut, the Germans suffered no delusions as to the severity of the terms to be imposed.

Addressing the German people after Fuehrer Karl Doenitz had ordered all the country's armed forces to cease firing, Foreign Minister Count Ludwig Schwerin von Krosigk said: "Nobody can be in any doubt that the future will be difficult for each one of us and will exact sacrifices from us in every sphere of life."

Declaring that Germany sought to mobilize all of its human, moral and material resources to help heal the wounds of the war, Von Krosigk said that by following the simple path of justice in both domestic and foreign affairs the country could yet dispel the hatred against it and return to the family of nations.

Operating on their own power, without need of direct assistance of each other, the end of the war found the U. S., Britain and Russia controlling the German territory it was originally planned for them to occupy. In the U. S. zone alone, 400,000 American troops will be retained to stand watch.

From the development of Allied policy, it appears likely that military occupation of the country will be extended to permit close supervision during the rehabilitation period, with control over all phases of German life.

In addition to dismantling war factories and maintaining a watchful eye over other heavy industry, the Allies are expected to closely control the press, radio and motion pictures. Because the country occupied a key spot in the European economy, Germany's civilian manufacturers may be allowed to resume large scale production to assure the distribution of finished goods in surrounding rural areas.

Japs Next

For America, the end of hostilities in Europe means no slackening of the war effort, though the army plans to cut its total strength down to 6,968,000 men from 8,300,000, and civilian production is scheduled to return to the prewar 1939 level within a year.

Though the army intends to release about 2,000,000 men including 1,300,000 vets with extended battle service within one year of V-E Day, the navy intends to retain most of its personnel because of the major role the fleet will play in Pacific operations.

In undertaking the gigantic task of moving men and material to the Pacific from the European theater, it is estimated that six months will be required for accomplishing the greater part of the shift. Because of the need of establishing bases and supply facilities in the east for the big push against the Japs, service forces will be among the first shipped through the Suez or Panama canals.

Shift of the war from Europe to Asia also will result in unavoidable delays occasioned by the necessity of troops to await the arrival of heavy equipment on slow moving cargo ships and the need for readjustment to new weapons and accessories for tropical warfare.

Though the army recently announced that little retraining of combat troops from Europe would be required for war against the Japs, some specialized instruction will be needed.

Because the west coast fronts the Pacific theater, its ports and rail lines leading thereto will handle the bulk of shipments outward, with Atlantic and Gulf ports absorbing the excess. Because of the relatively undeveloped nature of the Pacific territories, unloading of and storage of supplies there will constitute a No. 1 problem.

Production Plans

Although the conflict will be reduced to a single front, war production still will dominate U. S. industry with certain material and manpower controls retained, and rationing will be maintained to continue to equitably spread short supplies.

Nonetheless, cutbacks in war contracts will free sufficient resources to permit the gradual resumption of civilian production up to where many items like electrical appliances, washing machines, radios and stoves will become available within six months. Other articles like shoes, clothing, lumber and chemicals will remain in tight supply, however, though the government plans priority assistance to help these industries increase their output.

Because of the need for extensive retooling and readjustment of facilities, the automobile industry will require almost half a year to start civilian production, it was estimated, and rationing of cars will continue until manufacture reaches about 100,000 a month.

With the end of the European war relieving demands of fuel supplies, gasoline rations are scheduled to be increased, with "A" card holders' allotments raised from four to six miles daily. Although more tires will become available, rationing will be retained since demand will far outrun supply.

Food Needed

Meanwhile, heavy domestic demand and European relief requirements will provide a big market for American food producers.

Europe alone will need 12,000,000 tons of imported food in the 12 months beginning in August to improve diets in liberated areas and prevent starvation in enemy territory, the U. S. department of agriculture reported.

Though the total could consist largely of wheat, of which this country has an abundance, it should include substantial quantities of fats, meats, eggs, dairy products and sugar, USDA said. However, supplies of these products are short in this country, too.

Marines Root Out Japs on Peleliu

It's been more than six months since American troops first landed on Peleliu, but they're still killing Japs there, according to Marine Combat Correspondent David Stick.

Consider that Peleliu is only six miles long and less than three miles wide; about the size of one of those "little lakes" up in Wisconsin, or a farm in Kansas, or the city of Miami Beach, Fla. The average marine stationed here thinks this island is just too small to hold comfortably both American and Jap troops, yet the labyrinth of caves on "Bloody Nose Ridge," only 1,100 yards from the airstrip, provides a place of concealment for scores of Japs who've been hiding there since last September.

FARM DRAFT:
Revision Vetoed

Declaring that "I do not believe . . . that congress intended to enact legislation formulating the national policy that agricultural employment was more essential than any other type of employment. . . ." Pres. Harry S. Truman vetoed an amendment to the Selective Service bill under which all essential farm workers would have been deferred regardless of their relative need by the services.

Cause of the effort to secure blanket deferment for essential farm workers because of local boards' interpretations of its provisions to mean that induction of such employees was permissible if their services were deemed of greater importance to the military forces, the Tydings amendment thus remains the guiding principle of the farm draft.

With Democrats and Republicans alike calling for repassage of the measure over the President's veto to safeguard 1945 farm production, 185 congressmen voted to carry the bill over the chief executive's head, 57 short of the two-thirds majority necessary.

LABOR:
New Rivalry

Rivals at home, the AFL and CIO are shaping as rivals in international labor affairs, with the AFL bucking the CIO's backing of the world trade union congress, which timed its convention with the San Francisco security conference and sought to obtain the latter's recognition as representative of labor.

Claiming that the world trade union congress was dominated by communist elements "who are not free to determine their destiny," the AFL declared "we have declined to identify ourselves with a movement that is inspired by a political philosophy which is designed to subordinate and subjugate man and property to the exclusive will of the state."

Declaring that the International Federation of Trade Unions was more representative of world labor, the AFL called for a convention of this body to shape future policy upon reorganization of the different member unions wrecked with the Nazi occupation of European countries.

Marital Tangle

To blond and petite 23-year-old Mrs. Robert A. McDowell of Long Beach, Calif., came one of the war's most ironic experiences, with the army's revelation that her first husband, who had been presumed dead, was found alive five months after she wedded again.

Married to Lt. Harold G. Goad, 27, in April of 1942, Mrs. McDowell was officially apprized of his supposed death last fall, one year after his bomber plummeted in flames near Vienna. In accordance with her first husband's wish that—"if anything should happen to me, go ahead and get married and be taken care of"—she then was wedded to Ensign Robert A. McDowell in December.

Declaring Lt. Goad "the man I've always loved," Mrs. McDowell decided to return to him. In seeking an annulment from Lt. McDowell, she said "I'm sure he'll understand. He's a great person."

Mrs. McDowell and Lt. Goad

POSTWAR POLAND:
No. 1 Problem

Big Three negotiations for the creation of a democratic postwar Polish government became further complicated with the Russian admission that Moscow holding 16 representatives of the Polish government-in-exile in London on charges of sabotage behind Red army lines after guaranteeing them safe conduct to discuss reorganization of the present Warsaw government.

Coming like a bombshell in the midst of the San Francisco postwar security conference, news of Moscow's action led U. S. Secretary of State Stettinius and British Foreign Minister Eden to demand an immediate explanation from Soviet Foreign Commissar Molotov. Said he: "You'll have to wait until their trial for their details. Anyway, the matter is of little importance."

Presumably called to Moscow to confer on the inclusion of various democratic elements into the pro-communist Warsaw government in accordance with an agreement reached at Yalta by the Big Three, the 16 individuals were leaders of the London exiles' underground forces. Relations between Moscow and the London exiles have been strained ever since the latter asked for an investigation of German charges that the Russians had slain 20,000 Polish army officers.

CREAMERY BUTTER

Although its production of creamery butter in 1944 had fallen 14 per cent Minnesota still produced 17 per cent of the U. S. supply, the Dairy Products Marketing association reported.

Immediately behind and down by only 11.5 per cent came Iowa (14.3 per cent of the nation's supply) and Wisconsin (8.4 per cent). Nebraska had accounted for 5.5 per cent, still 15 per cent less than it had produced in 1943.

THE DEFEAT OF THE SOUTHERN KINGDOM

GOLDEN TEXT—Come, and let us return unto the Lord.—Hosea 6:1.

History repeats itself. Men never seem to learn from the experiences of others, whether they be personal or national. Judah, the southern part of the divided kingdom, saw the downward path of Israel and its ultimate captivity. The same process went on in Judah, although hindered now and then by good kings who brought about a partial return to God.

Ultimately the day came when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar's troops and the people carried off to their long years of captivity in Babylon.

Jeremiah ministered as God's prophet during Judah's declining years, bringing them God's word of judgment for their sins and urging them to submit. His voice was unheeded and for his faithfulness he received only their hatred and persecution. God gave him the strength and grace to be true in a very difficult mission.

Our lesson for today tells how God in a graphic object lesson taught the prophet and the people that they were in the hands of a sympathetic but at the same time a sovereign God.

I. The Potter and His Work (vv. 1-4).

The maker of pottery took the lump of clay, placed it on his wheel, and with his hand formed it into the kind of vessel he wanted. If it became misshapen or showed a defect, he could moisten and remold the clay into another vessel as it suited him. The clay was in his hand to meet his purpose and his will.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan fittingly suggests that there are three things to be borne in mind here: a principle, a purpose, and a person. And as we apply the truth to ourselves as God's children, we spell the Person of the Potter with a capital "P," for He is none other than God Himself.

The principle is that God is absolutely sovereign, that He does as He wills for His own glory. Until we recognize that principle, "life will be a failure. If, however, I have discovered this principle alone, then my soul will be filled with terror. I must also see the purpose."

The purpose is the working out of His will for each of us. He knows us, and He has a plan for our lives, and is able to make that plan come to pass if we permit Him to do so.

But, as Dr. Morgan says, "If I know principle and purpose only, I shall yet tremble and wonder, and be filled with a haunting foreboding." But as "I press through the principle and beyond the purpose and discover the Person of the Potter, then the purpose will flame with light, and the principle that appears so hard and severe will become the sweetest and tenderest thing in my life."

God spoke to Jeremiah through the scene in the potter's house, and He also wants to talk to our hearts.

II. God and Judah (vv. 5-10, 15a, 17a).

The lesson is plain. God had for His people a high and glorious purpose. He wanted to bless them and use them for His glory. But they were a sinful and rebellious people, stiff-necked and stubborn in their unbelief, and the vessel of honor which God was trying to form was marred in His hand.

God did not act in anger or in disregard of their rights. He was forced to bring judgment upon them because of their own sin. That sin is stated in verse 15—they had forgotten God.

One trembles as he applies that test of God's requirement for blessing upon a nation to our own land. There is a haunting fear that while there are some who truly worship God, and a larger number who profess to worship Him, a great host of the people of America have forgotten God.

Does our nation remember Him and seek His counsel and blessing in its national affairs? Do we inquire after the ways of righteousness? Are we eager for spiritual revival and increasing grace even within the church?

Judah was to be scattered "as with an east wind"—and who does not know that it came to pass. Where are they today?

But even in the midst of judgment the Lord speaks of mercy. The Lord who will "pluck up, break down and destroy" (v. 7) the people who forget Him, is eager and ready "to build and to plant" the nation when it turns to Him.

The sure promise of God's future blessing upon a repentant Israel and Judah is written large in the messages of all the prophets.

The same God, eternally sovereign in His purpose, is our heavenly Father. The man or woman whose vessel of life has been marred by sin and failure need only yield anew to the Potter's blessed hand.

STUDY OF BIG FOUR AT PEACE CONFERENCE

SAN FRANCISCO. — The words and faces of the four leaders of the new world — Stettinius, Molotov, Eden and Soong—are almost as familiar to you as are the leaders who are absent, Truman, Chiang Kai-shek, Churchill and Stalin. Most people in this country could identify their voices on the radio without introductions. Yet meeting them close-up and seeing them in front of you in action you get deeper impressions.

Here is Molotov, the second man of Russia, perhaps the most interesting figure of the conference. His clothing and general appearance cast out the impression that he is a man of business — nothing else—a man so deeply immersed in his sole ideal he had no time for any other single thought outside of his business purpose. He can be friendly in address and approach, but there is an unfathomable depth of intensity in everything he does or says, a restrained intensity not always apparent, yet ever-present in the background.

Molotov

To my eye, he seems a man of contrasts whose real personality is unfathomably deep within him. He shows no weaknesses unless his own depth of intensity is a weakness in the extreme to which he sometimes carries it in action. His cold and calculating interior is balanced by a certain desire to break into levity at times and a certain warmth of cordiality.

Here is a hard man to deal with. He leaves you with the feeling you never know his thorough purposes—or him.

EDEN—BRITISH TRADITION

The Briton, Anthony Eden, spells Eton . . . cricket, playing fields, all that you know. From his impeccable mustache down to his spats, he is practically a picture of British tradition (the tall slender part of it, Churchill being the roly-poly half). Above his mustache, he is foreign office, the old League of Nations school tie.

Eden

He is more experienced in that subject of the league and how things were done at Geneva than any of the top quartet. In speaking he radiates the parliamentary manner, the straightforward style of speech used by ministers there. You will not realize until he has concluded and you start to analyze his words carefully, that he has carefully reserved behind a beautifully drawn curved line what he did not want to say.

STETTINIUS' EARNESTNESS

Stettinius seems to me in manner and purpose to be what a young chairman of the board of the U. S. Steel corporation should be. I think he has been widely underestimated by those who have followed only his brief political career. He has the direct business approach. His dominating quality I think is earnestness. In that tone—executive earnestness—he handled the beginnings of the conference as if it were a meeting of the board. No one else spoke except upon his invitation.

Stettinius

T. V. Soong, the Chinese leader, is a young business man also, neat, and polished in demeanor as well as utterance. I do not think he could be easily swayed. He speaks good American, as contrasted with English (no broad a's or British words) and he seems to me to have a financial type of mind.

T. V. Soong

These are all young men of the new world whose actions are to make the course of the world, great contrasts all with the professorial Wilson, shrewd Clemenceau and the bargaining politico Lloyd George—yet acting not without precise direction from the absentees who sit at the top desks in Washington, Moscow, London and Chungking.

The juncture at Torgau came about the same time as the one here, but was more than a little different.

The meeting of the minds on the first series of conference compromises was not even celebrated by an announcement of official comment although the press had been kept waiting two hours. To get it, Mr. Stettinius had called the newsmen together to give out the explanations and then had to tell them with confessed embarrassment that he could not.

VICTORY IN EUROPE!

Germany Forced to Capitulate After Six Years of Fighting; Allies Face Big Job in Pacific

Eleven hard and bitter months after General Dwight D. Eisenhower's armies smashed through the ramparts of "Fortress Europe" to set foot upon French soil, Germany's once proud wehrmacht, weakened after six years of the bloodiest war in history, bowed the knee unconditionally to the Allied powers.

Offered to Russia as well as the U. S. and Britain after earlier futile efforts to split the Allies by approaching the Anglo-Americans alone, Germany's surrender took place at General Eisenhower's headquarters in the little red school house in Reims,

These are the men—Roosevelt, Truman, Stalin and Churchill, who were responsible in directing the victory against Germany. Truman, committed to the Roosevelt foreign relation policies, together with Stalin and Churchill, will direct the United Nations in plans for world's peace.

France, at 2:41 a. m., May 7, with Lt. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith accepting Col. Gen. Gustav Jodl's capitulation. Later the surrender was ratified at Russian headquarters in battered Berlin, with Marshal Gregory Zhukov participating for the Reds.

Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz's order to German troops to cease firing came as a sort of anti-climax since the bulk of the Nazi forces already had laid down their arms in the face of the Allied avalanche. April 29, 1,000,000 Nazis surrendered in northern Italy and western Austria; May 4, another 1,000,000 gave up in Holland and Denmark, and on May 5, 400,000 quit in southern Germany.

As the stiff-necked German officers formally admitted defeat, neither they nor the beaten country's new ministers entertained any illusions as to the character of the Allied terms, with Foreign Minister Count Ludwig Schwenn Von Krosigk telling the people:

". . . Nobody must deceive himself on the harshness of the terms. . . . Nobody must have any doubt that heavy sacrifices will be demanded from us in all spheres of life. . . ."

Thus did the European war come to its end six years after the mighty German army, striking at the unprepared western powers, rolled through Poland; levelled the lowlands and France, and then turned back to the east again to challenge giant Russia.

As the Germans capitulated, behind them lay the remnants of a once all-powerful army, which, like Napoleon's, underestimated the vast steppes of Russia, and then found the U. S. and Britain gathering force behind its back; behind them lay Germany's blackened cities and shattered railway lines, pulverized by Allied aerial attacks; and behind them in the ruins of Berlin reportedly lay Adolf Hitler's dead body.

Because of the anti-climactic nature of the formal surrender, and also because of the premature announcement of the capitulation days before, some of the edge had been removed from the great event, with the result that the nation accepted the news with restraint. As Germany's fall was substantiated, people looked to the east, where the Japs still remain to be defeated and the entire resources of the navy and well over 6,000,000 troops may be needed to assure victory.

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

With America scheduled to take over the occupation of central and western Germany and western Austria in accordance with Allied plans to maintain strict supervision over the country until a thoroughly democratic administration can be established, U. S. military authorities figure on the detention of 400,000 Yanks in Europe.

As in the case in most wars, Germany's collapse came with a dramatic suddenness after a period of fierce resistance.

The first big break that signalized Germany's disintegration was the U. S. 1st army's surprise capture of the Ludendorff bridge spanning the Rhine below Cologne, permitting Lt. Gen. Courtney Hodges to build up a powerful bridgehead immediately below the vital Ruhr district and on the edge of the rolling plains leading eastward to Berlin.

As the 1st army's bold move threw the German command off balance, the remaining Allied forces in the west soon poured over the Rhine, last formidable water barrier guarding the heart of the reich. While British and Canadian troops struck out against eastern Holland the the North sea ports, the U. S. 9th army set about reducing the Ruhr valley while one wing of the 1st joined in the attack and another kept step with Lt. Gen. George Patton's famed armored columns dashing eastward across the reich. Meanwhile, the U. S. 7th and the French 1st armies drove into the Nazis' mythical redoubt in the Bavarian Alps.

As the American and British armies slashed through the German positions and turned to their rearward to isolate the enemy into separate pockets, the whole enemy's front lost its coherence, contributing to the disintegration of Nazi resistance.

With whole groups of German troops entrapped without hope of reinforcement, their defense varied, with the majority of the older, more practical men giving up upon being cornered while younger fanatics carried on in the face of overwhelming odds.

Meanwhile, the Russians had drawn up along the banks of the Oder river from the Baltic clear down to Silesia, while still other Red armies thrust eastward through Czechoslovakia and Austria. Once the Russians opened their all-out attack on Berlin, in the face of the Nazi collapse in the west, the giant pincer was near its close.

Twice taken to war in 25 years and twice defeated, with nothing to show but the anguish and suffering of conflict, the mass of the German people in American and British occupied territory accepted unconditional surrender with a stolidity that masked their inner feelings. East of the Elbe river where the Reds stood guard, however, the populace tread in apprehension over fear of reprisal for the Nazis' devastation of Russia in four years of bitter warfare. Previously, many of the people had tried to escape to the west, only to be turned back.

A PROCLAMATION

Here is a partial text of President Truman's victory proclamation:

"The Allied armies, through sacrifice and devotion and with God's help, have wrung from Germany a final and unconditional surrender. The western world has been freed of the evil forces which for five years and longer have imprisoned the bodies and broken the lives of millions upon millions of free-born men.

"Much remains to be done. The victory won in the west must now be won in the east. The whole world must be cleansed of the evil from which half the world has been freed.

"For the triumph of spirit and of arms which we have won and for its promise to people everywhere who join us in the love of freedom, it is fitting that we as a nation give thanks to Almighty God, who has strengthened us and given us the victory.

Now, therefore, I Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Sunday, May 13, 1945, to be a day of prayer.

"I call upon my countrymen to dedicate this day of prayer to the memory of those who have given their lives to make possible our victory."

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

OFFICIAL WORD

When the real V-E Day came, most U. S. citizens got absolute confirmation of the news before starting victory celebrations. They remembered the false reports of Saturday, April 28, that had swept over the nation only to be climaxed by a White House denial of the peace rumor. Pres. Harry S. Truman said at that time that he had been in contact with General Eisenhower and that there was "no foundation" for the peace report.

THESE EVENTS LED ALLIES TO VICTORY—

The beginning of the gigantic life-and-death struggle known as "World War II" is generally set as September 1, 1939, the day the German armies rolled into Poland. Two days later France and England declared war on Germany.

Blitzkrieg tactics flattened Polish resistance in less than a month. Then began the half year of "phoney war" at the Maginot line. In the spring of 1940 German troops overran Norway and Denmark, forcing out the British. Early in May the campaign that frightened the entire world opened. Holland, Belgium and then France itself capitulated by the middle of June. Italy came in on Germany's side. The British expeditionary force barely escaped destruction at Dunkerque.

September, 1940, saw the massed air attacks on Britain by which Hitler hoped for a quick victory. The RAF held off the Nazi bombers until winter, when weather brought a slackening of attacks. That autumn of 1940 was probably the period of gravest peril to civilization in many centuries. Britain almost succumbed.

During the spring of 1941 Nazi troops smashed into the Balkans to aid the Italians, invading Yugoslavia and Greece. Bulgaria joined the Axis voluntarily. Germany controlled all of continental Europe excepting Russia by the middle of the year.

As alarmed America prepared for defense, Japan attacked without warning at Pearl Harbor in the Hawaiian islands and the U. S. was immediately at war with both Japan and Germany.

By mid-1942, American marines stopped the Japs on Guadalcanal, in Africa the British halted the drive on the Suez canal and counterattacked successfully. The Russians epic defense of Stalingrad stalled the German thrust into the Caucasus. The tide had turned.

The great Russian counteroffensive began in February of 1943. It rolled fiercely until mid-July, when the retreating Nazis stiffened and brought it to a standstill in central Poland. Meanwhile the air offensive from the British Isles was battering German cities and ports, preparatory to the invasion.

June 6, 1944, was the big day—the invasion of western Europe from England. After landing on the coast of France, American and British troops battled inland. Almost all France was under Allied control by November, 1944. Advance tank units were attacking on the German border by December. A substantial German counteroffensive was checked as the year ended.

On March 2 the American Ninth army reached the Rhine river. Within two weeks this great natural defense line was crossed. Racing tank corps smashed to the Elbe river, 30 miles from Berlin, and halted to await junction with the Russians. This signal event took place on April 27. Far to the south, American and Russian armies were roaring through Austria to seal off southern Germany. Organized resistance crumbled as German soldiers gave up in enormous numbers.

Japs Face Allied Power

We have won a war, but there is still another one to win. Before we can win the war against Japan, there is the gigantic problem of supply and moving the troops from the European theater to the Pacific.

The army estimates that 5,000,000 foot soldiers will be needed to defeat Japan. Our entire navy and air forces will be required. Some men will be released from service—the individuals will be determined on total service, overseas service, combat service and number of dependents. The bulk of the army will not be released.

Divisions will be regrouped to bring them up to combat strength. It will take several months to organize troops, crate and pack equipment before the units are ready to sail against Japan.

Some divisions will be lucky. They will be routed through the United States, while others will sail through the Panama canal direct to a Pacific port. Those landed in the United States will be given some leave.

About Five Months.

The divisions that sail direct to the Pacific will arrive about five months after V-E Day. It will take weeks after landing to check all equipment, for additional shipping to be available to bring necessary war material. Training for a new type of warfare must be undertaken.

Japan has 6,000,000 troops which have not yet met combat from our forces. They are calling up an additional million. They will be ready for us. She can raise another 2,000,000 when necessary. These have all had youth training.

Do We Need To Teach Occupations

One of the most serious charges brought against the educational system of the past was that it did not prepare the average boy and girl for daily living. Education of the past often attempted to make white collar workers out of too many people. We have learned that the most desirable work, and the most needed services for civilization are those performed with the hands.

The object of ocupational education in the schools of today is to teach boys and girls how to work with their hands. In other words this kind of education attempts [illegible] cutting hair, in all of these he is rendering service to his fellowman and to his community. The object of this work in the modern high school is to teach and train him to do better these desirable things.

The United States government is very much interested in promoting this type of education. The Chilton County High School offers this type of education through its Diversified Occupations program. Today one does not have to be specially trained to get a job but in normal times only the trained man or woman will be the one holding a desirable position. If your son or daughter is not sure that he wants to go to college to prepare for [illegible] at this stage of the game look into the possibilities of the course of [illegible] Diversified Occupations.

Lyle Brown, API extension horticulturist, says that growers make more money when they produce quality products, and grade and pack them acceptably.

Fiberboard is more critical than ever before. Alabama growers and processors are being advised to order needed fruit, vegetable and egg containers at once.

A survey by J. E. Morris, county agent, reveals that farmers living on 108 farms in Elmore County have 9,205 acres in pastures, grazing crops and grain crops compared with 6,299 acres in 1944.

See Chilton County farm boys and girls in action at the Fat Stock Show in front of the County Agent's Office, Thursday, May 3. at 10:30 o'clock.

Plans are being made for our Homecoming the first Sunday in June. We plan to have singing in the afternoon and ask all singers to come and be with us. Watch the papers for further notices and for the morning program. Everyone is invited to come and spend the day with us.

Rev. George Ham will preach for us Sunday at the eleven o'clock hour. Let's all come for this service.

There will be a working at the church on Wednesday, May 30, before the first Sunday in June, for the purpose of cleaning the cemetery and church grounds. Everyone interested, come and bring tools to work with Don't forget the date.

We should all realize that we have much to be thankful for. With victory in Europe, there is a big job yet to do, so let's all fill our places in the church services each time. Our boys have fought and many have died for the freedoms we enjoy back home. Do you feel that your boys sacrificing is all in vain? Let's be able to say we did our part by keeping the home fires burning.

Mrs. J. D. Wiliams and sons of Wedomee, Ala., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Williams for several days.

SINCEREST Congratulations to the 1945 GRADUATES

GOOD LUCK

So congratulations are in order! And here we are, Johnny-on-the-spot to congratulate you, boy and girl graduates. We wish we could take you all by the hand and congratulate you in person, and if you will drop in to see us soon we will take advantage of the opportunity to do so. Meanwhile, the very best of luck to you.

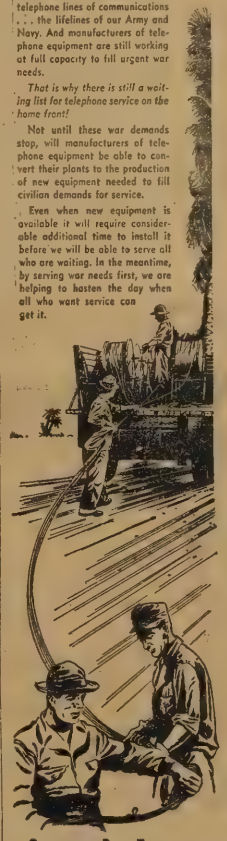
LINES OF COMMUNICATION



GROW LONGER and LONGER

Each new mile ahead toward total victory on all fronts lengthens the telephone lines of communications . . . the lifelines of our Army and Navy. And manufacturers of telephone equipment are still working at full capacity to fill urgent war needs.

That is why there is still a waiting list for telephone service on the home front!

Not until these war demands stop, will manufacturers of telephone equipment be able to convert their plants to the production of new equipment needed to fill civilian demands for service.

Even when new equipment is available it will require considerable additional time to install it before we will be able to serve all who are waiting. In the meantime, by serving war needs first, we are helping to hasten the day when all who want service can get it.

VEGETABLES AND BERRIES

Towering waves rolling on miles of broad beaches, acres of factories, smoke-plumed and glass walled—that's the picture Mr. and Mrs. America get in passing through New Jersey. But in the shadows of those rambling industrial plants and bordering the wide concrete highways, stretch thousands of acres of food-producing fields which will remain among the most fertile in the country as long as War Bonds are purchased to insure their future. More than 29,000 farms covering 40 per cent of the state's area grow $100,000,000 worth of corn, potatoes, beans, strawberries, asparagus, blueberries and other nourishment for millions of Atlantic coast dwellers with tons to spare for export.

Kathleen Norris Says:

A Felon Father, or No Father?

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"He ought to get a reprimand, a parole and a job; she ought to get a gold ring, and they both ought to get a small apartment."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

THIS is the case of an unborn baby in New York, whose father is about to begin a ten-year sentence at Sing Sing. The baby's mother and father are not married. The young mother wants to be married before her man goes to prison, because she believes that a baby has a better chance in life when born in wedlock, even under these circumstances. Teddy, the father, is anxious to marry, too. But the judge said "no," and the matter is still in doubt; the girl has engaged a lawyer who thinks he can win his case for her.

My verdict would be with the parents, in this case. According to the newspaper story I saw, the man is being punished for "snatching a handbag;" he would hardly be given a 10-year sentence just for that in any American court, so there must be something more to it. If he only snatched a handbag, reprehensible as that is, and if she only was too generous in love, as so many girls are in these turbulent times, then it seems to me he ought to get a reprimand, a parole, and a job; she ought to get a gold ring, and they both ought to get a small apartment, and eventually a baby, and settle down to sensible, self-controlled living like grown-up human beings.

The Lesser Handicap.

To have a felon for a father is indeed a handicap, but it is not in any way as serious a handicap as is illegitimacy. This shouldn't be so, but it is, unchangeably and ineradicably. Part of the reason is given by the prospective mother herself, who tells the court she wants her baby to have a name—yes, even though it's the name of a convict father. The very fact that she feels so, and all her woman friends feel so, means that while they may pity her, and deplore the circumstances of having a husband in Sing Sing, none of that pity will extend itself to the baby, or stretch on into the baby's life. His father will presently be free, and he and the mother will either get a divorce, or will go away and begin a new life together. Whichever they do, the baby doesn't suffer. Neighbors shift and change, newcomers don't know the story, nobody is too keenly interested. Nobody is ever going to look up the City Hall records and ascertain that this baby came a few months too soon. Even his father's sin can be lived down.

So much for the felon's baby. With the illegitimate baby it is all different. Firstly and lastly, and always his mother feels the blight upon him, and he feels a reflection of it. She may marry again, and have other children, for whom she will always entertain quite a different feeling; she will feel respect for their socially secure status, none for that of the first child. In many legal connections the illegitimate son will suffer injustices — yes, they are injustices of course, but you can't change settled laws because they shame and hurt and cripple your child.

For example; a baby was born out of wedlock in my native city about 30 years ago. The mother was a girl of a good family, who refused to marry the father, who was pretty worthless. She faced the music, had her child, married again; her husband adopted the baby girl and gave him his name. Three other girls were born of this marriage, the little adopted one sharing their lives and believing herself one of them. Presently the man's stern old father died, leaving a handsome fortune to each of "my three granddaughters." Winifred, the adopted child, was then 18, a joyous, clever, popular girl whose life was stricken down as if by death when she realized who and what she was. In that moment of revelation she seemed to lose not only father, but mother, and to lose herself, too, her identity, her place in the sun.

Safer With A Name.

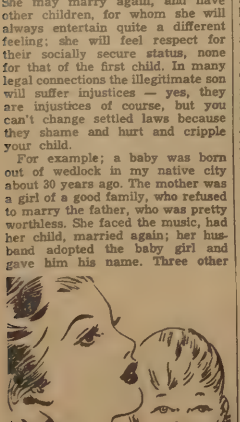
The change in her was so pitiful that something had to be done about it, and applications were made to three fashionable eastern schools. No one of them would accept an illegitimate person as a student. Winifred had to learn this, too. Eventually she did go to college, then to Arizona for a year, and then to her grave. Old friends said sorrowfully then that she always had been delicate; always had had those heavy chest colds. But a few of us knew why she died; it was of shame and despair.

Any baby is safer with a name, especially if his mother is desperately determined to give him that name. She feels it will be a real misfortune to him not to have it, and if she feels that way it will be. Her whole attitude toward him will be saner and more secure when she is married.

And who knows what will happen then? The man may be paroled. The anchor that a wife and child represent may be the thing he needs to help him into an honorable career. In all prisons there are men — hundreds of them, who have yielded — like all the rest of us! —to a moment of weakness, and, unlike all the rest of us, have had to pay a cruel price for it. The lawyer in this case says in a memorable phrase that his client is about it, but Welles didn't mind. neither the man nor the woman; his client is the unborn baby. That baby already has rights; his mother is wise to plead for them.

LET THEM BE MARRIED

A rare but extremely poignant problem is discussed in this issue. A man has been sentenced to a long prison term, and a young woman is soon to become the mother of his child. He is willing, even anxious to marry her before he goes to the penitentiary. She, too, wants the social status that marriage gives, even at worst. This unhappy mother-to-be is thinking rather of the child's welfare than her own. She wants it to "have a name."



The trial judge who has the convicted father under his control does not approve of a marriage, however. He believes that both the mother and baby would be more stigmatized by this connection with a felon than they would be by openly admitting illegitimacy.

Miss Norris thinks that the judge is wrong. Both for the baby's and the mother's sake, even perhaps for the father's, these unfortunate people should be married, she believes. People will forget about the father's penal servitude faster than they will about a birth out of wedlock, says Miss Norris.

Cheerful Kitchens

Color can make your kitchen a bright and cheerful place to work. Before you select a color scheme, remember that light-colored, smooth surfaces reflect light.

If the kitchen is sunny, use cool colors such as blue, blue-green, green, or blue violet. If it is dark and gloomy it needs the warmth of yellow, yellow-green, orange, yellow-peach, tan or cream. Limit brilliant colors to small areas. Use them in window curtains, dishes, kitchen utensils, tables and chairs.

STAGE—SCREEN—RADIO

FRANK BORZAGE, top-notch director, has chosen "Concerto" for his first Republic picture under the producer-director pact. It's an original story by Borden Chase, who got $100,000 for it—twice what was paid for "Gone with the Wind." Peggy Constance, who's a pianist, aged 13, will make her acting debut in it; she's the daughter of the head waiter at Hollywood's famous Brown Derby. Borzage thinks so highly of her musical ability that he's establishing a scholarship to prepare her for the concert stage.

—*—

Dr. Frank Black is quick to recognize the value of new musical works, often plays them for the first time on the air. Last June, when conducting the NBC Symphony orchestra, he introduced Menotti Salti's "Mirage." This year he introduced Salti's "Nocturne."

FRANK BLACK

—*—

It seems almost prophetic that Anne Blythe, who broke her back in that tobogganing accident, was booked for a picture called "Danger Signal." Mona Freeman is now replacing her. The picture stars Faye Emerson and Zachary Scott.

Mary Carr, 71, who played mother roles in pictures more than 25 years ago, makes a screen come-back as a gun-toting pioneer woman in "Union Pacific Scouts." The picture is directed by her son, Thomas Carr, who persuaded her to come out of retirement to join him in his first directorial job. The picture stars Sunset Carson. Old-timers will think it should star Mary Carr.

Years ago a British army officer came to this country and traveled west with a wagon train to settle in the Dakota territory. Now his son, Joseph Kane, dean of directors at Republic, plans to make a picture, "Dakota," in that same country.

One hundred and fifty local extras were used for a single location scene in Metro's "They Were Expendable," at Key Biscayne, Fla., and all but thirty of them were returned servicemen available for civilian employment. Ex-veterans out of uniform were given top priority in the search for local talent. John Ford, fresh from navy combat duty, directs the picture, starring Robert Montgomery and John Wayne.

Sure sign of success—following a recent preview of "Those Endearing Young Charms," the RKO radio studio has no less than 18 requests from fan magazines for photographs and interviews on Bill Williams, who plays the second male lead.

—*—

This seems to be the day of the piano prodigies. Richard Kerbel, 11, makes his film debut in RKO's "Ding Dong Williams." Richard, who played at Carnegie hall last year, has given 22 concerts since January, 1943, and appeared in radio and television programs.

—*—

It seems as if there's always a McHugh in a Leo McCarey production. In "Going My Way" Frank McHugh played Bing Crosby's pal. Frank wasn't available for McCarey's Rainbow production, "The Bells of St. Mary's," but his brother Mat is carrying on the tradition.

—*—

Orson Welles was doing a solo scene for "Tomorrow is Forever," in which he stars with Claudette Colbert and George Brent. Shooting was about to start when Cameraman Joe Valentine said "Mr. Welles, you're a foot closer to the camera than you were during rehearsals." He was half apologetic about it, but Welles didn't mind. "I'm always edging up," said he. "Everybody knows I try to be the whole show."

—*—

ODDS AND ENDS—Loretta Young has no competition in "Along Came Jones"; she's the only woman in the cast. . . . Dick Powell, who switched from crooning to crime so successfully in "Murder, My Sweet," continues his new career in his next RKO picture, "Cornered." . . . In "The Enchanted Cottage" Herbert Marshall, playing a blind man, wore contact lenses in every scene—says the only trouble was that they distracted him when he had to remember long stretches of dialogue. . . . Beatrice Kay got a new contract with 20th Century-Fox after they saw her work in Billy Rose's "Diamond Horseshoe."

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

Toast to Good Health . . . Raw Vegetables!

(See Recipes Below)

Vitamins for Health

When Mother Earth is bountiful in her output, there's no good reason for stinting on mineral and vitamin-rich protective foods.

This is the time to plan meals mainly of vegetables, first, from necessity because rationed foods are high in point value and scarce; and secondly, because we should try to build up our health as much as possible to reap personal and community benefits.

Vitamin A.

No one should lack for this familiar vitamin that comes at the beginning of the alphabet because it is easily obtained in dairy foods, carrots, greens, liver, butter, apricots, prunes and tomatoes. It is especially essential for growth and the maintenance of normal resistance to infection.

Vitamin B1.

If the children or adult members of the family show signs of losing their appetite, check into these sources for vitamin B1 or thiamin: dried beans and peas, lean pork, whole grain cereals, yeast, milk, cauliflower, chicken, peanuts and egg yolk. In addition to being necessary to maintain appetite, this vitamin aids in growth and helps maintain the normal function of the digestive organs and nervous system.

Vitamin C.

One of our basic nutrition rules definitely states that we should eat at least one citrus fruit a day. We need this fruit for assuring enough vitamin C for well-nourished gums and teeth as well as to maintain normal bone structure, the normal strength of capillary walls and the prevention of scurvy. You'll find it plentiful in oranges, lemons, grapefruit, pineapples, strawberries, tomatoes, raw cabbage and greens, liver, green pepper and peas.

Vitamin D.

Vitamin D has to do exclusively with bone and teeth building—sound bones, strong teeth and the prevention of rickets. Vitamin D is as hard to find as vitamin A is easy. Its sources are few: fish liver oils (cod, halibut), fortified milk and cream, egg yolks and liver. If your doses of these foods are small, then get a big dose of sunshine—that's vitamin D, too.

Vitamin G.

This vitamin, also called riboflavin, is found in many of the same foods as vitamin B1. In addition to the part it plays in normal nutrition, it is also essential to growth, cell respiration, and good nervous health.

Vitamin P-P.

Most of us are more familiar with nicotinic acid, which is just another name for this vitamin. You'll get your share if you eat lean meats and liver, salmon, wheat germ, yeast, tomatoes, greens and buttermilk. It's responsible for good, clear healthy skin and the normal functioning of the gastro-intestinal tract.

Now, how do we go about getting all these vitamins into our diet? We will have to include foods from each of the groups mentioned daily. This is especially important with the B and C vitamins because they cannot be stored in the body as is vitamin A.

The following recipes will give you good health as well as good eating. If vegetables are eaten raw, they are more valuable:

Tomato Stuffed Salad.
(Serves 4)

4 medium-sized tomatoes
3 ounces cream cheese
2 tablespoons green onion, chopped
¼ cup green peppers, chopped
½ medium-sized cucumber, chopped
3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
¼ cup salad dressing

Peel tomatoes. Cut slices from top and scoop out centers. Sprinkle with salt; invert to chill. Blend cream cheese with enough cream to soften. Line tomato cups with this mixture. Combine remaining ingredients; fill tomato cups. Chill thoroughly. Serve with additional salad dressing in lettuce cups.

Jellied Perfection Salad.
(Serves 6)

1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
1½ cups hot water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup diced cucumber
½ cup sliced green onions
½ cup sliced radishes
1 cup chopped celery

Soften gelatin in cold water. Dissolve in hot water. Add lemon juice, vinegar and salt. Chill until partially set; add remaining ingredients. Chill until firm. Serve on crisp lettuce with mayonnaise.

Cabbage Pepper Slaw.
(Serves 6)

4 cups finely shredded cabbage
½ cup chopped green pepper
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon white pepper
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 teaspoon celery seed
2 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
½ cup salad dressing

Combine vegetables, salt, pepper, sugar and celery seed. Combine vinegar, mustard and salad dressing. Add to vegetables and mix thoroughly.

Ambrosia Salad.
(Serves 4 to 6)

2 bananas, sliced
¾ cup diced orange
½ cup seedless grapes
¼ cup chopped dates
3 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ cup moist coconut, grated

Combine fruits; sprinkle with lemon juice; chill. Add creamy mayonnaise dressing which has been blended with sour cream. Serve on crisp lettuce and garnish with coconut.

Lynn Says:

Handy Hints: To keep food warm when serving and eating, make certain both serving dishes and plates are as hot as possible.

Place a teaspoon of salt in water in which eggs are cooked. This helps prevent shells from cracking.

Young spring rhubarb does not have to be peeled when baking for pies, canning or making sauces and puddings.

For a delicious pudding topping, mix two tablespoons of orange marmalade into one cup whipped cream.

To save time in making fruity desserts, add sugar or honey to fruit or berries (strawberries, raspberries, rhubarb, etc.) and place in a shallow baking dish. In place of pie crust or biscuit topping use a crumbling of flour, sugar, a little butter and cinnamon.

MUCH SUFFERING
Constipation may cause no symptoms for a long time, but unless corrected will finally impair the health. Symptoms associated with advancing constipation are loss of appetite, heavily coated tongue, tired feeling and mental depression. Headache, dizziness, anemia, and skin disturbances such as acne, are commonly experienced. In severe cases, neuralgia and joint pains occur. Indigestion, with gas formation and colic, and piles and fissures frequently add to the discomforts of severe chronic cases.

For the end of the European War, we join with all other Americans in fervent thanks. Our Army and Navy have done an extraordinary job. The coordination of their efforts with those of our country's allies has resulted in history's greatest military victory. While most of the credit must go to the fighting men, much should go to the men and women in the Service of Supply, that important branch of military service without which battles cannot be won. Credit, too, is due the men and women in government offices, in factories and mines and on farms everywhere, whose devotion to their work has resulted in the turning out of the implements and supplies of war in the huge quantities required. Business, industry and public officials should receive praise for the unselfish parts they have played.

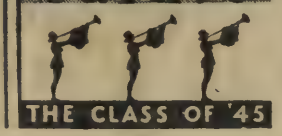
But let's not forget—only ONE war has ended. Let us resolve that we will not slow down—let us resolve that we will continue to work diligently so that our men in the Pacific war may have the hope that some day not too far in the future they may hear the glorious news, "This war, too, is ended."

Our Responsibilities

Let us remember our responsibilities to the men and women who will be returning from the Army, Navy and Marines. They have sacrificed much, whether or not they have been in combat.

Alabama Power Company will try to fit into a suitable job every regular employee of the Company who returns from military service and will try to qualify for jobs those who return to us physically handicapped as a result of their war experience.

Having carried out this responsibility, we of Alabama Power Company recognize another—a responsibility that we will accept and which we feel sure that others will accept with us. That is the responsibility of resuming, in accelerated fashion, the industrial and rural development of Alabama, so that as the years roll by, there will be more and more jobs and opportunities not only for our returning soldiers and sailors, but for their younger brothers and sisters who will be citizens of tomorrow.



We are confident that there WILL be opportunities. We believe that there will be opportunities because we believe that as an example of what cooperation and coordination did to win one war, and is doing to win another—government, business, labor and agriculture will in a spirit of understanding join in the common aim of preserving the biggest opportunity of all—the opportunity of free enterprise and initiative—the opportunity for a man or an organization with an idea to take a chance and make a success of it if he can.

Many Alabama poultrymen are making more money from their flocks by selling the hens in the spring when egg prices decline to a low level and then raising layers to start egg production the following fall. "These layers produce eggs at a high rate through the fall and winter of high prices," reports John Ivey, extension poultryman, who says that "diseases are substantially reduced because laying houses are vacant several months each year."

When the recipe calls for flouring chickens, chops or other meat before cooking, try this. Put flour, salt and pepper in a paper bag, drop in the meat pieces and shake thoroughly. The seasoned flour may be used more than once.

Sgt. and Mrs. Alfred J. Hicks and little daughter, Carol Ann, visited Mr. and Mrs. Patterson Hicks this past week end. Sgt. Hicks was on his way from Camp Livingston, La., to Fort Ord, Calif. He was given a twenty-day furlough to visit his relatives in Alabama. His wife and daughter will go with him as far as their home in Ogden, Utah.

Sgt. Hicks has been in the U. S. Army ten years, three years he spent in Hawaii and two years in Alaska.

SGT. ROBERT W. SUMNER LIBERATED

A letter was received Thursday by Mrs. Nell Sims of Clanton from her broher, Sgt. Robert W. Sumner, who has been a prisoner of war in Germany since November 13th, 1944. The letter was written April 26th, the day he was liberated, and "Bob" says he will be home in about a month and to tell Dad, R. J. Sumner of Mobile, that he will come by to see him first if he comes through the southern part of the state.

Sgt. Sumner enlisted in the Army Air Corps in October. 1940, and has been overseas two years. He was with the Fifteenth Air Force in Italy and was on the famous "Lone Wolf Mission" over Blechhammer, Germany, from which his plane, a B-17, failed to return.

Private Henry E. Boyd, of Route 2, Verbena, has been selected to attend the Enlisted Communidation Course of the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla.

First Lieutenant Raymond H. (Bill) Traywick has reported to Miami Beach. Fla. for reassignment after spending twenty-one days furlough with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Traywick, at Maplesville.

Lt. Traywick completed 35 missions over enemy territory in the Mediterrean theatre as pilot of a B-24 bomber with the Fifteenth Air Force.

He has been awarded the distinguished flying cross, air medal, with three oak clusters and the European theatre ribbon with two stars. He also wears a Presidential Unit Citation.

His mother accompanied him to Miami Beach for a few days stay.

Sgt. Harold T. Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Lawrence, has arrived at Miami, Fla., for reassignment, after spending a furlough here with his parents and wife.

Sgt. Lawrence was overseas 33 months in the Middle East, where he was a crew chief mechanic. He has been awarded three Distinguished Unit Citations.

AWARDED BRONZE OAK LEAF CLUSTER

With the Fifteenth Air Force in Italy as an assistant crew chief in the engineering section of the veteran 455th Bombardment Group, Sgt. Ira F. Farmer of Route 1, Clanton, was recently authorized to wear the first Bronze Oak Leaf Cluster to the Distinguished Unit Badge when his group was cited, for the second time, "for outstanding performance of duty in armed conflict with the enemy.

AWARDED COMBAT INFANTRYMAN'S BADGE

With the 112th Regt. of the 28th Infantry Division in Germany, Sgt. Cornelius E. Cagle. Jr., has been awarded the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Sgt. Cagle, who is connected with Intelligence and Reconnaissance, has participated in the Battles of Bulge, Colmar Pocket in Alsace, Crossing of the Rhineland and Rhine River.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius E. Cagle, Sr., of Stanton, Ala.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Burnett, of Stanton, Ala., whose son, Buck Burnett, was captured and taken prisoner in Germany, July 14, 1943, had not heard from him since January of this year until recently, when they received word that he had been liberated April 14, 1945.

He is now in a hospital in Belgium and is expected home to visit his parents and friends soon.

J. R. Jones, S 1-C (AMM) from Hutchinson, Kansas, is spending a 10-day leave here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Jones on Route One.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived at Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace the town bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Major Joppolo recalled the order, to permit food and water to enter the city. M. Cacopardo came to the Major asking for permission to see General Marvin, and deliver information on important German troop movements. He was given his pass and set out for the General's headquarters. He was determined to aid the Americans against the Nazis.

CHAPTER XIII

"Oh," said the sentry, "why didn't you say you had a pass? Sure, the General's here." And he shouted: "The Old Man's in, ain't he, Buck?"

"Yeah, I think His Nibs came in about half an hour ago."

"Yeah, he's in," the sentry said. "What you want to see him about?"

Cacopardo pulled out the tissue paper. "I can tell you where are the Germans," he said.

"Right up there," the sentry said, pointing up the driveway to the main door of the villa. "Right in that there door."

The jeep drove up to the main door. There was another sentry there. When Cacopardo tried to go in, the sentry put his bayoneted rifle across the path. Cacopardo jumped back, alarmed. "I am no enemies," he said. "I have the paper to see General Marvin," and he stretched out the pass. Cacopardo learned quickly, for a man his age.

The sentry took the pass. "Brother, I doubt if you can see the General right now," he said. "He don't like to see no one in the mornings. You stand here a minute." The sentry called the corporal of the guard.

The corporal of the guard came right back. "This way, brother," he said.

He led Cacopardo to a man at a desk.

"Name," the man said gloomily.

"Cacopardo."

"Is that a first name, or a last name?" the sour man said.

"That is the name of my family," Cacopardo said.

"How you spell that?"

Cacopardo spelled it out. The man wrote laboriously: Cacaporato.

"First name," the unhappy man said.

"Matteo."

"You got to spell those Dago names."

Cacopardo spelled it and the man misspelled it.

"Who you want to see?"

"General Marvin."

"You haven't got a chance of seeing him," the man said. "There's a war going on, Dago. What you want to see the General about?"

Cacopardo reached in his pocket for the tissue paper. "I can show you where are the Germans," he said.

"You'll have to talk with G-two about that," the man said, and he pointed with his pencil. "First door on the right, where it says Colonel Henderson."

Cacopardo went to the door marked Colonel Henderson, and he knocked.

"Walk in," a voice shouted.

"General Marvin?" Cacopardo asked.

"Upstairs, upstairs," the impatient voice, which belonged to a full colonel, said. Cacopardo started out. "Say, wait a minute."

Cacopardo turned around. The Colonel said: "Who are you, anyway?"

"Cacopardo Matteo, I was sent to see General Marvin."

"General Marvin doesn't like Italians," the Colonel said. "What do you want to see him about? You better not ask him for any favors, he'll kick you out, personally, himself."

Cacopardo reached in his pocket for the tissue paper. "I can show you where are the Germans," he said.

"You've got no business taking that kind of thing to General Marvin. What do you think we have a G-two section for around here? You can just show that to me."

"I was sent to see General Marvin. That is the one I am going to see."

After an argument with Colonel Henderson, Cacopardo was sent upstairs under guard, was stopped and questioned by a sentry at the head of the stairs, was sent downstairs because he did not have a proper Division pass, was given a pass, was taken upstairs again, was questioned as to age, religion, political beliefs and sex by a sergeant, was interviewed by a staff officer who doubted whether the General would be free to see him, was referred to Colonel Middleton, the General's Chief of Staff, was questioned by Colonel Middleton's secretary, who thought the Colonel was busy, was finally admitted to Colonel Middleton, who, after an argument, agreed to see whether the General would see Cacopardo, which he doubted.

At the moment, General Marvin was playing mumble-te-peg with Lieutenant Byrd, his aide. They had found that a certain mahogany table took the knife beautifully. The General had just reached the double flip off the forehead.

Colonel Middleton walked in just as the General let the knife go off his forehead. The surprise of Colonel Middleton's entrance was just enough to throw the General off his aim, and the knife clattered on the table and did not stick in. This annoyed the General.

"Haven't I told you to knock, Middleton?"

"Yes, sir. There's an old Italian here wants to see you."

"Middleton, what's the matter with you? Didn't I tell you I didn't want to see any more Italians?"

"Yes, sir. But this one seems to be above the average. He was sent to you by one of our people. He says he has some information you would want."

"Well, show him in. What are you standing there for? Show him in."

And so Cacopardo was finally brought into the presence of the General. By this time he was just as angry as the General, and being some twenty years the General's senior, he considered it his privilege to vent his anger first.

He found perfect expression for his anger in what he saw on the surface of the mahogany table.

"You are a barbarian," he said.

This was not a very good way for old Cacopardo to begin with General Marvin, especially since he had two strikes against him to begin with: he had caught the General in a bad mood, and he was Italian.

"A what?" the General bellowed in his famous voice.

"I said, you are a barbarian. How dare you chop and pick at the surface of my friend Salatiello's table?"

For the sake of argument, it would have made no difference whatsoever

"You are a barbarian," he said.

if General Marvin had known that Salatiello had been thirteen years dead. The General could not possibly have been more outraged. He bellowed at the walls, "who is this wop, anyhow?"

"That table was made circa 1775, when your country had not even begun to existed, barbarian. It was carved by Vincenzio di Lucca of Parma. I cannot calculate the values of that table. You are a pig to chop and pick at it."

Colonel Middleton and Lieutenant Byrd rushed into the room. They grabbed old Cacopardo, and started to push him out.

"Wait!" the General roared, "Who sent that idiot here, Middleton?"

"I don't know, sir, it was some Major."

"You don't know? It's your business to know."

Colonel Middleton asked Cacopardo: "Who was it who sent you here?"

"My friend Major Joppolo, who is not a barbarian."

Colonel Middleton said: "What unit is this Major from?"

"Adano, from Adano," old Cacopardo said. "From my home, Adano."

"Adano," the General shouted. "There's something about that place. What is it about Adano, Middleton? What is it?"

"The cart, General," Colonel Middleton said. Colonel Middleton would never forget Adano as long as he lived.

"The cart? What cart? Don't talk in riddles, Middleton. What cart?"

"The cart that we threw off the road, sir. The mule we shot, sir."

General Marvin remembered, and the memory turned his face a shade darker. "So that's the Major who sent you," he roared. "What was that name again? I want to remember that name."

"Joppolo," Middleton said.

General Marvin shouted: "Joppolo. Write that down, Middleton, remember that name. That Major's a wop, too. I remember now, he's a wop himself, isn't he, Middleton?"

In the interests of justice, Colonel Middleton said: "I don't remember, sir."

General Marvin shouted: "Well, I do. Now throw this crazy Italian out of here, and if you let any more Italians in here, Middleton, I'll break you back to a second lieutenant."

"Yes, sir," Colonel Middleton said. As they started to run him out, Cacopardo said: "But I have informations. I can tell you where are the Germans. It is important. The Germans, the Germans."

But the General was much too far gone in rage. Cacopardo was taken out and sent home. He couldn't get anyone, not even the sentry at the front gate, to listen to a description of the German positions before Pinnaro.

Behind Major Joppolo's back, Captain Purvis was very critical of him. To his face, the Captain was cordial, even friendly.

The two men now had, besides their mere community of tongue, another thing to draw them together: they both knew the same girls. In a foreign land, that is enough to make Damon and Pythias out of two sworn enemies.

One day at lunch they talked about the girls. They talked as American men do talk about girls when they are abroad.

The Captain said: "That younger one, that Francesca, she sure is nice."

"Just a matter of taste," the Major said.

"Yeah," the Captain said. "What do you say we go up there tonight and see 'em?"

"Let's do that," the Major said. "That would be fun." Then he wondered why he had reacted so quickly and so happily to the Captain's suggestion. The Captain's attitude toward these girls disgusted the Major. The Captain regarded the girls as trash; he seemed to think of them as something to buy and sell, like Italian watermelon and grapes and red wine. The Major refused to believe that he was falling into this way of thinking.

And so it happened that the two dissimilar men went that evening to the house at 9 Via Vittorio Emanuele with very similar feelings of excitement and anticipation.

Major Joppolo and Captain Purvis caught the family of Tomasino by surprise that evening. The fat Rosa was sitting on the living-room floor plucking a chicken, and there were feathers all over the room. The radio was on, and the two little daughters of the sister, who was in Rome were sitting by it, also on the floor. Francesca and Tina were in brightly colored pajamas, lying on the floor side by side, reading together a cheap Italian romance called "Un Cuore in Tre." Tomasino, who opened the front door, grimly led the two Americans into the room without any advance notice.

Everyone jumped up, the little girls squealing, fat Rosa calling the name of the Lord in English, and the big girls shouting greetings to the Americans.

The family of Tomasino and their guests spent the next five minutes on their hands and knees picking up the chicken feathers. When that was done Rosa said to Tomasino: "Sad one, put the girls to bed." Tomasino led the little ones out without gentleness. Rosa retired to the kitchen with the feathers and the bird, to finish her job.

As soon as the two officers and the two girls in pajamas were left alone, Tina said: "Mister Major, I want to talk with you," and she stretched out her hand for his and led him into her bedroom. Captain Purvis's sober shouts followed them this time: "Hey, don't desert me. I can't talk to this lovely thing. Where you going?" And he subsided, and settled down for an evening of desperate sign language.

Tina sat down on her bed and the Major sat down on a chair by a wooden dressing table.

"I want to ask you something, Mister Major," Tina said.

"Yes?" the Major said. He did not know what to expect, but he expected it would please him, whatever it was.

"How long do you think the war will last? Here on Italian soil, I mean."

The Major found that he was not pleased. "That's a very serious question," he said. "Let's not talk about war. That's all I have all day long, war, war, war."

"But I have a special reason for wanting to know," Tina said. "How long do you think it will last?"

"How should I know?" the Major asked. His voice was a little testy. "If I knew that, I would have to know a lot more about our plans for the campaign, and if I knew the plans, I would know military secrets, and I couldn't tell you secrets if I knew them."

"But you can guess, Mister Major."

"All right, I guess two more months."

"And how long do you think it will be after those two months before our Italian prisoners of war are released?"

Major Joppolo got the point very quickly, and it did not please him in the least. "You have a sweetheart who has been captured?"

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

When suffrage and liberty came to the inhabitants of Ceylon, a woman was seen to stand before the ballot box with her hands folded in prayer. She was praying to the ballot box to grant to her and to her people the things that she was voting for. She was a heathen, but she was in devotion, uttering her prayers in harmony with the ballot that she was going to cast. In our Democracy we have Chrisian ideals, but often do we pray one way and vote another. Why not be above the heathen and let our voting sustain our prayers? No party affiliation should ever be allowed to trample down our Christian convictions.

A soldier boy wrote back home that God can and God does answer prayer when a man is twenty-five thousand feet in the air. Before taking off on his mission he prayed to God to be his pilot, not his co-pilot, and as his ship was tossed about in the currents something went wrong. Then the young man calmly said, "Lord, Thou art flying this ship, and my trust is in Thee." When he said this the plane righted itself and all was well. When we take off in life, we should not ask God to be our co-pilot, but to be our pilot. We sale with Him. The Psalmist said. "I will set the Lord always before me." There is but one place that God can fill in my life and in your life and that is the first place. Make Him the pilot and then you be the co-pilot with Him.

What do we bring to a covered dish supper Do we carry the dish that we like best, or do we carry the dish that we would not have on our own table? It is true that we carry the dish that we like best ourselves. We carry the dish that we could relish at the meal. When you go out to school, when you go down to the office or the store, when you go to your work in the morning, what kind of a dish do you carry with you? We should be very careful to carry into life the things that we would have life to bring back to us. If you do not like snaps and snarls, then do not carry that dish with you into the feast of life. Always give out to life what you would have life to give back to you. If you would like for people to be sweet and nice to you, then you be sweet and nice to them.

Mrs. C. H. Middlebrooks and daughter, Ann from Birmingham spent the week-end with their mother and grandmother, Mrs. Bob Jones.

DODGE CITY

Named for Col. Henry I. Dodge, Dodge City, Kansas, became one of the country's most picturesque cattle centers, the cowboy capital of the southwest. There the Santa Fe and Arkansas River Trails met. Travellers came with stories of Indian attacks on wagon trains. Cowboys drove in herds of thousands of cattle for shipment east on the railroad. Others rested and watered herds of young steers there before going north. The songs of soldiers and hunters mingled with the shouts of cowboys. Fearless, spirited men whose grandsons are now turning back the enemies far overseas founded that city. War Bonds furnish weapons and food for the men fighting today to fulfill their ancestors' dreams. U. S. Treasury Department

AMERICAN HEROES

by WOODY COWAN

DURING the amphibious invasion of Southern France, Lieut. Ray Hamilton Allen, U.S.N.R., led his unit close to an enemy held beach and delivered withering rocket fire against hostile defenses. By his cool courage and inspiring leadership under fire, he contributed materially to the effective neutralization of enemy defenses. For this heroic service he received the Bronze Star. Amphibious warfare requires scores of ships and it takes War Bonds to provide them. U. S. Treasury Department

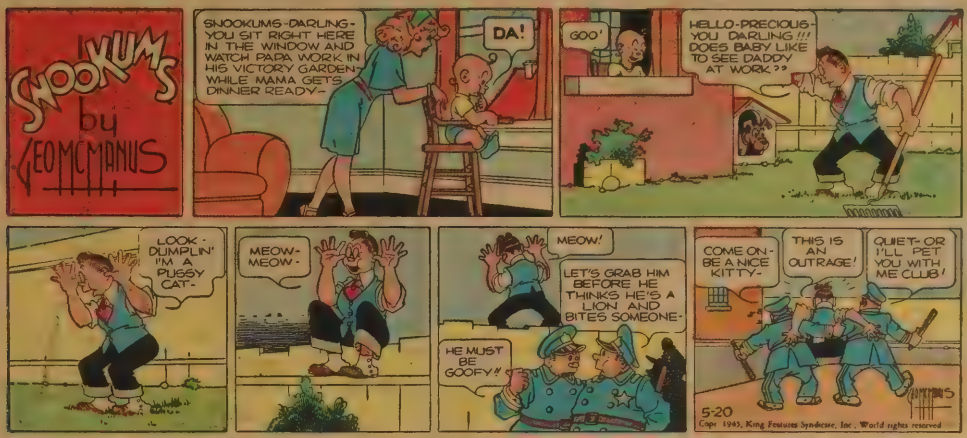
Will you hold a FAT SALVAGE BEE for your country?

HERE IN AMERICA, when a neighbor needs help, all the folks pitch in and give him a hand. Many a harvest would have been lost without the help of an old-fashioned husking bee. Right now, your country is calling on you, the women in towns and on the farms, to hold a fat-salvage bee and help meet a critical fat shortage.



TO MEET THE NEEDS of our country, used fats are desperately wanted. Scrape pans. Skim soups and gravies. Save meat trimmings and table scraps; once a week melt them down. Your butcher will give you 2 red points and up to 4 cents for every pound. If you have any difficulty, call your County Agent or local Salvage Committee.

Needed this year: 100,000,000 more pounds of used fats!

Approved by WPA and OPA. Paid for by Industry.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion,* thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

LOOK INTO this 2-way help*

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

BUSINESSMEN ORGANIZE COUNTRY CLUB

For some time there has been talk of a Country Club for Clanton and many have felt that there was a need for such an organization. This matter has now gone beyond the talking stage and a start has been made.

Recently there was a meeting which was well attended by those interested and it was determined that Clanton must have a Country Club. A committee had already looked over a proposed site and they made a favorable report at this meeting. It was decided that an organization should be perfected and the following were elected as organization officers:

F. J. Callen, president; F. L. Thompson, vice-president; A. Reedie Taylor treasurer and H. C. Arnold, secretary.

The articles of incorporation have been drawn up and the purposes and plans of the organization are set up therein. Application for membership is now being received and a number have indicated their desire to become members of the club. It is not likely that any intensive drive will be put on for members as this does not seem necessary. After the land is bought a permanent organization will be set up, officers, and directors elected, committees appointed and plans will be under way for the erection of a club house, the grounds will be prepared for a golf course, tennis courts and other forms of amusement and recreation. It is felt that the Country Club will be another attractive addition to our growing city and the organization committee assures us that a high standard will be maintained at all times.

Sacred Harp Singing Convention Held At Lomax

The Sacred Harp Singing Convention of Chilton County was held at New Harmony Church, near Lomax, last Sunday. The singing was opened by the vice-chairman, W. L. Sanders, by singing, "Wondrous Love." Prayer was offered by J. W. Hays. M. C. Jackson, J. W. Hays and Bro. Gaines of Birmingham were the arranging committee.

Directors for the day were as follows: J. W. Hays, Elder Williams, Jimmie Williams, W. L. Jackson, Bro. Liveoak, Bro. Gaines, Bro. Thomas, Bro. Veazey, M. C. Jackson, Mrs. Abecrumbie, Mrs. Gaines, Mrs. Era Culver and Mrs. Henley.

Elder Williams of Tallassee delivered the eleven o'clock sermon. Memorial service followed the sermon. Songs were sung in memory of Major B. F. White, author of the Sacred Harp; Bro. Marlow Williams and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Golden.

Bro. A. A. Jackson, president of the Convention, and Mrs. Myrtle Jackson, secretary of the Convention, were both in the hospital at Birmingham. The Convention greatly missed these officers and their support and sang several songs to their honor.

A bountiful dinner was served and everybody enjoyed the day.

Visitors are always welcome and appreciated.—Asst. Secretary.

WATERMELON CEILINGS

Ceiling price for watermelons grown in 1945 will be the same as the 1944 ceiling prices—$45 a ton from beginning of season through July 4 and $35 a ton for the period from July 5 to the end of the season, f. o. b. country shipping point.

LESS FOOD FOR 1945

Principal foods needed from the United States and other allied coutries to feed the liberated peoples of Europe are fats and oils and flour supplemented by moderate amounts of sugar, dry beans, dry peas, and dairy products.

Because of the need to feed liberated Europe plus greater military needs plus possibly less 1945 production, U. S. civilians will get less food this year than in 1944 but still enough for an adequate diet.

CASH TOMATO MARKET TO BE ESTABLISHED HERE

Al and Sam Grossinger of Scranton Penn. spent part of last week in Chilton County looking over the tomato crop. They were well pleased with what they saw and are making plans to set up buying and packing faeilities at the Clanton Berry Growers warehouse. The Grossinger Bros. are members of the American Fruit Growers Association and have the necessary contacts to purchase all the quality tomatoes that local producers care to bring in.

They made the statement that they are prepared to buy all of the tomatoes that are of good enough quality to pack and ship under their nationally advertised Blue Goose lable and will handle lower grade tomatoes where practical. They plan to purchase tomatoes on a cash basis. Farmers are to be paid when tomatoes are delivered.

Producers interested in patronizing a local market are encouraged to continue to do a thorough job of spraying or dusting and to be sure to continue to fertilize their plants for maximum production and a high percent of No. 1 fruit.

Farmers can get additional information on this market by contacting your County Agent. or Leo Headley, or James Dennis. Future developments of this program will be sent out in circular letters and through this paper as they occur.

GOVERNMENT SELLING SEED

To assure early shipment of winter cover crop seeds into East Central and Southern States for fall planting, WFA is offering its entire stockpile of cover crop seeds for sale to dealers.

TRUCKS FOR FARMERS

Surplus trucks will be made available to farmers and farmers' cooperative associations ahead of all other priority buyers in areas where shortages of trucks cause impairment or threatened impairment of farm production, under Surplus Property Board Regulation 3, to become effective June 1, 1945. Trucks will be sold to regular retail dealers who will in turn sell them only to farmers and farmers' cooperative associations in the shortage areas who hold certificates issued by AAA.

LESS FOOD IN EUROPE

European food production this year is expected to be the smallest since the outbreak of the war, running five to ten per cent below last year.

Recreational School To Be Held Sept. 17-21

All those who plan to attend the recreational school to be held Sept. 17 to 21 are requested to turn in their names at once to one of the following: Mr. D. P. Culp, director; Mr. Patterson Hicks, chairman of general arrangements; Miss Elsie Schurter, attendance chairman; and Miss Lillian McKee, registration chairman. This school is to be sponsored by the Chilton County Board of Education, and it is for the benefit of all those who are inerested in any form of church, club, school, or community recreation.

Since the number enrolled will be limited to 200, people are urged to turn in their names promptly to insure their membership in this school. Even though a person may not know definitely whether he can attend, he is requested to turn in his name if he is at all interested. All clubs and other groups should turn in the names of their representatives this week to one of those mentioned above.

HOME COMING AND MEMORIAL DAY NEXT SUNDAY AT AT TEMPLE CHURCH

The Rev. A. T. Hickman, pastor of Temple Church, announces that there will be a Home Coming and Memorial Service held at his Church next Sunday. Sunday School will mark the beginning of the day's program. The worship hour will have a memorial feature. The afternoon service will be held in memory of Isaac Thomas who was killed in France last summer while taking part in the invasion against Germany. Rev. and Mrs Hickman, assisted by members of the Church, plan an interesting program. The public is invited. All who have loved ones buried at the Temple Church cemetery are asked to bring flowers for the decoration of the graves which will take place at the noon hour.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Pacific War Rages on Wide Front; Retain Civilian Goods Control as OPA Sets Reconversion Prices

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

With Japs holding up Yank advance on Okinawa from cave positions in rugged terrain, U. S. flame throwers sear enemy resistance.

PACIFIC:
Fighting Rages

From the Ryukyus to the Philippines and westward to China bitter fighting raged in the Pacific theater as U. S. and Chinese forces remained on the offensive against desperate Japanese troops battling on the outer perimeter of the enemy's main defenses.

Heaviest action took place on Okinawa and Luzon, where American G.I.s drilled deeper into rugged Japanese strongpoints, but Chinese units also pressed vigorous attacks against enemy columns seeking to neutralize Allied air bases west of the sea coast upon which the Nips fear a U. S. landing.

Standing but 325 miles from Tokyo, Okinawa was bitterly defended by a fanatical Japanese garrison, which only slowly crumbled under the concentrated bombardment of U. S. warships and aircraft of the "Little Siegfried" line strung about the island capital of Naha. Throwing in swarms of planes, the Japs persistently harassed the attacking American fleet, sinking a number of small vessels at high cost.

The going on Luzon was equally tough as General MacArthur's troops fought to clear heavily defended Balete Pass, guarding entrance to the extensive Cagayan valley, where the main body of Jap remnants on the island stood for the last ditch fight.

But 75 feet wide, Balete Pass, with 1,500 foot mountains on either side, was stormed by crack G.I.s, who first had to clear the enemy from cave positions on the scraggly slopes. As one force pushed upward near the pass clearing out the burrowed enemy, another circled off along the Villa Verde trail to outflank the stubbornly held positions and effect a junction at the main road.

Striking back at the Japanese after their attack on the Chihkiang air base, Chinese troops, aided by U. S. aircraft, drove the enemy back upon his Paoching stronghold in Hunan province. At the same time, other Chinese forces assaulted the big Jap-held seaport of Foochow, far behind the main lines the enemy has set up to seal off the southeastern Chinese coast where U. S. troop landings have been feared.

Navy Has Big Job Ahead

With the navy scheduled to retain its entire personnel for the Pacific warfare in contrast to the army's plan for discharging 2,000,000, Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal declared that the fleet has three principal tasks in the far eastern conflict:

First, to deliver men and supplies for present and future operations;

Second, to seal off the area of an attack in advance of landings;

And third, to open up, support and supply beachheads.

In disclosing that tentative postwar plans called for a 30 per cent reduction in the navy, Fleet Adm. Ernest King declared that the ultimate size would depend upon U. S. policies to defend this country, and the western hemisphere, and also participate in maintenance of world peace. About 50,000 officers and 500,000 men would be needed in the postwar fleet under the plans tentatively drawn up.

WARTIME BUSINESS

Drug and liquor stores, retailers of women's apparel and jewelry, and eating and drinking places are among the types of merchandising outlets that have benefited most from conditions of war in terms of gross sales, though not necessarily in terms of profits, says Dr. F. A. Harper, professor of marketing at Cornell university.

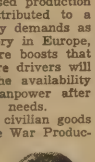
Sales of these stores averaged about 20 per cent more than would be expected by past experience in a free market.

EUROPE:
War's Aftermath

With the war with Germany over, all the problems associated with the reconstitution of a liberated Europe began to crowd upon Allied authorities, with the more sensational like the trial of Nazi bigwigs shadowing the highly important like the repatriation of dislocated persons.

As ex-Gestapo Chief Himmler, Rudolph Hess and Hermann Goering were placed high on the list of Nazi war criminals subject to trial, U. S. congressmen, returning from an inspection of Nazi concentration camps, denounced the Hitler regime for the existence of such centers of starvation, crematories and torture devices.

On the less racy side of the picture, Allied authorities in Germany wrestled with the problem of repatriating 11,000,000 foreign workers when their removal would affect harvesting and food processing. At the same time, Allied officials announced that German industry, trade and services first would be utilized to support occupying forces before being diverted to the populace.



CIVILIAN GOODS:
Tires—Control—Prices

Increased allotments of tires for "B" and "C" card motorists; continued tight supervision over civilian goods production, and establishment of reconversion prices headlined home front news as the nation left one war behind it and concentrated on the Pacific theater.

With the tire production schedule for April-May-June increased from 3,200,000 to 5,200,000, the "B" and "C" card holders will receive 500,000 more cords this month than originally planned, and probably an equal additional number in June. Previous allotments of 1,000,000 tires monthly provided for only necessary replacements, and the extra 500,000 being distributed will only help to more fully meet these essential needs.

Though the increased production for civilians was attributed to a slackening of military demands as a result of the victory in Europe, the size of any future boosts that might benefit pleasure drivers will be determined by the availability of materials and manpower after meeting Pacific war needs.

Even though more civilian goods are in the offing, the War Production board revealed intentions of maintaining a close grip over output to assure smooth delivery of essential supplies. As a result, WPB will continue to allocate steel, copper and aluminum, and merely raise the ceiling on civilian production over 1944 rather than revoking it.

Chester Bowles

In fixing reconversion prices at the 1942 level, OPAdministrator Chester Bowles declared it was the intention to establish adequate margins to encourage full-scale production and thus through both control and plenty check the danger of inflation.

Though prices are to be pegged at 1942 levels, increased material and labor costs would be met by volume production and lower distribution expense, Bowles said. Both large and small manufacturers will determine their own prices, with the latter entitled to a higher figure in the event material and other shortages prevent capacity output.

G.I.S PLAN FUTURE

More than three-fourths of all men now in the army worked for an employer before entering the army, and more than two-thirds definitely plan to take jobs as employees after discharge, according to a survey of postwar plans of troops made by the army.

Among former employees, only about one-half of the white and one-third of the Negro enlisted men plan to do the same type of work they performed in civilian life.

SAN FRANCISCO:
Regional Defense

Seeking to harmonize regional defense systems with a world security organization, the Big Five powers of the United Nations hit upon a compromise at San Francisco coordinating both for the preservation of postwar stability.

Though regional systems were authorized to move for peaceful settlement of a dispute within their respective areas and join in collective defense in case of aggression against any of their members, the world security organization's power to employ economic or military means to check a prospective aggressor was retained.

As a result of the compromise, the desire of Latin American nations to maintain a voice in security problems within this hemisphere was partially satisfied, while the fears of internationalists that regional defense systems might take away all functions of a world organization were stilled.

In other action at San Francisco, the Big Five—U. S., Britain, Russia, China and France — maintained the control of the 11 member security council over the world organization by denying the consultative assembly of smaller nations a greater degree of power.

CROP PROSPECTS:
Look Good

Though cold and rainy weather retarded truck, fruit and grain crops in some areas, heavy downfalls built up reserves of moisture generally throughout the country, causing U. S. department of agriculture experts to look for farm production for 1945 favorably comparable to the preceding three years.

Because planting of winter wheat got off to a good start and subsequent precipitation spurred growth, USDA anticipates a record crop of 835,186,000 bushels, which, with normal spring wheat production, would give the country another billion bushel crop. As of May 1, condition of oats was 79 per cent of normal; tame hay, 88 per cent, and pastures, 87 per cent. Harvest of rye is expected to be about 3,000,000 bushels above last year's 25,000,000 bushels, though only 52 per cent of the seeded area will be cut for grain.

Though the cold weather and repeated frosts set back early vegetables, fruits and gardens in many areas, USDA looked for record production of spring truck crops. The output would be a fifth larger than average.

Believed to be the largest gem ever found in an alluvial deposit, a 770 carat diamond about the size of a chicken egg has been brought to Britain from the Sierra Leone mines in West Africa. . . . Found by a native workman, the gem will not be cut but rather sold in the rough. . . . The new diamond tops the 726 carat "Junker" found in South Africa in 1934 and the 530.2 carat "Star of Africa No. 1," now embedded in the British royal scepter.

SUGAR:
Cuba Short

Heading up the nation's prospective sugar pinch are reports that U. S. price offerings for the Cuban crop have discouraged bumper production and the building of reserves.

Coming on top of the statement of Rep. Clinton Anderson (N. M.) that Cuba has refused to sell this country her 1946 sugar output unless it also agreed to purchase 1947 production as well, these reports indicated that American offerings of 3.10 cents a pound have not fully satisfied millers, planters and field workers in view of the rising cost of living in the Caribbean island.

Partly because of smaller plantings and a severe drouth, 1945 Cuban production has fallen 790,000 tons from the 1944 figure of 3,958,000, thus putting a severe crimp in prospective U. S. supplies already shadowed by decreased stocks partly attributed to laxity in rationing and continued subnormal sugar beet output.

Bakers' Pinch

Already falling far short of increased demands estimated at 50 per cent since the war, bakery goods will be even in tighter supply in forthcoming months, with bakers cut to 80 per cent of the shortening used in 1942. Previously, they had been limited to 100 per cent along with 75 per cent of their 1941 sugar use.

Because bakers already have stretched their supplies, any further decreases would materially affect the quality of their products, trade sources said. In an effort to make every bit of use of available ingredients, fancier items requiring more sugar and fat have been largely eliminated, icings thinned and pies made with single rather than double crusts.

While the sugar and shortening shortages have deterred bakery production, flour has been plentiful.

ELECTRIFY FARMS

With nearly two million U. S. farms wired for electric service since the Rural Electrification administration was established on May 11, 1935, REA's latest survey shows approximately 2,700,000 farms, or nearly half of all U. S. farms, are now electrified, as compared with 750,000 in 1935. More than half of the farms electrified in the decade of federally sponsored rural electrification are served by rural electric systems financed by REA loans.

Old Pitfalls Stand in Way of Future Peace

Survival of German Myth, Desertion of Democratic Elements Would Weaken Postwar Security Structure.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

SAN FRANCISCO. — California sunshine is pouring down on the bay, a great white fog has begun to drape the distant, gray-green hills in the folds of its floating robe.

It has been a day of conferences and interviews where the great tragedies of little countries—Albania, Korea, Poland—and the little differences between great countries have been tossed at us, in vibrant earnest voices, in stiff and proper accents. It would be easy to lose sight of woods for the trees. But as I sit here leafing over faded notes of another such conference, I know that the tremendous goal for which these delegates have striven is so much higher, so much wider than all the little controversies that it still is just what the chambermaid in my hotel said it was.

She was gray haired. She had a son on Saipan, she told me, and when I asked her what she thought of this gathering she laid down an armful of linen and looked up. "I guess this is just about the most important thing that ever happened," she said, "trying to stop wars."

How important this meeting will prove to be depends on how well the world avoids the pitfalls which wrecked its last attempt to treat war as we treat disease; not as something that we irreverently consider as an act of God, like a tornado, but something to which mankind is exposed through ignorance and indifference and which can be prevented.

Why did the League of Nations fail? What are the pitfalls which the United Nations must avoid?

Germans Thought Armies Unbeaten

I have been talking over that Paris conference with a friend whom I met there—a quarter of a century ago. He lived with the League of Nations through its early uncertain days, on until its death of malnutrition. Together we agreed on certain fundamental mistakes made in the past which must be avoided if the result of the San Francisco conference is a success.

The object of the United Nations is the same as the object of the League of Nations: to stop aggression before it starts. Last time, efforts were directed specifically toward Germany as the one potential aggressor. Germany has been so utterly defeated that she cannot strike back for a long time but our conduct toward Germany after the last war can be related to all future attempts at aggression.

The first mistake made last time, namely, allowing the myth to grow up that the German army was not defeated, that other causes enforced capitulation, cannot be made again since the German army is now destroyed. But there is danger that another myth may grow which will encourage nazi-fascism elsewhere.

Even if the so-called German government headed by Admiral Doenitz formally capitulated to the Allies instead of having the various generals surrender separately, the Nazis might well claim that they themselves never did surrender.

A very good legal case might be made out supporting the thesis that Doenitz was not the authorized head of the German government and that government still existed in exile. Whether Hitler and Himmler are dead makes no difference. No proof can be adduced that Doenitz is the authorized successor to Hitler. There has been no recognized revolution which could be recognized first, de facto, then de jure.

We do not know that he had publicly indicated certain successors.

I saw and heard him do it in the Reichstag meeting in the Kroll opera house in Berlin on September 1, 1939, when he announced that he was going to the front to join the army already invading Poland.

I saw him turn from the lectern and indicate, first Herman Goering, sitting high on the praesidium as his successor, if he failed to return and second, the tall and lanky Hess sitting in the first row on the rostrum.

There has never been any other official designation of succession by the German government. When Hitler made that pronouncement Doenitz played no role in the Nazi party—he was just another naval officer.

Therefore it would be easy for whoever claims official fuehrership to have moved into Norway while it was still in German hands, take a long-distance submarine and find asylum and support in some country which would conceal his identity and where sufficient sympathy for nazi-fascism existed to carry on underground activities and foster the myth of the immortality of nazi-dom just as the myth of the German army's invincibility was kept alive.

That is one thing that apparently is not realized. It is important. It must be watched.

Now there are a number of other pitfalls which I might mention but I won't spend too long over these faded notes with fresh breezes from the Pacific reminding me that we are living in the land of tomorrow and not yesterday.

But alas, some of the dark shadows of yesterday have stretched down the years to today.

Selfish Interests Stunt Democracy

One of the great mistakes which the peace-loving nations of the world, as they now call themselves, made the last time was that they failed to help the democratic elements in Germany against the very reactionary or national elements which made World War II possible.

At present there is no question about elements in the German government for it is under Allied military rule. That problem is some distance in the future. But here at San Francisco and wherever the executive council or the assembly of the organization planned here may meet, the same question will arise.

We have a concrete example in the question of Argentina, not too important in itself, but interesting insofar as it reveals whose selfish political and economic interests affect world affairs.

Certain countries wanted to renew normal business relations with Argentina.

Great Britain has a great interest in Argentina because of her trade and Canada because the financing of many institutions there was handled through Canadian banks.

The representatives in the Mexico City conference yielded to this pressure and when they came to San Francisco could not reverse their position. Russia looked on, chortled, and said: Democracies aren't so democratic after all if they invite a fascist government to join up with them.

This is not too important but it is an example of what must be avoided if the United Nations really champion the cause of democracy throughout the world.

But the strong hope of avoiding the pitfalls of the last time lies in the interest, the participation of the people. The people of America.

As I sit here in San Francisco and see the earnest effort of these men of all creed and color, I feel they have the will to peace.

But their voices all cry in the wilderness unless the people support them.

I look over these gray-green hills and think—into thine hands, the hands of the people of America.

In order to provide agricultural information to servicemen and veterans of this war who are interested in agriculture, the USDA has arranged to place kits containing samples of available information in separation centers, hospitals, libraries and vocational guidance and retraining centers of the army, navy, air forces, and the Veterans administration.

In cooperation with Washington representatives of the various branches of the armed forces and the Veterans administration, these kits will be available for review in approximately 1,000 places in the continental U. S. and overseas. Accompanying each kit will be a supply of order blanks on which the veteran or serviceman can order from the department by a simple check mark, any item or group of items he may want.

Among the materials being offered are several general publications designed to help the agriculturally inclined serviceman or veteran decide whether or not he really does want to become a farmer.

Returning to San Francisco after 20 years the city looks as if it had changed more than in the previous 20 — and that included the period of reconstruction after the fire.

Accredited correspondents outnumbered delegates six to one but most of the delegates never saw a news man. And most of them couldn't have talked anyhow since the majority of them couldn't speak English. English and French were the official languages but probably Spanish was the most generally understood, judging from response to speeches in that tongue.

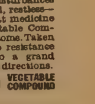
Standard Gauge Tracks



Although American railroads operated on 23 different gauges, or track widths, as late as 1871, they had all adopted the world's standard gauge by 1886, thus making the United States the first country in which a carload of freight could reach any point without having to be unloaded and reloaded en route.

Weather Enters Big Business Field of World's Armies, Navy, Trade and Farms

By WALTER A. SHEAD
WNU Staff Correspondent.

There is one thing in which the nation's farmers and our military leaders have a common stake . . . an element which can upset the most carefully laid military plans and the most meticulously planned agricultural program—the weather.

The farmers' success in planting and harvesting and American combat success in combined land-sea-air operations can come only through close observance of the scientific predictions of the weatherman. For the weather is often used as a military weapon by our military strategists, and our farmers are dependent upon the vagaries of the weather to harvest a record production, or a crop failure.

No military operation—whether it is a minor sortie by a group of fighters, a bombing mission on an enemy city, naval bombardment of a Jap island, a ground attack in China, or a large scale invasion—is never blueprinted unless latest weather information is first consulted. Success of an attack is ofttimes dependent upon clear weather, though American forces have profitably exploited bad weather to make offensive strikes against the enemy.

Our military strategists were quick to recognize the importance of accurate meteorological data, and so have greatly expanded the network of observation posts, trained thousands of officers and enlisted men and adopted new technological devices to guarantee reliable forecasts.

Together, the AAF, the navy and the U. S. Weather bureau weather systems form a vast network of information, research, observation and forecasting reaching from the United States to all parts of the world. Observation units vary in size from two men occupying a hut on an isolated Atlantic or Pacific isle to a major research station with a full staff of specialists.

The AAF maintains several major research centers and more than 1,000 observation and forecasting stations reaching from the Arctic to the Antarctic, and its weather report system spreads and moves as rapidly as the fighting fronts. The nerve center of this vast, scattered weather force is in the Pentagon building in Washington where approximately 50 persons watch the weather in all regions of the world and prepare long-range forecasts and special studies to guide our high strategy planners.

Navy Maintains Stations.

The navy maintains about 1,400 observation and forecasting stations, including 14 major weather "centrals." In some instances aerological units may be aboard flagships or aircraft carriers, or on advanced island bases and the units may consist of one man on a small ship or a full fledged "central" with a full complement of 100 or more officers and men.

How the navy weather bureaus have grown since 1940 may be seen by the fact that in that year navy aerology under the bureau of aeronautics consisted of less than 200 officers and men in about 50 units, whereas today the personnel totals about 6,500 officers and men assigned to the 1,400 units. The AAF staff of weather specialists numbers 20,000 officers and men, and the force of observers alone has grown from 50 to 10,000.

Service provided by these thousands of forecasters includes technical operation and interpretation of results recorded by radio-sonde, a small box containing a single-tube short wave transmitter. Sent aloft on a balloon, the transmitter gives temperature and humidity readings at various heights. There are also repair technicians schooled in the maintenance of delicate weather instruments, communications men who radio or teletype weather reports back to headquarters, and aircraft weather reconnaissance fliers, who observe conditions along the flying routes.

According to our military men acformation, the AAF and the navy weather forces have been made possible by the careful selection of men from the ranks to specialize in weather information, by intensive station training and by releasing personnel from the weather bureau for military duty and replacing them by new civilian recruits.

This photo shows the effect of weather on the soil on a south Pacific island. This truck is really mired.

Germany took advantage of bad, overcast weather, with rain and snow to make their counter-attack in the Belgian bulge in the Ardennes. Low visibility and cold kept our superior airforce grounded, until clearing weather gave us a break.

Weather Important Weapon.

According to our military men accurate evaluation of weather, plus the constant flow of up-to-the-minute meteorological information from all theaters of war, make it possible to use weather as an important weapon. Cited as examples of weather strategy is the Sicilian invasion. Plotting of prevailing winds and of the movement of cold air front over Italy indicated our invasion ships would encounter rough seas on the journey from North Africa, but at the same time our forecasters predicted tranquil waters in Sicilian harbors, and the almost miraculous calming of the seas as our landing craft neared the Sicilian shores has become a military classic.

Admiral Halsey took advantage of the cover of a "zero-zero" storm after raiding the Marshall and Gilbert Islands. With visibility zero and ceiling zero, his ships, large and heavy enough to ride out the storm, were meanwhile safe from enemy air attack.

At Rabaul detail plotting of the upper air strata enabled our forces to lay down a smoke screen to blot out our vessels and our planes from Japanese ack-ack and dive bombers. Low wind velocity was required so that our screen would not suddenly veer and cover our target instead. Conditions were exactly as predicted and ordered.

Many other instances of the use of weather forecasts by our militarists are given, for instance in the Normandy invasion, weather was bad and the sea choppy, but the forecasts were that severe conditions would prevail for at least 21 days after the D-Day chosen.

Axis Are Weather Conscious.

Both Germany and Japan are extremely weather conscious and both have used weather, particularly bad weather, to screen their activities. For instance, Germany's battle of the bulge in the Ardennes was undoubtedly arranged to coincide with bad weather that would keep our superior air strength incapable of decisive blows, while German ground forces, numerically stronger at that point, smashed through. A clearing break in the weather came ultimately and our air power went into action to help stop the German offensive.

According to the navy, the Japs are not as far advanced in weather technique as either Germany or our own military. In at least one instance a Japanese plan of action did not work out as scheduled because of their weather miscalculations. They attempted to bring reinforcements to New Guinea under a storm front so that our planes could not spot their movements. An unexpected or miscalculated shift dissipated the storm front. The troop and supply armada was spotted by our reconnaissance planes. They were attacked and destroyed by the AAF in the famous Battle of the Bismarck Sea.

Methods used by various countries in weather forecasting vary. The AAF and the navy use the Norwegian theory of air masses and polar fronts and the long series of daily weather charts of the world prepared by the weather bureau as a basis.

Research Essential.

Almost endless research was necessary to code the world's weather data. Starting in 1942 the weather bureau, in cooperation with the military services, started in this task using all available weather information in the northern hemisphere for each day since 1899. This information was replotted and reanalyzed, transferred into a standard code and into a punch card system. In this way 30 years of weather were charted and analyzed within a year. From the areas studied by the army, high priority sections, where military action would most likely take place, a similar card system was evolved and total weather tabulations to date cover about 55 million cards. At present about 500,000 cards are recorded each month.

From Arctic to Antarctic Vast Army of Weather Experts Work for the United States

Combined military operations plans are contingent on ideal weather conditions for all four participating combat sections: air, ground, sea and amphibious. Weather plans for air operations must include preinvasion conditions for softening up as well as air support on the invasion day. Ground conditions will include soil trafficability, whether or not soil will support movement of heavy vehicular equipment, air stability and wind velocity, for use of chemical warfare, smokescreens, etc. Sea conditions must be favorable enough to permit the large ships to launch small craft with safety and amphibious commanders are concerned with on-shore and off-shore winds and surf conditions.

So the weatherman's task is to discover conditions which will be most nearly ideal for all four operations and how many days such conditions will prevail. Plans can then be made accordingly.

By comparing the current day's maps with the finger-print maps, chosen by weather experts from those maps indicated by the card-machine selection, the past weather most nearly like that of May 15, 1945, is chosen. It may have been February 23, 1929. With this map and the map for the succeeding days in 1929, the weather expert can see how the high and low pressure groups moved, can study other meteorological data.

IT WAS three times and then out for a certain Hollywood jinx, for which actor John Dall thanks his lucky stars. Three successive occupants of a certain ill-omened house in Laurel Canyon, near Hollywood, came to unhappy ends, via a plane crash, suicide and murder at the hands of an unknown. Then John Dall moved in. A newcomer to films, from the New York stage, he needed all the luck in the world. Two weeks later he was signed to make his debut opposite Bette Davis in "The Corn Is Green"; now he's on the stellar list at Warners'.

A special plane will fly Edwin Jerome to New York from Washington each Saturday, and back to the Capital late Sunday night. He has a part in the 20th Century-Fox picture, "Now It Can Be Told," which deals with the way the FBI handled espionage agents. All his scenes are shot right in the office of J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI. But Jerome has been a regular on "Crime Doctor" ever since it went on the air five years ago, and can't miss performances because of a picture assignment, hence the weekly plane trips.

When three-year-old Ann Marshall is twelve she'll choose her own middle name. Her father, Herbert Marshall, star of the air's "The Man Called X," who on June 12 takes over the Bob Hope spot during the comedian's vacation, agrees with his wife, Lee Russell, about that. So many children are kidded because they have unusual middle names, they say, that they'll let Ann choose her own.

A summary of 17 years of Academy Awards will be prepared as one of the Columbia Screen Snapshots for the current season. The reel will feature the 34 male and female stars who've received Oscars, starting with the 1927-28 awards to Janet Gaynor and Emil Jannings, and will present them in scenes from the pictures for which they won the awards. It'll end with Ingrid Bergman and Bing Crosby.

Alexis Smith thought she was buying curtain material for her home when she bought a lot of marquisette some time ago. But when she was cast as an angel in the Jack Benny picture, "The Horn Blows at Midnight," she learned that the wardrobe department was having trouble finding sheer stuff for her costume. So she handed over her window coverings, hoping they could be salvaged for curtains later.

Today our great fight is but half won.

Japan, our final and most dangerous enemy, still lives.

Japan still boasts an army of 4,000,000 fanatical, last-ditch fighters, with half again that many in reserve.

Japan still hates our guts.

Today we can, if we choose, start breaking faith with those who died. We can go on a fool's orgy, get drunk on our success so far.

Or we can, if we choose, pray for our dead, and for the lives of those who have so far been spared. We can stay on the job, buy another War Bond, give a pint of blood. We can choke back our cheers . . . and save our wind for the mighty task that lies ahead.

Today is but the symbol of the many days to come.

What are you going to do with these days?

DO WE WANT OUR VETERANS?

Announcement that the Army will reduce its strength by 1,300,000 men in the next year is immediately associated with news that there will begin a gradual reconversion of industry to peace-time production, with an estimated increase of 1,500,000 unemployed in the next year.

These facts are taken from a report made by War Mobilization Director Fred M. Vinson, who warns that a great part of our war working force must stay on the job and that rationing, high taxes, wage and price ceilings and many other controls must be maintained until Japan is beaten.

Immediately, upon the news that Germany had surrendered, there were demands in this country for the speedy return of fighting men, but, so far as we have noted, little discussion of the economic situation that will confront men released from active service.

The figures given by Judge Vinson indicate that returning veterans will not step from the ranks into waiting jobs and that in the shuffle for employment, some of them may not find immediate opportunity.

This is a tragic spectacle, regardless of the reasons assigned. Thousands of men who have faced the enemy in battle and risked their lives for the nation will soon arrive in this country. They will be anxious to gather again the lost threads of their peace-time existence and eager to find for themselves a place in the economic arrangement by which men seek to earn a living for themselves and their families.

Every community and business enterprise in the nation is indebted to these fighting men for continued existance and relative safety. Out of the emergency of the war, the nation as a whole and business enterprises as separate entities have reaped benefits in the way of definite financial rewards.

It is obvious, therefore, that strenuous efforts should be made to provide employment for returning service men. The problem cannot be solved by leaving it to industrial centers and to big business generally or to the Government. It must be attacked everywhere.

Every business should definitely attempt to provide employment for veterans.

Executive management, which is supposed to be the brains of economic enterprise, must use its intelligence and be prepared, if necessary, to take some risks in the way of expansion in order to provide the jobs necessary.

Chilton County has seen hundreds of her sons go forth to war. They have departed with the thought in mind that, some day, they would come back home to live the life they planned before war began. Military service broke into their existing arrangements, other people have occupied their places of employment and they now face, upon their return home, some anxiety as to their economic status.

Throughout the United States there are countless organizations of business men seeking to attract outside capital and new industries for the purpose of providing jobs and payrolls. Many of us overlook the asset that Chilton County has in her sons and the tremendous gains that will be made if they can be persuaded to cast their future lots in their former places of abode.

It is time for some specific action designed to make it possible and profitable for returning service men to resume their permanent residence here. What are you doing about it?

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

The contemplated Country Club is the brightest idea our most progressive citizens have had in many a moon. There are just so many good points there is no need to try listing them. The most important point, however, is the fact that our fighting citizens, those boys who are doing the job for us, will have some place to go for relaxation when they come home. Plans are going forward to purchase the property and complete the club house as soon as is possible.

Spent the better part of an hour the other day with Dr. H. M. Nix, (cousin Harvey) over at Maplesville. He was telling us that he had just put seven or nine tons, we forget which, of fertilizer in his lake for the fishes. About June 1st he is going to open it to the public for fishing and for a small fee you can go over and catch you a supply of fresh meat. Course, that is, unless you are the kind of fisherman that we are. If so, then you just spend the evening, come home with a few corns, sore muscles and a very disagreeable disposition.

Seems that "Chick" Fiquette and Mack Godwin bought them each a horse. No, we believe it was Lloyd Ponwell and R. C. Williams. Anyway, they tried to figure some way to tell the two horses apart. They decided on one cutting the horses mane, but it grew out again. Then they cut one of the horses tail, but soon it had grown long again. "I'll tell you what let's do," said Chick. "We'll measure the horses. Perhaps one is taller than the other." They measured them and sure enough, the black horse was a full three inches taller than the white horse.

Did you ever stop to realize how good the average person is and how anxious they are to be helpful in time of trouble. Truely we do not believe better folks live anywhere than do right here in Chilton County. To the stranger in our midst we may seem cold sometimes, but when trouble strikes you'll find they are the salt of the earth.

We understand what Melvin "Shorty" Wilson is headed for the States and a furlough. "Shorty" is in the Marines and has been in the "Islands" for two years. He has a beautiful little daughter, Barbara Jean, 18 months old that he has never seen, that, we imagine, will monopolize all of his time while here.

And still no word comes of 1st Lt. Cecil Blow. He was last seen one year ago this week. The record shows that he was piloting a P-51 Mustang, fighter plane, which was last seen a few miles north of Shingbwyyang, Burma, in the Myitkyina Area. Heavy rain and fog were encountered and the plane was seen to wing over and disappear into a cloud. The War Department has declared him officially dead one year the 17th day of May. No word has ever been received of him since his plane disappeared.

Every graduation time makes us feel older. Maybe its because we are older. To see these youngsters grow up and graduate and leave for college is enough to put gray hairs in anybody's head—of which we have a plenty, thank you. One more year now and we will have ours starting to college. Just to think about it makes my old bones ache and my rheumatism set in.

REUNION IN HONOR OF MRS. EULA BROWN

Last Sunday, May 13, there was a large crowd gathered at the home of Mrs Eula Brown in honor of the day for which we are all very thankful.

Most of the family was present except for one or two. Several of the brothers and sisters were present also.

It was one to be long remembered by all that was present. In the first part of the day everyone just sat and talked and then a very bountiful dinner was served and enjoyed by all.

Let's all hope and pray that we can all live and that our health will permit us to be together again next year.

Those present for the day were: Mr and Mrs Claud Hathcock and family of Brent; Mr and Mrs Croal Williams and family of Maplesville; Mr and Mrs Lee Roy and family of Clanton; Mr and Mrs Reubin DeVaughn and family of Clanton; Mr and Mrs Arthur Brown and family of Mobile; Mr and Mrs Joe Brown and family of Mobile; Mr and Mrs Marlin Hathcock and family of Brent; Mr and Mrs Charles Davis of Clanton; Mr Fonza Hathcock of Brent; Misses Roberta, Inez, Ola Mae, O'Lita and Hazel Middlebrooks of Brent.

Beatrice Edwards and two children.

Those for the afternoon were: Mr and Mrs Sam Williams and family; Mr and Mrs Mose Hathcock and family all of Billingsley.

Everyone had a wonderful time and we are all looking forward for even a more wonderful time next year, for maybe, God being willing, we hope to have some of the family back home from the Service of our country by next year. —Beatrice Edwards

By JULIAN OLLENDORFF

GEORGE A. VICKERS, master of the SS Nathaniel Greene, has a Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal for heroic maneuvering of that ship during eleven months when it delivered munitions overseas. Surviving 10 torpedo plane and bomber attacks, two submarine and four torpedo onslaughts, it was finally crippled on a trip to Algerian ports, but the master successfully beached it. Laden with cargo that War Bonds helped to buy for our fighting men, it was struck by two torpedoes, yet Vickers got it ashore.

Time Out for War on Farm Telephone expansion

The number of Southern Bell-operated farm telephones in Dixie was increased by more than four times from 1935 to 1942 when war interrupted our rural telephone expansion program.

Since 1942, vast amounts of communication equipment have been and are still being manufactured for shipment to our fighting men, and we cannot resume our farm telephone expansion until after manpower and material again become available.

In the meantime, we are furthering our efforts to provide increased and improved post-war farm telephone service through our research work and experience gained in new methods of construction, transmission and new developments in the art of communication.

Southern Bell's post-war rural development program is part of the Bell System's one hundred million dollar program to extend and improve farm telephone service of the future. And every reasonable and practicable step is being taken to advance this program as rapidly as possible.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

A legend tells us that an Artist wanted to carve the Madonna from a piece of sandalwood. He sought for that wood everywhere, but it could not be found. He was about to give up in despare, when one night he heard a voice say to him. "Carve your Madonna from a block of oakwood." At his fire place there was a choice of oakwood and he arose and started work. In a short time he had a master piece to present to the world. Many of us use great opportunities in life, searching for the best, when we should be doing our best with what we have at our door. Life is too short for us to waste our time in search for the finest. It is far better to do something with what we have before us, than it is to wait for the best and do nothing.

One day I sat on the banks of a stream and watched the flies as they came to bathe themselves in the water. I observed that they would allow the water to cover their bodies, but they kept their wings lifted and dry. After the bath was over, the little flies would swim about in delight, and then lift themselves into the air on wings that were dry. We are of this world and while we live in it, we must plunge into its way of life, but we should always keep the wings of the soul lifted clear of the ways of the world. Some day we are going to need sound wings on which to fly away to our eternal home, and we can not afford to let these wings be soggy with worldly ways. When God calls us we should have dry wings on which to rise and fly.

While looking at a beautiful window in a temple of worship, the keeper of that building touched me on the shoulder and said, "You see that beautiful face of Christ? It was not painted by an Artist, but it was made out of small pieces of glass, stone and material gathered by the man who put it together." That is what God is doing with these poor souls of ours. He is the great Artist and He is picking up this one out of the gutter and that one from the ways of sin, and out of us He is producing the face of the Christ, the ways of the Master, among men. Out of the common dust of mankind God is producing the face of Jesus Christ in human living. How wonderful then is this great Artist into whose hands we fall when we believe.

Lloyd George entered the golf grounds with a friend, and after they were on the inside he looked back and saw that the gate was left open. Immediately he turned back and closed the gate saying, "I have always made it a habit to close a gate when I have passed through it." That is a good rule for us to follow if we wish to possess peace of mind and joy in living. Make it a rule to do the best you can in every act of life, and then close the gate on your worries when you have passed through. When you have made a decision and acted on it, then close the gate, that no worries may enter to disturb your heart.

Cpl. Cook remarked, "All of us M P's. felt elated over the good news and felt very much like making merry, but instead we had to keep ours inside and try and calm the crowds."

He is visiting his parents and relatives at Stanton for a few days, although he says that on the first of June he thinks that he will be home for good after getting a discharge from the Army. He has been in the service four years.

Corp. Leon D. Sansom, husband of Mrs. Eva Sansom, of Route one, Stanton, has been awarded the Bronze Star by Major Gen. Charles Gerhardt, Division Commander, of the 29th Inf. Div. in Germany, for heroic achievement in action.

Pfc. John A. Popwell and Pfc. Fred Cox, both are members of a port battalion which recently has been awarded the meritorious service unit plaque by Major Gen. W. E. R. Covell, Commanding General, Services of Supply, in the India-Burma Theatre.

With the 15th AAF in Italy, Cpl. William H. Wright, of Rt. 2, a member of the veteran of 455th Bombardment Group, was recently authorized to wear the first Bronze Oak Leaf Cluster to the Distinguished Unit Badge when his group was cited for outstanding performance of duty in armed conflict with the enemy.

For meritorious achievement in action against the enemy on Peleliu from Sept. 15th, to 30, the Bronze Star Medal was recently awarded to Marine Major David R. Griffin, 26, son of Mrs. J. D. Griffin of this city.

A nice letter recently from Jesse Culp who is attending Navy training school at Memphis, Tenn., says that he just completed a course in radio and radar operations and passed all qualifying tests for the new Naval Aviation Prep program, where he will enter college the first of July.

Jesse says that summer has definitely hit Memphis and many a sailor has suffered from overdoing himself to get a sun tan.

He also says that he enjoys the NEWS very much and asks that I keep it coming his way. That, I will surely do, too.

Pfc. James K. (Sie) Foshee who is stationed at Tyndall Field, Fla., spent last week here with his parents, Mr and Mrs Sie Foshee.

I just ran into Lt. John W. Plyler down the street and he says that he is "getting out tomorrow", that will be Thursday of this week. He says that he has to go back to Atlanta Thursday where he will be given his honorable discharge from the army.

Just from talking to John, one would think that he is very anxious to get out so he can go fishing. He asked me to write S-Sgt Cecil E. Carter, who is now in San Marcos, Texas, and tell him to hurry and get his discharge, so he can go fishing with him.

Kathleen Norris Says:

The Disappointing Homecoming

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"He thinks there is too much fussing in the way Lina does things; flowers on the table and beauty parlor every week and taking Jane to dancing school—what the heck does all that matter, anyway."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

LINA and Robert Adams were married five years ago. They had a little daughter two years old when Bob went off for navy duty in March, 1943. Now, after more than a year's service he is home again, to stay, and has taken up his life where he left off, as a junior member of his uncle's law firm in a small town.

Lina wrote Bob constant and affectionate letters while he was away, sent clippings and snapshots and presents every week. She was lonely; she loved the memory of their marriage, their home, their perfect companionship. And of course, as so many mothers and wives are doing, she idealized the thought of Robert; he was perfect. Every night she and little Jane looked at his picture and said, "Goodnight, Daddy. Come home safe to Mummy and Jane."

Robert got a great reception when he finally did come back, but almost immediately things began to go wrong and they haven't straightened out yet. Both husband and wife write me their respective feelings.

Robert says that he hasn't changed at all; he never did like meeting people and going places, he never was especially fond of kids. If Lina would let him alone he'd be all right. He doesn't sleep any too well, and he hates arguing. He thinks there is too much fussing in the way Lina does things; flowers on the table and beauty parlor every week and taking Jane to dancing school—what the heck does all that matter, anyway.

'Muses by the Hour.'

Lina's letter says, in part: "He used to be sunny, easily amused, ready to fit into my plans. He simply used to adore Jane. Now he never notices her, and of course, at the age of four, she hasn't sense enough to be friendly with him in spite of it. He muses by the hour, staring at the floor; not hearing me, apparently, if I speak, and not answering if he does hear. He won't go anywhere, and even with clients he has a sort of 'what's-the-difference - anyway' attitude that doesn't help him in business.

"The other night," Lina's letter goes on, "I had a dish he likes for dinner and he said to me briefly and shortly, 'Good.' This encouraged me to say that there ought to be a mixed green salad with it, but that I had hunted all over for chives, chicory and cress without success. 'So you hunted all over for chives, chicory and cress, did you?' he said in a dreadful voice. And he got up and slammed out of the house. He came back late and apologized in a sort of grudging way, and I cried all night. I'm so sorry for him, and yet I feel that I can't stand this.

"Yesterday I asked him if he simply didn't like me, I seem to irritate him so, and he answered that I could draw any conclusion I liked. I asked him if he would like me to go to my mother for awhile, and he said that he had seen that coming, and knew I was crazy to get away.

"Do you think this shows actual derangement, or is it another woman, or is it my fault? We're both writing you, and we want a fair answer. Who is right and who is wrong?"

My dear Lina and Bob, my answer is that neither is wrong. The deep and bitter wrong is when the sons of men turn to world war as a preliminary to establishing world peace. It is as stupid a solution of international differences as was the old custom of men and women going in cheerful groups to a pest house to have smallpox all together and so immunize themselves. But the smallpox inoculation affected only a few persons, and this war is touching us all.

Love Lives On

I believe that under this present trouble your old love and companionship live on. But Robert—as was inevitable, has come back with a mind and soul and heart scarred by the terrible realities of modern warfare. He has seen the men beside whom he worked, the men who were his companions, blown to pieces, maimed, drowned, frozen, hungry, exhausted. He has gone for months — not days, not weeks, but months, without those common luxuries Lina has taken for granted; a warm house, a good reading light, quiet meals, the blessed security of America. When he sees Lina concerned for a hair-do, for Jane's dancing slippers, for the Hollandaise sauce and the fresh flowers, a sort of madness at the insane contrast comes over him, and he can hardly breathe the air of home.

Lina, on her side, is justified, too. She believed that all he wanted, when he went away, was for her to keep the home fires burning, go on with her nursing twice a week, keep up with her Red Cross work, scrupulously watch for tin and fat and paper salvages, obey the food and fuel laws—all these she has done. She hasn't complained of loneliness or dullness or food shortages. She expected praise and she didn't get it.

Give time and patience to your problem, Lina and Bob. It can be solved by a determination to understand and help each other. There will be a million more like it for the women of America to handle. Render this last aid to your government; that you lift just one of these difficulties from the great total, that you lessen just by so much the fearful crisis of postwar days.

Keeping Eggs Fresh

Do not wash eggs until you are ready to use them. An egg shell has a protective film which helps to keep bacteria and odors from getting through the pores. Washing removes that film, and the egg then spoils rapidly. To wipe off soiled spots on eggs, use a rough, dry cloth. Keep eggs in a refrigerator or other cold place to hold their freshness. Because eggs absorb odors readily, store them away from strong-smelling foods such as onions, cheese, pickles and kraut.

BATTLE NEUROSIS

Robert has come home, discharged honorably, after a year's active duty in the navy. Like so many other veterans, he seems constantly moody and depressed. He is cold to his pretty wife, and unappreciative of her efforts to please him and to help him fit into the old ways of life. His little daughter doesn't interest him, nor his law practice, nor anything that used to delight him.

Robert is suffering from the well-known effects of the terrible strain and horror of war. Only time will cure him.

News Behind the News

RUSSIAN DELEGATES SHOW AMIABLE WORLD RELATIONS

SAN FRANCISCO. — Definite and positive assertions as to what this conference and the world will do are being flung rather freely around.

A commonly popular one in the news is that the conference—as one exceptionally able writer has put it — has proceeded to the point where a new era is assured.

Behind this line of current thought running through the news and comment is the idea that the Russians have been brought around to acceptance of democratic methods. They gave in on the Argentine question and Molotov afterward called on State Secretary Stettinius and made certain other gestures creating a new amiable and friendly spirit. It is thus true enough that the attitude with which Mr. Molotov, if not Russia herself, came into this conference, is being altered.

Molotov

But down deep inside everyone here knows peace and the settlement of world problems will be a long process. The millenium is nowhere here yet visible to my eyes. The precise degree of progress that has been made is that Russia has shown a willingness to cooperate and that this has put the delegates naturally in a better frame of mind.

Now is this new spirit can be carried forward to the application of all problems, then the new era will truly have arrived. But to keep a proper perspective of the actual condition, it must be reported that the problems still remain — all of them —many grave, deep problems of every economic, financial and political nature. What has been done here so far has been merely to get an agreement on the organization of the conference. Therefore it should be plain future hopes here can not be based on "the receptivity" of this governments attitude toward Russia, but upon the receptivity of the Russian attitude toward democratic processes.

Action Taken Slowly.

The questions I hear asked by men here who have given earnest thought to the matter all run down to that single, focal proposition.

It is to this world peace meeting exactly a week to get down to the business of naming its committees and commissions to do the actual work for which it was assembled. During that week the loud speakers of the opera house recorded speeches from all the interested parties and the organizational disputes of the major powers.

The speeches set forth largely the pleas of the small powers for "mutual respect of nations," "recognition of human values," "Principles of justice" —not far from the line which Mr. Truman laid down at the outset in his appeal for "simple justice." I would say that as far as words are concerned most of the nations are not far apart, but some of them were not represented in all these expressions.

It may be reported, also, that the smaller nations will win concessions in the Dumbarton formula, the extent and nature of which will be ironed out by bargaining—and this represents progress also.

Behind all these developments however, the nations were sounding each other out. From their experiences they have a more complete knowledge of just how much each one wants.

To that extent, great progress has been made. But it would be safer to report progress here—not victory.

The nine point program of Dumbarton Oaks amendments adopted by the American delegation represented quite a personal victory for Senator Vandenberg. It was the Michigan Republican who first demanded the main points such as inclusion of the word and ideal of "Justice" through the charter and opportunity for future peaceful change of the world setup as well as the charter. Other forces prescribed what seemed in general to me to be basic changes of theory from Dumbarton Oaks along the same lines such as specific inclusion of the Atlantic charter ideals, return to international law, world court, safeguarding human rights, etc.

From a political standpoint the doctrines of international law and world court have a Republican origin, while the Atlantic charter and human rights lines were developed by Mr. Roosevelt. The improvements devised by Americans here therefore represent a genuine compromise and exhibit what I think is an outstanding development of this meeting, namely a return to a spirit of cooperation among American political interests which is so vitally essential. Most of the inside voting in the delegation has been unanimous.

Point-Easy Patterns

Some of our homemakers feel that rationing has become so tight, it is difficult to set a tasty dish before the family. It's true we are learning to use a great variety of foods, but all these can be made delicious as well as pleasing as to appearance.

Humble meats like hamburger and liver can be dressed attractively and made to taste like high-point foods. Imagine eating golden brown, wafer-thin pancakes, filled with a well-seasoned meat mixture. Good? Of course, pass the seconds, please. You can stuff small slices of liver with your favorite celery or onion dressing and braise them in a savory tomato sauce. There's little better.

If you have taken it a little bit easy on the main course, you can always go the limit with the desserts. Cream pies are luscious even though their whipped cream toppings are missing. Frothy egg whites are just as pretty and tasty.

Fresh vegetables and fruit platters are ideal for adding color to the table. Try a freshly cooked snowy white cauliflower in the center of a platter and surround it with slivered green beans and tomato cups with golden corn kernel centers. If it's a fruit platter you've set your cap for, then you'll like melon (preferably cantaloupe with its center scooped out and filled with a fruit gelatin salad, and garnished on the platter with slices of pineapple mounted with fresh berries or grapes.

Hamburger Filled Potato Pancakes
(Serves 6 to 8)

1 pound hamburger
2 teaspoons salt
¼ cup milk
2 tablespoons fine, dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons fat
4 cups grated raw potatoes
2 tablespoons grated onions
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 eggs, beaten
¼ cup flour
2 tablespoons milk

Combine meat, 1 teaspoon salt, milk and bread crumbs. Mix well and shape into thin patties. Brown in hot fat. Combine potatoes, remaining salt, pepper, eggs, flour and milk. Mix well. Remove meat from frying pan. Add more fat. Place a small amount of the potato mixture into hot fat. Top with meat pattie. Then cover with more potato mixture (potato mixture should form a thin coating). Fry slowly until brown. Turn and brown on other side.

These Hamburger Filled Pancakes may be served with sauerkraut. Place the kraut in the center of a platter and arrange pancakes in a border around it.

Lynn Says:

Meat Memos: Extend low-point meats with breading, garnishing and fillings to make them appetizing and point-saving.

Bacon can be dipped in beaten egg and bread crumbs, then fried and served as an appetizing meat course.

Honeycomb or pocket tripe becomes savory when given the egg and bread crumb treatment. Serve it with broiled bacon and tomatoes for flavor contrast.

Ground lamb patties take on flavor value when served with grilled fresh pineapple and tomato slices.

Small shoulder roasts will stretch further when stuffed with bread, celery, parsley or onion dressing. Make plenty of rich gravy for a fill-in feature.

*Curried Shrimp with Noodles
Slivered Carrots and Green Beans
Fresh Pineapple and Strawberry Salad
Corn Sticks Beverage
Date-Nut Bars
*Recipe Given

Curried Shrimp with Noodles.
(Serves 4 to 6)

6 tablespoons butter or substitute
6 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
¼ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons curry powder
1 pound cooked shrimp
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1½ teaspoons chopped parsley
¼ teaspoon rich meat flavoring
1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
¾ pound fine noodles

Make a cream sauce of the first five ingredients. Add shrimp, cleaned and cut in halves or quarters, depending upon size. Add seasonings, and lastly, cooked noodles broken into small pieces. Garnish with parsley and whole shrimp.

American Eggs Foo Yeung.
(Serves 4)

½ cup cooked fish such as salmon
½ cup green peas, cooked
3 stalks raw celery, diced
1 onion, minced
½ cup green pepper, chopped
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
½ teaspoon seasoning sauce
6 eggs, beaten
Spicy tomato sauce or other well-seasoned sauce

Mix fish with peas, celery, onion and green pepper. Add seasonings, seasoning sauce and beaten eggs. Mix well. Have fat hot in skillet. Pour small ladleful of mixture into skillet and brown on one side, turn cake and brown on the other. Serve with spicy tomato sauce.

Another good, light dish for supper fare is this omelet which combines point-saving foods with tempting goodness:

Mashed Potato Omelet.
(Serves 6)

½ cup milk
1 cup mashed potatoes
1 teaspoon onion juice
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
4 eggs, separated
Bacon

Mix heated milk with mashed potatoes. Add onion juice, salt and pepper. Mix in well beaten yolks of eggs. Fold in stiffly beaten whites. Pour into a greased frying pan and cook on top of stove until bottom is brown. Brown top under broiler. Serve with crisply fried bacon.

Fruit Platter.

Fresh pineapple, sliced
Grapefruit in sections
Peach halves
Grapes, seeded or marachino cherries
Small wedges of cantaloupe or other melon
Cream mayonnaise
Head lettuce
Red apples

Peel grapefruit and remove pulp by sections, then cut in half crosswise. Arrange platter by placing cups of lettuce all over the platter. Into each cup place a slice of fresh pineapple, cored and peeled (or canned slice of pineapple). On top place melon wedge and then grapefruit sections. Arrange strips of red apple on top and then sprinkle with cherries or slivered grapes. Serve with dressing made by mixing mayonnaise or salad dressing with sour cream and sprinkle with chopped nuts, if desired.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

It is difficult to detect the ordinary "slow leak" in time to prevent destructive "roadside flats." The Office of Defense Transportation recommends an effective cure for stealthy leaks: (1) Make sure valve caps have been screwed on finger tight. (2) Before adding air be sure to test pressure in each tire. (3) Check variations in tire pressure—a marked difference in pressure indicates a slow leak, which should be repaired immediately.

To help relieve the critical need for military tires, men who work in a large rubber plant in Los Angeles (B. F. Goodrich) have sworn not to miss a day's work, and, like submarine crews, not to shave for 120 days.

CONSTIPATION
is the cause of
MUCH SUFFERING

Constipation may cause no symptoms for a long time, but unless corrected will finally impair the health. Symptoms associated with advancing constipation are loss of appetite, heavily coated tongue, tired feeling and mental depression. Headache, dizziness, anemia, and skin disturbances such as acne, are commonly experienced. In severe cases, neuralgia and joint pains occur. Indigestion, with gas formation and colic, and piles and fissures frequently add to the discomforts of severe chronic cases.

No matter how many medicines you have tried for constipation, we urge you to try B-L PREPARATION, with the understanding that B-L PREPARATION must bring you satisfactory results or your money back. Caution: Use only as directed.—Adv.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

THE RETURNED EXILES AND THEIR WORK

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 8:1-4a, 5, 6, 8, 12; 9:1-3.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.—Jeremiah 29:13.

God loves men and takes delight in blessing them and prospering them on their way. When He must punish them, it is a source of grief to His Father-heart.

That fact probably explains why the period of the captivity of the Jewish people is passed over in silence in the historical accounts of the Bible. We do know that prophets were sent to minister to them and to keep alive their hope of restoration to their own land.

When the Jewish captives were ready to return to their land, the silence of sacred history is broken, and we learn of their experiences in rebuilding the temple and the wall of Jerusalem from the books of Ezra and Nehemiah.

Many and varied were the obstacles, but in due time they were surmounted, and by God's help the work was accomplished. Now the time had come for a spiritual revival, and God had His man and His message ready for that hour.

Ezra, the scribe, was God's servant in bringing the Word of God to the people. The elements of success for any revival are found here.

I. An Open Book (8:1,2).

The Word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword (Heb. 4:12). That mighty weapon does not need any apology or defense. It needs use. The soldier in battle unsheaths his sword or fires his gun. He does not send pamphlets to his enemies telling them what an effective weapon he has—he uses it and gets results.

There is a place for discussion and instruction regarding the authenticity and dependability of the Bible, but if we make it a substitute for using the Word, we are on the wrong track.

Ezra brought out the law of God and opened it to all the people. That is what we need to do today. Open up God's Word and let it do its powerful work.

II. An Attentive People (8:3, 4a, 5, 6).

The Word must be heard as well as preached. Good listeners are as important as good preachers. The open ear and the open heart complete the ministry of the open Book.

Note the reverence of the people (v. 5). When the Book was opened, they stood up—a token of honor. We do not worship the Bible, but we should show far more reverence toward it and its message than is ordinarily the case. This is God's Word, and man should approach it reverently.

Note the spirit of worship in verse 6. Be sure that any people coming to God's Word in that spirit will receive a blessing. We shall see in a moment how wonderfully God met them, but first we shall note an additional reason for the splendid response of the people.

We have before us the open book and an attentive and reverent people. What more is needed?

III. An Intelligent Ministry (8:8, 12).

There is nothing that any man can add to God's Word, but he can, by the grace of God and the illumination of the Holy Spirit, be used in opening up the meaning of the Word.

That kind of an exposition of Scripture is the very essence of real preaching. Topical discussions have their value. There is a place for book reviews and the presentation of social problems. But the pulpit should be primarily and always the place where God's Word is expounded.

Note that the law of God was read "distinctly" (v. 7). How important! That calls for preparation and prayer. That precludes the casual selection of a Scripture passage in the last minute before service.

Then observe that "they gave the sense, so that they understood the reading" (v. 8). That takes more preparation and much prayer. The teacher or preacher needs illumination so that the truth may be clearly understood and presented.

Everything was now ready for:

IV. A Spiritual Response (8:12; 9:1-3).

Revival came—and what a revival! Tears and laughter mingled. There was sorrow because of sin, and joy because of God's forgiveness. There was both fasting and feasting. God was in their midst, working through His Word as it was given out by His messengers.

It makes one downright hungry to read an account like this, hungry for a similar manifestation in our day of spiritual deadness. God is giving this kind of revival here and there where people are ready to go His way. The writer of these notes has only recently been in such revivals. Why not have them everywhere in our land? Yes, in your town or city?

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Major Joppolo recalled the order, to permit food and water to enter the city. M. Cacopardo asked permission from the Major to see General Marvin and give him information on German troop movements. When he arrived the General refused to listen to him and had Cacopardo tossed out. The general immediately recalled Major Joppolo's name.

CHAPTER XIV

"I don't know whether he has been captured or killed or what. That is the bad part. That is why I wanted to talk with you, Mister Major. Giorgio and I were going to be married."

"Well, what do you want me to do?"

"Can you find out for me whether he is a prisoner, Mister Major?"

"What do you expect me to do, go through all our prison camps and ask all the men if they are the sweetheart of Tina in Adano?"

"You must have some lists, don't you?"

"That is none of my business. I am civil affairs officer of Adano."

"Please help me, Mister Major. Not knowing is worse than having him dead."

"A hundred people come in my office every day asking me this. I tell you it is none of my business. The war is still going on, can't you understand that? We have a campaign to fight. We can't just stop in the middle of battle and open up a question-and-answer service for forlorn lovers."

"Oh don't, Mister Major, don't. You had been so nice to me. I thought—"

"Is this why you were cordial to me? Is this why you sent your father to invite me to your house? So that I could track down your lover?" Major Joppolo stood up. "I'm sorry that you have a mistaken idea of how I work. If you have business to do with me, do not invite me to your home and feed me candy. Come to my office. I will give you equal treatment with all the others."

And he turned and went into the living room, where Captain Purvis was shaping a heart with his two thumbs and forefingers and then pointing first at himself, then at Francesca.

"I'm going home, Captain."

"What for?"

"Oh, I'm fed up with this, I'm going home."

"Well, you'll excuse me if I don't come. I never thought I'd ever get anywhere talking with my fingers, but this isn't bad. See you tomorrow, Major."

It is very rare for an M.P. to drink anything, even vino, to excess, but Corporal Chuck Schultz was a rare M.P. His two friends, Bill and Polack, were in the Engineer Battalion which was working around Adano. They were billeted in the same house with Chuck and some other M.P.'s.

Chuck and Bill and Polack did not drink vino in order to savor it on their tongues. They did not drink it to compare it with other wines which they had had on other occasions. They did not drink it to complement food. They drank it to get drunk.

Therefore it was not surprising that on the night when they bought three bottles for three dollars, they began quite early in the evening to tell dirty jokes, then sang some songs, then argued a little, then got restless and decided to go for a walk. Nor was it surprising that the walk was rather noisy. It was really not surprising, either, that when they found that their walk was not taking them anywhere except round and round the same block, they should have decided to go back to their billet. This was not surprising, but it was the thing which got them in trouble.

If they had stayed in their billet and not gone for a walk, they would have been all right. So would they if they had not gone home to their billet so soon, but had walked until their drunkenness dulled their vision and blurred their keenness. But doing what they did got them in trouble.

Here is why:

On the way home, Chuck Schultz said: "Hell of a war."

Polack said: "Smatter, Chuck, you gonna get sick again?"

Chuck said: "Oh, no, I feel good. It's jus' hell of a war."

Polack said: "Prove it."

Bill said, for the ninetieth time that night: "Uno due tre quattro cinque."

Polack said: "Shup, Bill. Prove it's hell of a war, Chuck."

Chuck said: "Major."

Polack said: "Major who?"

Chuck said: "You know the fella. Town Hall fella."

Polack said: "Yeah, I know the one you mean."

Chuck said: "Joppolo, that's fellow."

Polack said: "What about him? What's he gotta do with it?"

Bill said: "Cinque cinque cinque cinque cinque."

Chuck said: "He never gets drunk, never, never gets drunk. But he's good fella."

Polack said: "Oh, he's wonderful fella."

Chuck said: "He's bes' fella whole invasion."

Polack said: "Oh, he's better'n that. He's perfec'."

Chuck said: "No, he ain' perfect. He don't drink. But he's good. Oh, he's good's hell. These wops, they think he's perfect. He's bes' thing ever happened to this town."

Polack said: "What's 'at prove? Prove it's hell of a war. Don't change a subjec'."

Bill said: "Una due tre una due tre."

Chuck said: "Shut up your counting, Bill. I'll prove it's hell of a war. It's all 'cause of the Major."

Polack said: "How's he prove anything if he don't drink?"

Chuck said: "Here's how he proves everything. He's bes' thing ever happened to this town, but he's gonna get kicked. Now is that any kind of a war?"

Polack said: "Who's gonna kick him? Show me the stiff who's gonna kick him."

Chuck said: "General Marvin's gonna kick him, that's who!"

Polack said: "Oh, he kicks everybody, I don't see nothin' special about that."

Chuck said: "Yeah, but look, Polack, here you got a guy who's best thing ever happened to this town, I mean he unnerstands these people, and that old General Marvin he's gonna bust him down to Corporal, just like me. Now what kind of a war is that?"

"Not knowing is worse than having him dead."

Bill said: "Cinque quattro tre due uno. Backwards. Cinque quattro tre due uno."

Polack grew suspicious. He said: "How you know? Does the old general tell you who he's gonna bust and who he's not?"

Chuck said: "I seen the paper."

Polack said: "Bustin' him?"

Chuck said: "No, the paper 'at's goin' to get him busted. Trapani and me, we tried to hide it, but the Cap'n found it. It's sure goin' to get the Major busted when old pie-face sees it."

Polack said: "Jeez, can you imagine a war like that?"

Chuck said: "Hell of a war."

Polack said: "Chuck, you proved it to me. Hell of a war."

Bill said: "I like cinque best. Cinque cinque cinque."

Chuck said: "Rotten dirty stinkin' unfair lousy war."

Polack said: "Hell of a war, you take and ruin the bes' man you got."

Chuck said: "I like that Major, he's honest. I don't want for him to be busted like that."

Polack said: "I ain't never seen this Major, but if you say he's the best Major you ever seen, I'll take your word for it and I think it's a unfair war myself for bustin' him."

Chuck said: "You know, we ought to do somethin' for that Major. Polack, we ought to do somethin' for him."

Polack said: "You said me a mouthful, Chuck. We sure ought to."

Chuck said: "What could we do, Polack? Somethin' good. He deserves it, somethin' good."

Polack said: "What could we do, Chuck? You're a Corporal, and Bill and me, we're just P.F.C.'s. What could we do?"

Chuck said: "Let's think."

Polack said: "Okay, pal. . . . You thinkin'?"

Chuck said: "Yeah, but I ain't got a thing."

Bill said: "Uno due tre. We ought to give the guy a goin'-away present if he's all that good."

Chuck said: "First sensible thing you said all night, Bill. We'll give him a present."

Polack said: "What'll we give him, Chuck?"

Chuck said: "That's a hell of a tough one. For a goin' away present, it's got to be good, if it's for him."

Polack said: "It was Bill's idea. What'll we give him, Bill?"

Bill said grandly: "Uno due tre quattro cinque."

Chuck said: "He's no good, him and his numbers. We got to think of something, Polack, we got to."

Polack said: "Let's go back and get those bottles. Maybe they'd help us think of something."

Chuck said: "That's hard, to think of somethin' good enough for that Major."

Polack said: "I can think of a lot of things, but not a one of 'em is good enough. The trouble with that Major is he's too good. Now you give me a lousy Major, and I'd have you a present in no time."

Chuck said: "It's a hell of a war when you can't even think of a goin'-away present for a good guy."

Polack said: "Say! I just thought of somethin' terrible. Are you sure this Major's goin' away?"

Chuck said: "Didn't I see that slip of paper?"

Polack said: "That's right. Shall we give him a bottle of ol' lady Fatta's wine?"

Chuck said: "Polack, you know that's not good enough."

Chuck said: "Polack, I think you're drunk. What's the matter with you?"

Bill said: "One, two, three, four, five. Why don't you borrow something from old Four Eyes here to give the Major? You'd find a real nice goin'-away present right here in this house if you just got up and looked for it."

Chuck said: "Bill, why don't you have more ideas? You got the best ideas when you have 'em."

Polack said: "Yeah, good idea, let's borrow something."

Chuck said: "Bill, you don't even know how good your ideas are when you have 'em. Look: this Major, he's Italian himself, speaks it like a native. He sure is gonna appreciate something Italian from old Four Eyes' house. Boy, Bill, I don' know why you aren' a millionaire with the ideas you got."

Bill said: "Una and tre is quattro. Due and tre is cinque. I can even add."

Chuck said: "Let's go an' find something 'fore we pass out."

Polack said: "Lookit that room, like a Gran' Central Station. There's a lot of Eyetalian junk in there."

Chuck said: "Let's have look."

Polack said: "Why'n we give'm a chair?"

Chuck said: "Good idea. Take the shroud off'n a chair, give 'im a chair."

Chuck and Polack skated across the floor to a chair. They bent over it to take the slip cover off. Their fumbling hands could not find where to loosen the cover.

"Lif' it up," Chuck suggested. "Look at it from unnerneath."

So they lifted the chair above their heads. Polack reeled. Chuck lost his grip. The chair crashed to the floor, and a leg broke off. Bill picked the leg up.

Chuck said: "Too much trouble, lousy chair."

Bill said, as if positive: "Garibaldi."

Polack said: "Le's give'm a Garibally." And he went over to the corner, lifted the bust off the pillar, started uncertainly back toward the others, lost his balance, and dropped the bust. It broke into hundreds of pieces.

Polack looked over the mantel at a painting of a fat nude. She was lovely in his wine-washed eyes, and he said: "Give'm a woman. A Major needs a woman."

So the three worked together to get the painting down. They balanced themselves on chairs and grunted and all lifted on the bottom edge of the painting. They managed to lift it off its hook, but they could not keep it balanced. The picture fell, and its canvas hit the back of a chair, and the fat woman was ripped from flank to flank.

Polack said: "Le's go in 'nother room."

They went into a dining room. In one corner there was a big glass-faced cabinet containing Venetian glassware on shelves. "Give 'im somethin' to drink out of," Chuck said.

He tried the door of the cabinet, but it was locked. "Bill," he said, "open this thing up. Don't just stan' there with that club. Open up."

Polack said: "Case of 'mergency, break glass an' pull lever."

Bill stepped up and poised the chair leg. "Una, due, tre," he said, and on three he let go. The glass front shivered to the floor. The three boys staggered forward to choose a gift. First they dropped a bowl. Then they dropped a glass swan. Then they dropped a big goblet. Then they knocked the whole cabinet over and broke everything.

The three men went from room to room this way, leaving a trail of ruin behind them. Their disappointment grew as they saw their chances dwindling of getting anything good enough (or durable enough) for the Major.

Finally Chuck said: "Hell of a war, when you can't even find a present in ol' Four Eyes' house."

HINTS FOR HOME BAKERS
Good for Desserts—Grand for Lunch Boxes!
Make them with Fleischmann's yellow label Yeast—the only fresh yeast with EXTRA vitamins A & D

FILLED BUNS

2 cakes Fleischmann's Yeast
1 cup lukewarm water
¾ cup shortening
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs, beaten
½ teaspoon nutmeg
Few drops lemon extract
1 cup milk, scalded and cooled
9 cups sifted flour
1 cup jelly or jam

Dissolve Fleischmann's Yeast in lukewarm water. Cream shortening, sugar and salt; add well-beaten eggs, nutmeg, flavoring and lukewarm milk. Add to yeast. Add 3 cups flour and beat well. Add remaining flour; turn out on floured board and knead lightly until smooth and elastic. Place in greased bowl. Cover and set in warm place, free from draft, until light, about 2 hours. Turn out on floured board and shape into round rolls. Dip in granulated sugar and set on well-greased baking pan ½ inch apart. Cover and let rise until doubled in bulk, about 45 minutes. Make an indentation in center of roll, fill with jelly or jam. Let rise again until light, about 15 minutes. Bake in moderate oven at 400°F. about 20 minutes. Makes 4 dozen.

After recovering from shrapnel wounds, Marine PFC Russell Halsey, 21, Roselle Park, N. J., returned to action in the Tinian Islands, shot a Jap sniper but sustained a broken hip in the action. Twice War Bond funds have helped restore him to health, and Bonds bought and held are healing hundreds of other service men's wounds.

Marine Sgt. Don Baird, Monmouth, Ill., smiles because War Bonds bought and held at home speeded his recovery from arm wounds suffered in an attack across a dummy flight strip at Saipan. A Jap 77 field piece hit him.

During beaching operations on a Pacific island, an LST struck a mine and Milton H. Fox, Mo. M. M., 1/C, 22, Sandusky, Ohio, sustained multiple fracture of both legs. War Bonds invested in and held by folks at home have helped provide treatments that encourage him to look to the day when he will walk normally again. More invasions are being added almost daily in that area with more and more casualties, men who need all the treatment Bonds can supply.

NOTICE

DECREE
In the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, in Equity.

The Bill of Complaint of the State of Alabama, on the relation of A. B. Foshee, County Solicitor of Chilton County, Alabama, against one 1938 Ford Coupe, Motor No. 12923141, being addressed to me, and it appearing that on, that on the 16th day of May, 1945, one John F. Poole did transport in said automobile certain prohibited liquors or beverages from one point to another in the State of Alabama, and that said automobile was on said date seized by the Sheriff of said County, and said Bill of Complaint prays that said automobile be declared condemned and forfeited to the State of Alabama, and for an Order of condemnation and sale thereof.

It is therefore, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that notice of the filing of said Bill of Complaint be given for three successive week in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the Town of Clanton, Alabama, and that all persons claiming or asserting any right, title, or interest in said automobile be required to appear and assert such claims by the 30th day of June, 1945, and that failing to do so, their said right, title, or interest will be forever barred.

Ordered and Decreed, this the 18th day of May, 1945

Bonds Over America

OREGON CAPITOL

Oregon's capitol at Salem is now one of the fine structures which Americans buy War Bonds to protect. It's new and beautiful; one of the nation's prized possessions. It is worth buying a great many War Bonds to provide planes and materiel for our fighting men to use in its defense. Oregon City and Corvallis were capitals of the territory for brief periods but Salem became the permanent capital when Congress provided funds for the erection of territory capitol buildings there and the U. S. Treasury refused to provide the funds for construction anywhere else. Fire destroyed the first capitol and also another in 1935.

New Stock Yards Formerly Opened At Montgomery

The new $125,000.00 Capital Stock Yards, Inc., of Montgomery, Ala., will formally open Tuesday, May 29th, 1945. One of the feature events for the grand opening will be a consignment of Milky Way bulls from the widely known Milky Way Farms, owned and operated by Mars, Inc., of Pulaski, Tenn. All of these bulls are grandsons of Larry Domino 50th and Colorado Domino 159th. two great herd sires of the Milky Way Farms. This will give the livestock men of Alabama an opportunity to eye and buy herd bulls of high quality which will certainly increase the quality of their herds.

Immediately after the sale of the registered bulls, they expect to sell some 2,000 cattle and hogs, consisting of all types. They expect representative buyers from all the packers in the South and Southeast and in addition a number of stocker buyers, both local and out of state.

As a preliminary to the grand opening of the new stock yard, they are to have a special lamb day sale Wednesday, May 23rd, in Montgomery, and in Selma and Demopolis on Thursday and Friday of the same week. Arrangements have been made to have Geo. C. Phillips of Geo. C. Phillips Co., and other prominent buyers present for all three lamb sale dates. These sales are being sponsored by the Alabama Extension Service for the purpose of moving early lambs to market in this section. Graders will be furnished by the Alabama Extension Service and it is suggested that only lambs weighing 70 pounds or more should be taken to the markets. They expect approximately 750 lambs for the three sale days.

The Capital Stock Yards, Inc., covers approximately 160,000 square feet, and it is believed this building is the most modern of its type throughout the country. The sales and show ring will seat 1,200 and is air cooled. The yard itself will have a capacity of 3,000 head of live stock per day.

The Capital Stock Yards, Inc., will be of interest to all cattlemen as it will establish a market for their live stock and will give them an opportunity to sell their cattle on a competitive basis. The public is invited to the grand and formal opening.

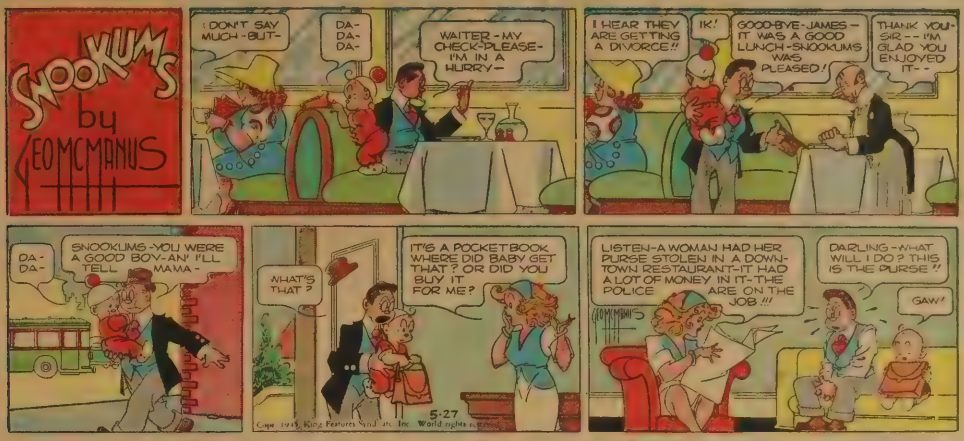
Pinup Baby Given War Bonds

THE WINNER—Little 15-month-old Harolyn Cheryl Meyer of Trenton, New Jersey, official pinup girl of the USS New Jersey, was made $3,200 richer in War Bonds through donations by the crew of the USS New Jersey for use in obtaining her future education. Governor Walter E. Edge made the presentation. The child's father, an Army Air Corps pilot, is a prisoner of war in Germany. He has never seen his little beauty queen. She is held by her mother, Mrs. Harry C. Meyer.

Bonds Over America

EVANGELINE



American boys fight, suffer and die today to perpetuate freedom. And other Americans on the home front buy and hold War Bonds to safeguard freedom. If Henry W. Longfellow had not enjoyed liberty he could not have written "Evangeline," the story of Emmaline Labiche, St. Martinville, La., pioneer girl who waited on the banks of the Teche for years, hoping to greet her lost lover. The Longfellow-Evangeline Memorial Park, oldest of Louisiana's state parks, is a monument to liberty and freedom.

General Hodges In Birmingham Saturday June 2nd.

General Coutney H. Hodges, Commanding General of the First Army, who's brilliant record in France and Germany helped end the war in Europe, and who was in Alabama before going overseas, where he formed the replacement and training command which now has headquarters in Birmingham will be in Alabama Saturday, June 2.

General Hodges will be accompanied by his wife who was the former Miss Mildred Lee, member of the widely known Lee Family of Alabama.

Alabama will observe "First Army Day" Saturday in honor of General Hodges and his First Army men.

The War Finance Committee of Alabama will take the lead in ceremonies at Legion Field, Birmingham, Saturday, to spur sale of War Bonds on the Seventh War Loan Drive as a tribute to the First Army and General Hodges. War Bonds sold as admittance to the event will be called "Tickets To Tokyo."

UNITED CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH NEWS

Remember, this will be go-to-church Sunday. Help to remind members and friends. Let's all worship together on this first Sunday of the month. The Adult class will have dinner in the fellowship room. The sermon topic will be: "Making Up A Christian." Sunday evening we will have a combination service with the young people, beginning at 7 o'clock. We will look into "Foreign Fields."

This next Wednesday will be the regular time for the monthly church supper. Everyone should come for the fellowship and recreation. In the brief business session effort is made to bring all church activities before the members. Important features need to be considered in this meeting.

"A" Motorists To Get More Gasoline

Automobile drivers in Alabama are the beneficiaries of an increase in gasoline rations, effective in June, OPA District Director in Montgomery said. The value of "A" coupons will be increased from four to six gallons on June 22, when the new A-16 coupon becomes valid. The limit for "B" car holders who can show an actual need for more gasoline will be raised to 650 miles per month on June 11.

"I share with Chester Bowles and the Petroleum Administration the pleasure of announcing this increase in gas rations for civilian motorists," he continued.

"The additional quantities to be made available to civilian use are not guaranteed for any certain period of time but must always remain dependent upon changes in the military demand. The military has always had, and must always have, first call," he explained.

In explaining the increase in the "B" card ceiling, the director pointed out that a person who needs only 200 miles a month will continue to receive only that amount. But a person who uses his car in his business and who needs more than he is now receiving will be able to get additional rations up to 650 per month. In both cases they will receive the 50% increase in the "A" ration, he assured.

GRADUATES FROM UNIVERSITY

Miss Bernice Lowe will receive her Bachelor of Arts Degree from the University of Alabama on June 2, at Foster Auditorium. She completed requirements for her degree, March 16. She will be among the graduating seniors to receive special honors at these exercises which close the collegiate year.

Miss Lowe is a memer of Alpha Kappa Delta, Phi Beta Kappa and Triangle.

M. & O. INAUGURATES PULLMAN SERVICE FROM MAPLESVILLE

Inauguration of a new, direct Pullman service between Maplesville and St. Louis was announced today by Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

The Rebel Route announces the addition on June 1 of a combination sleeping and dining car to its passenger train operating between Montgomery and Artesia, Miss., where the Montgomery District train connects with the railroad's streamlined Rebel trains. Under the new management, Pullman passengers will not have to change trains, the car going through between St. Louis and Montgomery.

Pullman seats, it was stated, will also be available, and GM&O officials see increased travel between the Midwest and the Southeast Alabama and Florida points.

FIRST CAR LOAD OF TRUCKS

Clanton Motors received a car-load of pick-up trucks Tuesday. This was hte first car-load of automobiles to reach here in several years in a single shipment, according to Rip Burnett, official of the Company.

Clanton F. F. A. Elects New Officers

The Clanton chapter of F. F. A. elected officers for the coming year before the close of the last school term.

Then officers for next year: President, Thomas Kennedy; Vice-president, Herbert Dennis; Secretary-Edwin Durbin; Treasurer., Hoover Moatts; Reporter, Roland Sanders; Sentinal, James Wells; Advisor, Jas. D. Tyler.

The retiring officers should be complimented on the fine work they did last year, and the new officers should be extended congratulations as well as good wishes for the next year.

The F. F. A. has done a good job in their part of the National Defense. They are looking forward to doing bigger and better jobs next year. Besides going all out for victory in collecting materials needed by our government, producing more feeds, foods etc. the F. F. A. has sent many of its members to join the ranks of our fighting forces.

Where they are and How they are

A. W. Jones, S 1-C left Friday, May 25, for Norfolk, Va., where he is stationed after spending a few days here with his family and friends.

Lawrence A. Duffey, gunner's mate, second class, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Ruffey of Mt. Creek, Ala., has seen quite a bit of action since going overseas. He took part in the attacks on Okinawa and Iwo Jima. He also participated in the invasion of North Africa and was on convoy in the North Atlantic.

Going into Pacific action for the first time in the bombardment of Wotje Atoll in the Marshalls, Duffey, later participated in the attack on the Carolinas and Marianas, the invasion of Hollandia, the Battle of the Philippine Sea and the Battle of Layte Gulf.

He also saw service in the invasion of the Palaus, attacks on Jap held Formosa and Luzon, in sweeps of Tokyo and strikes along the coasts of China and Indo-China.

Pfc. James E. (J.E.) Scott, who is somewhere in Germany with the Army of Occupation, was recently promoted to his present rank from that of private.

He entered the Army in August, 1944, and has been overseas since February, 1945.

Pfc. Scott is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Scott of Maplesville, Ala., Route Two. He wishes all his friends to write him at this address: Pfc. James E. Scott, A.S.N. 44030365, Co. K, 250 Inf., APO 451, in care Postmaster, New York, N Y.

Thomas G. Burnette, 24, watertender, first class, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Burnett, of Stanton, Ala., is now serving aboard the U. S. Destroyer Escort EDMONDS.

He was aboard the ship at the time she fought heavy seas and enemy aircraft to rescue some 375 survivors from a stricken escort carrier which had been hit during an air attack.

Before enlisting in January, 1941, Burnette was a truck driver at the Maddox Furniture Co., in Stanton. He attended Maplesville High School.

S-Sgt. Marvin J. Bates from Maxwell Field, Ala., was here for the week end with his parents and friends.

T-Sgt. Thomas G. Norris, son of Dessie Norris, has been admitted to the A. F. Regional and Convalescent Hospital, Miami District, for treatment and rest.

Capt. Charles G. Nix, 29, son of John F. Nix, of Montevallo, Ala., was recently promoted to his present rank from that of First Lieutenant, it was announced by Major-General R. B. McClure, Palo Alto, Calif., Commanding General of the Chinese Combat Command.

Nix, who is serving as a regimental liaison officer with a U. S. Combat Section of the CCC, was graduated in 1934 from the Jemison High School and attended Howard College in Birmingham.

He was inducted into the Army in October, 1944, receiving his basic training at Camp Roberts, Calif., and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant following completion of Officer's Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga.

The Captain's wife and child, Cheryl, are making their home in Lawrenceburg, Tenn., while he is away.

HOME ON FURLOUGH

PFC. ALVIN BRIDGES

Arriving here Monday for a 15-day furlough was Pfc. Alvin Bridges, husband of Mrs. Mildred Easterling Bridges.

Pfc. Bridges has been stationed at San Diego, Calif., since his last furlough in December. Then he had just returned from thirty-three months overseas.

His many friends are glad to see him home, especially since the usual sad expression on Mildred's face is gone.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Cox of Scottsboro, Ala., formerly of Clanton, received word Sunday from their son, Jack Cox, who has been liberated after being in a German Prison Camp for the last one and one-half years.

The only word that the parents had received from the boy since he was taken prisoner last November.

Mr. C B. Cox of this city is a brother to Sam Cox.

The many friends of Oscar Bates, formerly of the Alabama Mill Village here, will regret to learn that he has been wounded in action and lost one leg.

Oscar is now on his way to the states where he will enter one of the convalescent hospitals.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Bates and the husband of Mrs Elizabeth Armstrong Bates.

—HELEN

BOY, PAGE MR. RIPLEY

A most unusual incident was related to us this week by Mr. C. E. Cagle, Sr, of Stanton, Ala.

Mr. Cagle is a World War I veteran.

On April 6, 1917, Mr. Cagle joined the army and fought through France and up to the German border. Then going into the Army of Occupation lived on the third floor of a house in Germany. Remembering the address of the house, he gave it to his son, C. E. Cagle, Jr., when he joined the army on April 6, 1943.

After going overseas, the son picked up the fight at the Colmar Pocket, where his father left off, and fought through Germany and went into the army of occupation, where he lives in the same room of the same house the Mr. Cagle, Sr lived in during World War I.

FORMER CLANTON GIRL IS HONOR GRADUATE AT ELMORE CO. HIGH

Miss Billie Ruth Fant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Fant, of Eclectic, graduated May 18 from the Elmore County High School and who was valedictorian of the class. Miss Fant was voted "Most Versatile" in the school's Who's Who Contest. Other honors accorded her were editor-in-chief of the school paper, assistant editor of the annual, chairman of the Prayer Band, accompanist for the Glee Club operatta, a member of the Beta Club and was in the cast of the Senior play.

The Fants are well known in Clanton, Mr. Fant having been County Agent here a few years ago.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the friends and neighbors in Clanton for the sympathy shown us during the death of our husband and father, Charles J. Bossinger. Also for the beautiful flowers. —The Bossinger Family.

Pillow slips that wear out before their time may have been doing double duty as laundry bags. The extra wear from dragging and pulling, and the harder washing because of extra soil takes its toll of the fabric.

Mrs. R. T. Edmondson has returned from the Jefferson Hospital in Birmingham where Dr. Patterson operated on her head for Tic Doloreux on April 30th. We are glad to report that she is convalesing nicely.

MR. CHARLES BOSSINGER

Mr. Charles J. Bossinger, age 64, died suddenly May 23. Funeral services were held Friday at the Baptist Church, conducted by Rev. Roswell Owens; interment in Clanton Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Estelle Bossinger; two sons, W. J. Bossinger of Birmingham, C. H. Bossinger of Jacksonville, Fla.; three daughters—Mrs. P. E. McMoran of Birmingham, Miss Doris and Dorothy Bossinger of Clanton; one brother, Ed Bossinger of Cleveland, Ohio; one sister, Mrs. Charles Keller, Cleveland, Ohio.

Pallbearers were: C. B. White, Joe Minshew, S. Q. Foshee, D. P. Culp, Alonzo Robinson and Julian Evans.

Spigener Funeral Home in charge.

"Here Is Tomorrow" To Be Shown In County

The motion picture, "Here Is Tomorrow," will be shown next week in several Chilton County Communities. American Cooperatives in action will be seen in the picture. Coopcratives that have been organized by farm people and by city people and bringing a higher plane of living for all. In the picture will be seen the million dollar oil and gasoline refinery owned by the farmers of Kansas and Nebraska.

Every one is invited to these picture shows which are being sponsored by the Farmers Union Cooperative and the United Congregational Church. A free will offering is taken to help meet the expense.

CANE CREEK

Our Home Coming and Singing will be next Sunday, June 3rd. Singing begins at 10:00 o'clock. There will be no Sunday School but after next Sunday we will have our Sunday School at 10 o'clock.

We were glad to have Dr. Thomas to bring the message Sunday. It was enjoyed by all. He helped in our meeting once and we were glad to have him with us again.

All who have loved ones buried here and live away and can't come to help us keep up the graves, please send money to help keep them up too.

R. E. Jones or J. Lee Yates are the proper ones to send it to. The cemetery needs to be kept up and we need help from the ones away to help with it.

Cancer Upsets Childrens Lives

"Cancer has upset the lives of more children than any other single disease in the history of the country," says Mrs. Meade, Alabama Commander of the Field Army, American Cancer Society.

"Homes have been broken up because one or both parents have died of cancer, while [illegible] of school children [illegible] and almost [illegible] New [illegible] research [illegible]."

Fifteen hundred children under 14 years of age died last year of cancer, advises the Society, which has been bringing cancer findings to the attention of the American people since 1913. In the past eight years there were nine times as many deaths of children under 10 years of age, from cancer and leukemia together, as from infantile paralysis. During the six years of 1938 through 1942, cancer alone killed 2½ times as many young people under 20 years as did infantile paralysis.

Many of the questions concerning this dread disease, which can be fought with knowledge, early treatment and periodic visits to the family doctor can be answered by application at the local division, Mrs. Sophia L. Jones, Local Commander. The American Cancer Society urges Americans of all ages to learn to watch for Certain signs, like change in color, size, or shape of moles sometimes a precursor of cancer of the skin.

Skin cancer is one of the cancer forms which attacks children, but collected statistics show cures in 95% of the skin cases in all age groups, when treated early, and in only 30%, when given late treatment.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Your Marriage Is Worth Saving

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"Dorothy is a completely changed creature, and I don't want to take on a stranger for my wife. She and my mother are like two girls together. . . ."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

IT MAY take you six months, it may take you a year to rebuild, when that man of yours comes home, but marriage is worth six months or twelve months of doubt and pain. True marriage is a miracle, and to cheat yourself out of wonderful years of companionship and planning just because things are difficult now, is an expensive mistake.

"I'm completely bewildered," writes William Martin, in a letter that illustrates this point. "I've been two years overseas. When I left her my wife was a sweet, shy girl who had no friends in my home town and cried bitterly when she came to join my mother for my absence. Just before I left Dorothy had the sad experience of losing a new-born baby, so that my memory of her is of an exiled, scared, tearful, bashful little thing who assured me that she could not hold her head up at all until I came back.

'Completely Changed.'

"Well, I got back six weeks ago, and if you ask me, I'd just as soon return to France. Dorothy is a completely changed creature, and I don't want to take on a stranger for my wife. She and my mother are like two girls together; laughing all the time. They play cribbage every evening, gabble at every meal, and trot off to work still chattering. They work part-time in the same foundry. Dorothy has picked up a lot of friends, most of them daughters of my mother's old crowd; she wants me to go on week-end parties, where she is a great favorite, and she wants to have them in for impromptu suppers and games. She's perfectly amiable about everything, anxious to make me happy, says she'll give up work the minute I'm established, hopes we'll have a lot of children someday,—this doesn't sound so bad. I wonder if I'm getting over to you what I mean?

"I mean that a man likes to be important in his own house, he likes to have the say. If I suggest this, Dorothy is all attention; what would I like to do? Well, the truth is I don't want to do anything, except sit around. I don't even want my mother or wife near me, part of the time. I always wanted to take a forestry course, but after two years of college I quit, and got a job, so I could marry. Then the war came. I have no money now, and I'll be darned if I want my women to support me. Shall I just get out of their lives, go off somewhere, and work it out myself?"

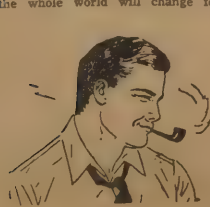
No, by no means do that, Bill. Your marriage is worth saving, with such a woman. Instead of running away, as so many of our people do, today, work it out yourself—but at home.

I think you'd make those two women supremely happy if you announced that they had to support you until you finished your forestry study. Your government will help you, and all it will amount to will be that they take care of themselves for another year or two. Then go to work with a vengeance, and see how fast you can beat the regular term time.



The moment you're hard at work the whole world will change for you. Work is the supreme panacea. There isn't going to be a household in America, in the next year or two, that doesn't face this or some more serious problem. The problem of our physically maimed and wounded isn't going to be the worst of it; it'll be the mental, the nerve, the psychopathic cases that put a heavy burden on us all. Lift your burden off the great total by accepting the unexpected gaiety and independence of this wife of yours; add to her capability, her completeness, a new capability and completeness of your own.

Normal Pattern Will Return.

Once you're well started, and the first baby likewise, the whole pattern will fall into normal lines, and this restless, dissatisfied, resentful phase of home-coming will seem only a dream. You have the materials for an unusually happy marriage here; don't throw them away.

Postwar marital problems present every variation of trouble to which human hearts are heir. The returning husband who grows beyond his wife, and finds her unexpectedly dull, less pretty, less dear than he remembered her. The wife who hardly knows the boy with whom she danced so merrily into wedlock, and who doesn't like him much, on later inspection. The returning soldier jealous of his baby. The waiting wife all ready with plans for divorce. The criticisms of her because she lived with his mother, or because she didn't. The discontent because she worked, or else she didn't. The wounded problems and the problems of the maimed and the blind.

Make a fresh start, Bill, and solve yours yourself.

Finish your forestry course. . . .

Value of Victory Garden

A good home garden is first of all a source of food. It is important from an economic standpoint as it supplies fresh foods in season and a surplus for canning. It is also important from the standpoint of health and family morale. Working in a garden is a source of recreation and education for all the family. It develops team work and fellowship between family members of all ages. It also gives youngsters an appreciation of the land and its marvelous products.

HOLD ON A LITTLE WHILE

Another returning soldier has found his wife changed. When he left she was timid and shy, and depressed by the death of their first child. Now she is gay and happy, interested in parties and entertainment, and quite a social favorite. She lives with his mother and works in the same foundry on a part-time shift. The two women get along very well, and are always laughing and "gabbing."

While Dorothy is affectionate and anxious to please, she is no longer dependent and clinging. William feels somehow that she is a stranger . . . not the woman he thought he married. He wonders if he should try to "make a go" of this marriage . . . maybe, he thinks, he had better get out of it for the benefit of both himself and Dorothy. He left college in order to marry her, and now he wonders if it were the sensible thing to do.

The separation and the experiences of war change both husband and wife, replies Miss Norris. One will mature more than the other, but when there is no fundamental disagreement, time will harmonize the differences, and the original happiness can be regained.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

KAISER SETS PACE IN RECONVERSION PLANS

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Pacific coast has about the same postwar worry as the rest of the country but in more accentuated and positive form because of the vast expansion throughout the state in planes, shipyards and other war industries.

The Kaiser shipyards industry, for example, has been losing about 5,000 employees a month. The last four pages of their newspaper in its last issue contained want-ads of workers seeking ride - sharing automobile seats to return home. Their yards payroll at Richmond near here has been cut from peak employment of 93,000 down to 49,000 already (and it has had 500,000 different persons employed in the past four years).

I met the emperor of this most fabulous accumulation of American industries during the war, Henry J. Kaiser, and talked with him for more than an hour. His is not only the largest but most varied of all the nation's strictly new war enterprises and contains 100 industries. Thus he also has the biggest of all the problems of reconversion and I was interested in ascertaining how he would meet it.

Henry J. Kaiser

He is a crisp, heavy-set man with a knowledge of what is needed and with unlimited ideas of how to do the job. He has both business hope and faith—a confidence that the imagination of the American people will devise methods of carrying forward our industrial postwar system and faith that it cannot fail.

What he—aggressive lone wolf industrial fighter that he is—thinks the country needs primarily is competition. The first postwar industry to which he is turning his attention is, naturally, shipping. He was growling about another business leader who made a speech a few days back advocating scrapping of the American merchant marine. We now have more ships than any nation ever had on the seas, (number is a military secret) and he thinks they should be used. This will require government subsidy in his opinion because competing European lines have subsidies. I judge that he has in mind American acquisition of the trade which Japan formerly had in the Orient. He did not mention a current rumor that he may build postwar ships for Russia, although I saw him shortly after he left Molotov.

HAS MANY PLANS

The nation also needs 2,000,000 homes, low cost homes, and he sees in this field vast opportunities for postwar activity, in his opinion.

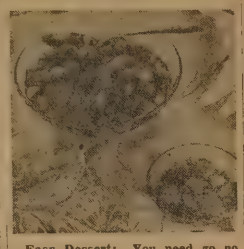
Transportation should be entirely revised. A lower cost fare should be worked out with the railroads. Speed highways should be extended, as the nation in the future will continue to move out from the cities. He sees opportunities for building lower cost cars in the automobile industry (which he does not believe is competitive now) and great possibilities in development of health facilities for the people. He would promote health facilities in every possible way to a scope amounting to a national industry.

Here is a man with ideas and the kind of energetic imagination which conceives new ventures when old ones fail. He is now in metals, conceiving a new magnesium alloy for steel, a new kind of plaster, gypsum, planes, chemicals.

BELIEVES IN COMPETITION

He is also in coal and steel, and in each industry he attempts to maintain a competitive spirit. He keeps three offices in Washington instead of one and thus promotes greater work energy among his own employees—and, of course, more production.

I suspect his own reconversion plan is already well under way. There is much well-advised talk about him expanding into foreign production in Latin America and elsewhere.



His enthusiastic spirit is symbolic of the feeling among other business men with whom I talk throughout this area. In this respect it is somewhat different from the East where the trend runs to pessimism or doubt, although labor is going home in droves.

Everyone out here figures the Jap war to take another year (my guess is somewhat less than that) and sees San Francisco and the Pacific coast as gateways to the newly opened island empires of the Pacific and the Orient. We may expect a doubling of our trade westward, and perhaps more.

There is much remaining of the forty-niner gold strike ambition among these business people and I would not be surprised if they meet their postwar problem which is heavier than any other section, as well as any another.

Fresh Fruits, Berries, Sugar—Easy Pies Satisfy Appetites

Easy Dessert: You need go no further than a bowlful of luscious, rosy-pink strawberries, plain or sugared with cream for a perfect summery dessert.

Desserts are nutritious but they are served mainly for morale. Fruits, sparkling with their glorious colors, give a fitting close to a heavy meal. On the other hand, heavier desserts give a rich flavor to an otherwise simple meal.

Desserts take care of the sweet tooth, that craving for something utterly delicious. No longer do they require only sugar. Substitutes have been developed that give pies, cakes and puddings all the goodness of former times but do not dip into the sugar canister with a big scoop.

Desserts can give you part of the important protein requirement for the day if they're made with cereals. Add fruits to cereal and you have a nourishing as well as appetite-appealing dish.

Apricot Torte.

⅔ cup melted shortening
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup sifted flour
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups quick-cooking oats

Sift flour, measure, then sift again with soda and salt. Add sugar and oats. Mix in melted shortening and blend well. Press half of the mixture into a shallow pan. Make a filling by mixing 2½ cups of cooked, slightly sweetened apricots with ¼ cup of the fruit juice and flavoring with 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Pour this mixture over the oatmeal mixture and top with remaining oatmeal mix. Bake for 35 minutes in a moderate (350-degree) oven. Cool and cut into squares and serve with cream or lemon sauce.

Frozen Strawberry Omelet.
(Serves 6)

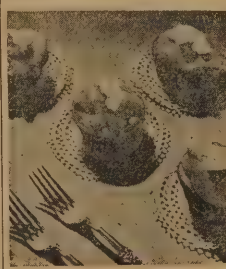
1 pint strawberries, hulled and washed
1 tablespoon sugar
3 eggs separated
6 tablespoons powdered sugar

Mash strawberries and granulated sugar. Let stand to draw off juice. Beat egg yolks until thick and lemon colored, and egg whites until stiff. Drain juice from berries and add berries to egg yolks. Fold powdered sugar into egg whites and combine the 2 mixtures. Add about 4 tablespoons of the berry juice. Pile lightly in the tray and freeze.

Date-Nut Pudding.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 eggs
2 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup sugar
1 cup dates, chopped
1 cup nuts, chopped
½ teaspoon vanilla

Beat eggs until very light. Combine flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Add to beaten eggs, dates, nuts and vanilla. Stir until well blended. Spread evenly on a well-greased paperlined pan (square). Bake in a slow (325-degree) oven 40 to 50 minutes until well browned. Serve warm with top milk or whipped cream.



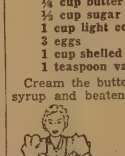
Two favorite, novel pies come in for their share of honors as desserts. Notice the use of just the single crust to save fats:

Chocolate Chip Pie.
(Makes 1 9-inch pie)

1 baked pie shell
1 tablespoon unflavored gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1½ cups milk
3 egg yolks
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon vanilla
3 egg whites
3 tablespoons sugar

Soak gelatin in cold water. Scald milk. Add slowly to beaten egg yolks. Add the ½ cup sugar, salt and nutmeg. Cook in a double boiler over hot water, stirring constantly until mixture coats a spoon. Add soaked gelatin and vanilla. Chill until slightly thickened. Beat egg whites until stiff, then add 3 remaining tablespoons of sugar. Fold into gelatin mixture. Pour into baked pie shell. The top may be piled high with whipped cream and sprinkled with semi-sweet chocolate, grated, or just topped with the chocolate.

Note: ½ cup of strong coffee may be substituted for ½ cup milk, if so desired.



Moderately Easy Dessert: Top simple cupcakes with fruit or berries and serve with plain cream or whipped as a finishing touch to a light meal.

Pecan Pie.
(Makes 1 8-inch pie)

¼ cup butter or substitute
½ cup sugar
1 cup light corn syrup
3 eggs
1 cup shelled pecans
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream the butter, add the sugar, syrup and beaten eggs. Mix well and add pecans, vanilla. Pour into an unbaked pie shell and bake for 45 minutes in a moderate oven. These cookies are dark, spicy and sweet. The combination of sugar and molasses will help save the sugar stamp:

½ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
1 egg
¼ cup molasses
¾ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon allspice
¼ teaspoon cloves
¼ teaspoon mace
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon ginger
2½ cups sifted flour

Cream shortening and sugar, then beat in egg. Mix soda with molasses until the latter foams and add. Sift salt, spices and 2½ cups flour together and add to first mixture. Force through cookie press or drop by spoonfuls on greased cookie sheet. Bake 10 to 12 minutes in a hot (275 to 400-degree) oven.

"Brown and Whites" are the answer for a sugar-easy confection. These are attractive and better-than-good tasting sweets and yet they don't use a speck of your limited sugar supply. Older people are extraordinarily fond of this confection because it isn't too sweet.

Brown and Whites.

24 cooked prunes
6 marshmallows
2 (1-ounce) squares dipping chocolate

Pit prunes, lay open and place on waxed paper. Cut marshmallows into strips, about four to each. Melt chocolate; dip strips of marshmallow, one at a time, into chocolate to half cover, then place in center of prune.

Lynn Says:

Thrifty Tricks: Cream leftover vegetables and serve them piping hot over split, buttered biscuits.

Stretch out the strawberries by adding a bit of rhubarb when you make them into a sauce. The color will be rosy-red, the flavor delicious served over cottage pudding, plain cake or dumplings.

If you are low on fruits for coffee cake fillings use last winter's jams, jellies or marmalades. For a quick coffee cake batter, butter the pan, line with orange marmalade and pour batter over it.

Cook potatoes with their skins on whenever possible to save valuable iron. Experiments show that potatoes lose about 10 per cent of their iron in the cooking water.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

The Flemish word for auto tire is "Snelpsardeloosszonderspoorwegpetrolistuig."

The 1945 government expansion program for increased production of military truck and bus tires is geared to turn out 21,300 additional tires a day, or 6,000,000 a year. This expansion plus previous expansions should result in the production in 1945 of more than twice as many truck and bus tires as were produced in 1941, and in 1946 about 2½ times the 1941 figure.

A vehicle driven at 50 m.p.h. on average roads wears away 41 per cent more rubber than if it were driven at a steady 30 m.p.h.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D. Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for June 3

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS

LESSON TEXT—Malachi 3:1-3, 16, 17; Luke 1:68, 2, 77, 78; Galatians 4:4, 5.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the way, the truth, and the life.—John 14:6.

Four hundred silent years—such is the period between the Old and the New Testaments. There was no voice from God during those years, and spiritual darkness prevailed largely in the land. But there were those who kept their lamp of faith in God brightly shining even in the darkness.

The political history of Israel during this time is partially known from secular sources. Palestine was successively under the rule of the Gentile powers until at the time of Jesus' birth they were under Roman domination.

Spiritually that age may well be described by the words used in II Timothy 3:5, "having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof," referring to the last days. There is much here that fits our day's decadent churchliness.

I. Looking for the Lord (Mal. 3:1-3).

Although they had reached the state of spiritual pride and self-sufficiency where they talked back to God (see the "whereins" of 1:6, 7; 2:14, 17, etc.) Israel still talked about looking for the Lord to come.

They knew from their prophets that He would one day come to judge their enemies, and they longed for that day; but they failed to see that it would be a day of judgment for them (vv. 2, 3).

How much like those of our day who like to talk about the love of God, His mercy and His long-suffering, but who minimize or forget that He hates sin and demands holiness of life from His people

The forerunner of Christ, John the Baptist, is in mind in verse 1, but the "messenger of the covenant" is doubtless the "angel of Jehovah," one of the Old Testament names for our Lord Jesus (see John 8:56).

Christ is coming! Such is the message to Israel, and He will come as a refiner's fire. Christ has come! That is our message to men now, and He has come as a divider of men, a cleanser and refiner of hearts, that we, too, may be ready for that day of judgment which is to come when He appears again in all His glory.

II. Living for the Lord (Mal. 3:16, 17).

When others forgot or misrepresented the Lord, when they were content with a formal worship without the power of godly living, there were a faithful group who "spake one to another" about the Lord. How exceedingly precious!

Notice that the Lord "hearkened and heard." He knows when His people so much as talk to one another about Him, and He notes it in His book of remembrance. When men are forgetting Him, He is remembering those who are true to Him. They are His precious jewels!

How vitally important Christian fellowship is in a dark and troubled day. Do not miss the joy and strength which will come into your life as you join others in God's house to speak of Him and to think "on His name." He may be all we have (that was true in Israel), but He is always and eternally enough.

III. Light from the Lord (Luke 1:68, 72, 77, 78).

The silence of the 400 years was broken, and the spiritual darkness which beclouded the land was pushed back. God, who had in the past spoken through the prophets, now spoke through the coming of His Son (Heb. 1:1-3). Being the Light of the world (John 8:12; 9:5, He shone forth with the "brightness of His glory."

Little wonder that godly Zacharias, the father of the forerunner John, sings, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people" (v. 68).

He of whom all the prophets give witness, to whom every one of the sacrifices pointed forward, the Saviour and Redeemer, has come to show forth God's mercy and to give, not only to Israel, but to all men, "the knowledge of salvation" and the remission of their sins.

The "dayspring" is at hand; a Light has shined forth into the darkness of men's hearts—Jesus Christ, the Saviour, has come!

IV. Liberty in the Lord (Gal. 4, 5).

Men who had been servants under the law became sons of God in Jesus Christ. Redemption sets a person free from the bondage of the law and brings him into the family of God as His child (Rom. 8:14-17).

How does one become a child of God? By accepting God's only way of cleansing from sin (Heb. 9:11-14, 22)—the shed blood of Christ. Believing in Him and making confession of Him before the world (Rom. 10:9, 10), we are saved and have the right to call ourselves the sons of God (John 1:12, 13).

That blessed liberty in Christ is for you who read these lines, if you will but turn to Christ now! Will you do it?

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

WNU FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the order, to permit food and water to enter the city. Cacopardo tried to furnish the General with information on German troop movements but was tossed out. Tina told the Major about her sweetheart, a prisoner of war, and asked the aid of the Major in locating him. The Major felt some jealousy but promised help.

CHAPTER XV

Polack said: "A lousy unfair war."

Bill said: "Le's go to bed."

So they went to bed. Polack heard Chuck crying in his bedroll, and he said: "Smatter, Chuck, feel sick?"

Chuck sobbed: "Hell of a war."

Polack said: "Yeah, hell of a war, Chuck, go to sleep."

When Major Joppolo arrived at his office next morning, two visitors were waiting for him. One was Quattrocchi, owner of the house where Chuck, Bill and Polack were billeted. But Quattrocchi had to wait, because the other was Lord Runcin, one of the Amgot higher-ups. The Allied Military Government was, and still is, a joint British-American affair, and as in the higher echelons of the military command, American and British officers were sandwiched in with each other. Lord Runcin was near the top.

Lord Runcin was a man of about fifty. He had wavy blonde hair and bright eyes which seldom looked straight at whoever he was talking with. He took snuff. Aside from the fact that he had a purely colonial point of view toward the Italians, he was considered to be a pretty good man for Amgot. Not the least of his attributes was his energy. On this particular morning, it was only five minutes past eight, and yet Lord Runcin had been on the road since six thirty, had taken breakfast on American rations in a wheat field, and had been wailing patiently for his Amgot representative in Adano for fifteen minutes. He was making a round of interviews, to try to pick up the best examples of Amgot work from each of the occupied towns.

Major Joppolo showed him into his office. "Wizard quarters," His Lordship said. Lord Runcin affected the slang of his subordinates, but he always seemed to use American slang when talking to his British men, and vice versa, so that many of them understood very little of what he said.

This was the first time Major Joppolo had ever had a tete a tete with a real honest to goodness Lordship. He was surprised to find him wearing shorts and an open collar and no hat at all. His Lordship's deferential manner, as he sat on the other side of the Major's desk asking questions, made Major Joppolo, who had once been a clerk in the Sanitation Department of New York City, feel quite important.

By way of making conversation, His Lordship pointed a thumb in Quattrocchi's direction and said: "Your Italian friend is in quite a flap."

The former Sanitation clerk said: "What was that, Lord? I didn't get that."

"Never mind," said His Lordship. "Well, what kind of a job have you been doing here, Joppolo?"

The former Sanitation clerk said: "Well, I've been doing all right."

"Doing all right, eh?" His Lordship smiled and made a note of the expression in his notebook, for future use. "What are the best things you've done?"

Well, to show how the town was financing itself, there was the muslin. A Liberty Ship had come into Adano harbor, and had discharged a cargo of war materials—bulldozers, bridge girders, tents, and some ammunition. Down in the bottom of one hold the unloaders found six bales of white muslin. The skipper of the ship said he had to unload it. The Quartermaster on the beach would not take it. There were no papers for the muslin, no consignment. The muslin had U. S. Treasury markings on it, so it was obviously Lend-Lease, and it was obviously lost. Major Joppolo heard about it, and seeing the rags on the people of his town, he said he could use it. He called his Civil Supply director and told him about the muslin, and the director gave permission to sell it at a fair price. Major Joppolo put two rolls up for sale, and held the other four in reserve. There was such a shortage of cloth in the town that the two rolls were gone in that many hours.

"Good work, Joppolo," His Lordship said. "What else?"

There was the refugee problem. On the day of the invasion, there were only six or seven thousand people in the town; the others had all run to the hills. Within a few days there were thirty-two or three thousand. The town got badly crowded, and one reason was that there were a lot of refugees from the town of Vicinamare. These people had come down to Adano because the Allies had been bombing Vicinamare pretty hard before the invasion. Now that the battle had gone beyond Vicinamare, they wanted to go home, but there was no transportation. One day the Major saw a German bus driving down the street. An American soldier was driving it. Major Joppolo said to himself: "I could use that bus." He asked around and found out it belonged to the Engineers. So he called the Motor Officer and said: "I'd like to use that bus of yours one day a week." The Motor Officer said it would be okay with him if the Major had proper permission. So Major Joppolo called the Adano base commander, who said it would be all right. And a few days later one busload of cheering, laughing people had started home. Now Colonel Sartorius, head of Amgot for the Province of Vicinamare, heard about the bus a few days later, and he got sore, and told Major Joppolo not to do that any more. "Sometimes," Major Joppolo said, "I think Colonel Sartorius is an awful dope."

Lord Runcin said: "Do you mean you think he takes harmful drugs?" And his Lordship dipped into his snuffbox.

Major Joppolo said: "Oh no. I just mean he's stupid."

"Dope, eh?" His Lordship said, and put the expression down in his book. "Very good, what else?"

Well, Lord, the people of Adano were so contented under the Americans that they offered of their own accord, without anybody suggesting it, to maintain the little American cemetery on the outskirts of town. So they built a fence around it and painted it white, and Russo the old stonecutter was making headstones, and every Sunday the people took flowers up and put them on the graves of the boys who had died taking the town.

"I say," His Lordship said, "touching. What else?"

Food was pretty good. In the first days, the Major had found five cars of wheat on a siding at the railroad station, had had it ground into flour, and had been able to spare some for the neighboring hill towns, which were starving. He had given one baker a very heavy fine, three thousand lira, for baking soggy bread, for refusing to sell it on credit, for refusing to take American invasion lira, and for having dirty hands; and since then the bread had been pretty good from all the bakers. He had taken steps to send the fishermen out. He had arranged for the people to have pasta, which they had not had for eight months. Food was all right.

"Good," said Lord Runcin. Every time His Lordship took snuff, Major Joppolo's eyes nearly popped out of his head and he almost forgot what he was talking about. "Anything else?"

"Oh sure, Lord," he said, "this town is much better off than it was before we came in. You can't imagine how these people were ground down. Why, they're so used to being afraid of officials, and so used to making out forms and being hauled up to court and having carabinieri ask them their names, that they all put their last names first and their first names last, the way it goes on official papers, all the time. Just like the Chinese.

"Lots of them have told me that they're better off now than they were before. For one thing, they can congregate in the streets any time they want and talk about whatever they want to. They can listen to their radios. They know they can get a fair trial out of me. They can come to the City Hall and talk to me any time they want. Mayor Nasta had office hours from twelve to one each day and you had to apply for an audience weeks in advance. I told you about the streets being clean. Oh, there are lots of ways, Lord, and if I have anything to do with it there'll be lots more."

His Lordship was getting a wee bit bored. He dipped more and more frequently into his snuffbox and looked out the window. "Fine show, fine show," he said. "Anything bad in this town?"

"Yes, there is, Lord," the Major said. "One thing."

"I wish all of our towns had just one thing wrong, Joppolo."

"Well, this isn't exactly bad, Lord, and maybe it'll sound a little silly to you."

"My job," said Lord Runcin, taking snuff grandly, "is to make sense out of silly things. What is it, Joppolo?"

"Well sir, this town needs a bell."

"A bell? Why, Major, I heard such a jangling of bells at eight o'clock this morning, you might have thought it was Christmas day."

"Yes, but this is a special bell, Lord."

"I didn't know they had any special bells."

"This one was seven hundred years old. It was just about the most important thing in the town, to hear these people talk. Mussolini took it away . . ." And Major Joppolo told how the bell had been crated up and shipped away to make gun barrels, and how the people had come to him about it, and how he had tried to track it, and had found that it was almost certainly melted down, and at any rate was in unoccupied territory.

Lord Runcin's colonial attitude cropped up: "Surely," he said, "these people can get along with the bells they have. We can't afford to be too sentimental, you know, Joppolo. Can't afford to let these people be too happy, you know. Can't afford to let discipline get too loose."

"Lord, I can't see that happiness and discipline don't go together."

"Young man," said His Lordship, taking a sniff for emphasis, "I think I've had a little more experience in these things than you have."

"Every time I've done something for these people," Major Joppolo said, "I've found they did two things for me just out of thanks."

"Well, what do you want me to do about this bell?"

"I just wondered, Lord, if you could suggest a way to get them another bell. Not just any bell, you know, but one that could take the place of the one they lost."

"Every time I need something out of the ordinary," His Lordship said, "I make application to the United States Army. They have the most extraordinary things, you know. They gave me a jeep. They gave me my choice of pipes, good briar, too, went from Scotland to the U.S.A. and all the way back here to Algiers, by way of the U.S. Army. Some one told me about these electrical razors, and they even got me one of those, but I can't use it because of this Italian current, wrong current, you know, not like our current. I suggest you try the U. S. Army, Joppolo."

"I haven't had quite the same kind of luck with the Army, Lord. You got some friend, or something? Who do you ask for all these fancy things they get you?"

"Just write General Wilson, W. B. Wilson, Quartermaster Depot, Algiers. General Wilson told me he'd try to get me anything I wanted. Just use my name, Joppolo, he'll find you a bell. I'm sure of it."

Major Joppolo wrote down General Wilson's name and address. "Thank you, Lord," the Major said. "That sounds like it might work. I sure want to get a bell for this town."

Lord Runcin clapped his snuffbox shut and stood up. "Well, Joppolo, sounds to me as if you were doing a wizard job here. Keep it up. If you have any troubles, just give me a buzz." And His Lordship left, on the verge of a delicious sneeze which he had been saving in his nostrils for ten minutes.

Major Joppolo stared out of the window, and he was wonderfully happy, with the double happiness of accomplishment and praise for it. He was drawn back from his pleasant daze by a torrent of Italian.

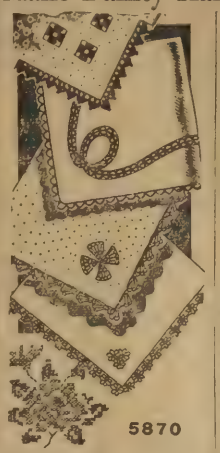
It came from Quattrocchi.

"You Americans think you are so civilized, you think you are doing us a favor by disembarking on our shores. You are no better than the Germans. The Germans never did anything in this town such as your men have done. I gave you my house. I did not mind giving you my house. I thought the Americans were civilized. You are the one who told me they are civilized. You said they would take care of my house as if they owned it. You are a liar."

Having been praised so recently, Major Joppolo was stung by this dispraise.

"What do you want?" he said sharply. "Stop this babbling and tell me what you want."

"I don't want anything. What I have lost I can never get back, so how can I want anything?"



"If you don't want anything, why are you taking up my time?"

Quattrocchi spoke sarcastically: "I'm sorry if your time is so valuable, Your Worship." And then he spoke angrily: "I have lost some things which were valuable to me, too. I went to my house this morning, to get some things I had left behind. And what did I find?

Crude Rope Bridges

Bridges consisting of a single rope are still in use at points along the rivers of western China where only men and horses travel. To get over them, a man hooks his horse to the rope in an underslung harness and, clutching the rope with hands and feet, pulls himself and animal across, a few inches at a time.

Okinawa Losses Heavy

The fighting for Okinawa continues to be severe. Up to May 15th, we had lost 2,771 soldiers, 1,010 Marines and 900 sailors in the Okinawa operation. In addition, 11,675 soldiers, 5,329 Marines and 2,746 sailors were wounded. Among the missing are 129 soldiers, 36 Marines and 1,075 sailors.

Our total casualties run to 36,671. The enemy, according to a Fleet communique, lost 46,656 killed in action and 1,748 prisoners. The total of more than 47,000 compares with our total of a little less than 7,000 killed and missing.

The figures given indicate the bitter resistance faced by our fighting men on Okinawa and emphasize that naval support of land operation is a "costly and serious business." This is plain when we consider that naval casualties amount to 4,721, which tells us without official confirmation that a considerable number of our ships have been damaged by the desperate measures adopted by the enemy.

Churchill Resigns

The resignation of Prime Minister Churchill means that Great Britain will hold its first general election in ten years during the early part of the Summer.

The fight will be between the Conservatives backing Churchill and the Laborites backing their own leaders. The failure of the coalition War Government to agree upon its continuation until the end of the war against Japan makes it necessary for the people of the islands to choose between the parties.

Mr. Churchill naturally moved speedily to secure the advantage that may attach to his war record, still fresh in the memory of his people while denounced by his foes for this or that cause. It is exactly what everybody expected, including the Labor group.

The issues of an American political campaign are hard enough to appraise correctly and it is all but impossible for an American to correctly judge the political situation in Great Britain. Apparently, the Labor party is for greater socialization and a closer rapprochement with Soviet Russia which injects a delicate international situation into the domestic political battle.

Mr. Churchill is criticized for failure to come to an agreement with Premier Stalin, just as some people in this country criticized our leaders for the existence of differences with the Soviet. Obviously, an agreement with Stalin is possible, if it must be had at any price, which is likely to be complete acquiescence in the Russian dictator's program.

It may debatable how far the British desire to go in the matter of concessions to the Russian viewpoint. The campaign may well turn on this grave issue but in the event of a Churchill victory, we should not jump to the conclusion that his Conservative faction does not intend to be conciliatory toward the Soviet because the facts, up to this time, seem to indicate such a program.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Saw "Mitch" Williams the other afternoon strolling around town all dressed up. He was looking for someone who would sell him the courthouse. We offered to sell him the post office instead, but "Mitch" is obstinate. It was the courthouse or nothing — and we don't own the courthouse.

Did you know that Clanton's Annual Horse Show was coming off next month. The date is June 20. Large doings are being planned and according to reports from the committee, this is to be the largest and most interesting Horse Show ever held in Clanton. Make your plans now to attend this affair.

Had you remembered that in the election next year, Chilton County gets to send to Montgomery the next State Senator from this district. If you hadn't, now is a good time to start thinking about who would serve us best in this office. We don't believe anyone has definitely declared himself but there are two or three prominent citizens who only need a little encouragement to come out in the open and announce themselves.

Did you hear about the local henpecked husband that went into the store and asked for a corset for his wife. When the clerk asked him what bust? He replied, "Nothing, it just wore out."

Tried our luck fishing last Thursday afternoon. Guess it was the first trip fishing since the war started. The Ben Studdards, the Davises and We'uns drove over to Nix's Lake and enjoyed a wonderful afternoon. No need saying we didn't catch anything—we never do, but we still had a good time. Dr. Nix has a wonderful place over there to "unlax." You know? We always find it so much fun laying around on the ground eating nice fresh sandwiches we don't have time to do much fishing. And too, rowing a boat comes under the head of work to us. By-the-way, we did run into some more cousins over there, Ben Glass was hard at work at the Maplesville Hardware Company. He's a cousin of ours, and Mrs. Nix was there. We enjoyed a short talk with her. Turned out to be one of the nicest afternoons we have spent in many a day.

Our deepest sympathy goes out to the family of Charles Joseph Bossinger, who died last Wednesday afternoon. We had known Mr. Bossinger for several years and the highest tribute we can pay him is that he was "just an ordinary guy." There was no "put-on" or "sham" in his make-up. He was a regular fellow and one that we enjoyed knowing. Mrs. Bossinger was supervisor of the lunch room at the Grammar School the past year and he had two daughters, Doris and Dorothy, who graduated at Chilton County High School the past week. Many friends grieve at his passing.

What's this about the L. J. Stewarts, who left us only a short while ago for Birmingham, now leaving Birmingham for Dothan, Alabama? We understand that Mr. Stewart is going into the Hotel Business there. One thing we can say—when it comes to buying groceries for the hotel, they'll have a hard time fooling Mr. Stewart. And another thing, Dothan is getting a dog-gone good citizen.

Two mighty good shows are headed for Clanton reports Minnie Wade. Next Sunday "Till We Meet Again," starring Ray Milland and Barbara Britton, is showing and Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday the popular team of Abbott and Costello will be shown in "Lost In A Harem." Both are highly recommended entertainment.

A trip by the Central Alabama Hospital will be well worth the time and trouble it will take to make it. Miss Gardner's hydrangias are blooming and they are a beautiful sight to see.

"DRESSED LIKE THE DEVIL"

A woman who was literally "dressed like the devil" recently picketed a downtown Birmingham whiskey store carrying a sign which read, "I'm well pleased with what you're doing. The Devil."

The woman, who refused to give her name, was garbed in a tight-fitting black costume with a hood that covered her hair. She carried a pitchfork.

"The devil" denied any connection with a dry group. "I'm my own organization," she said.

Perplexed police said the woman was not violating any city law.

Meanwhile, the state-controlled liquor store was doing a booming business. "I wish she'd go away," one clerki said. "We haven't had this Saturday morning business in weeks."

If You Feel That You Were Overlooked

THE amounts of December, 1944, bills for electric service to residential customers of Alabama Power Company were refunded if the bills had already been paid. If they had not been paid, the charges were canceled.

In a few cases, because the bills were averaged every other month under the skip-month plan of meter reading, the refund or credit was possibly too little. If you feel that your December bill was too small and that your refund or credit should have been greater, we will appreciate it if you will bring this to our attention.

Electric Meters Now Read Monthly

A year ago we began "skip-month" meter reading as a war necessity. We stated then that when circumstances permitted we would resume monthly meter reading.

Meters of Alabama Power Company customers are now read monthly and bills are based on actual meter reading except in cases where the meter reader is unable to read the meter due to the absence of the occupant of the premises. In such cases the bill is estimated and is adjusted the following month on the basis of the actual meter reading for the two months.

NEWS FROM—

REFUGE

Mr. A. N. Johnson's son Wilbert is at home from over-seas. He has been in service more than three years. He is here for thirty days or more.

The Rev Paul Oden of Lawley will be here with his stereoptican slides next Sunday night June 3rd. They will be something new and different to any that he has shown here before. You cannot afford to miss this service if it is possible for you to come. Rev. Oden, (The blind preacher) is one of our leading ministers in Chilton County. He always has a burning message. Don't forget! He will be here next Sunday night. Come early for a front seat.

Thomas M. Minor is also at home on furlough from overseas. Both of these soldier boys are looking well and strong. We are glad for them and their loved ones that they are privileged to get back home again.

We would like to emphasize that our annual singing has been changed to the third Sunday in June. We invite one and all to bear the date in mind and come out and bewith us on that day.

The Rev. M. Lockhart is planning on attending a school at Howard College next week. A "refresher course" is being given there Monday through Friday especially for ministers. Brother Lockhart will accompany a group of other ministers from this association. They are looking forward to a great time together.

Beloved Americans you shall ever be!
Welcome Home!

All peoples know that from training camp, land, sea, and sky, you poured forth courage and power in such profusion as to crush the Hun, subdue the Jap, and make Freedom's torch shine the world around.

Grateful hearts rejoice at your returning, though reverently sorrowing for comrades so gloriously fallen.

Now you can resume your peaceful pursuits.

It is hoped that where possible every furloughed employe can come back to work with the great L&N family.

Your purpose will also be ours—to make homes happier, freedom sweeter and our Southland a finer and more prosperous place to live in.

Improvements, largely for war, have cost the L&N about $48,000,000. Its necessary service in war has been amply proven. Its peacetime usefulness is no less essential. Already its current and postwar budget exceeds $16,000,000.

The L&N hopes to add constructively to the South's development and to serve ably. It seeks no special favors and only asks that its public treatment shall be fair and no less considerate than that granted its transportation competitors.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Japanese Mobilize Home Guard; Political Problems Press Allies; Draft Eased for Men Over 30

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Weeks after U. S. conquest of island, isolated Japs continue to hold out in cave positions on Iwo Jima, forcing marines to hole them out in laborious process. Here, one Leatherneck cocks grenade while buddies stand by to cover him.

PACIFIC:
Bolster Home Front

With heavy aerial bombardment heralding the approach of American forces to the Japanese homeland, Nipponese officials took measures to strengthen enemy resistance even as rumors persisted that they were seeking an easy way out of the war now that Germany's defeat released full U. S. military might for the Pacific.

Tearing a page from the Nazis' tattered book, the Japanese government ordered the organization of 20,000,000 students and an agrarian militia into a specially trained home guard reminiscent of Heinrich Himmler's ill-fated "volksturm." At the same time, steps were taken to crush pacifist sentiment and punish persons failing to turn in pamphlets dropped by U. S. bombers.

Japan sought to bolster the home front even as U. S. ground troops pushed the enemy back farther on bloody Okinawa, 325 miles from Tokyo. Progress remained slow and costly as the attackers were forced to move in the open under heavy small arms fire of the enemy to clean them from strong cave positions dug in the hilly terrain. Despite Allied superiority, the Japs continued to send aircraft against U. S. shipping, with some vessels sunk and damaged.

British to Vote Again

At the height of his popularity after the defeat of Germany, Winston Churchill led the Conservative party into Britain's first general election in 10 years following the Labor party's failure to postpone the voting until autumn when enthusiasm cooled and it stood a better chance of winning. Incensed over the scheduling of the elections, the Laborites withdrew from the coalition government, leading to Churchill's resignation as prime minister. However, he agreed to head a temporary regime until the outcome of the next balloting.

DRAFT:
Younger Men to Go

Coupled with the reduction of the size of the army, the services' request for younger men has resulted in the easing of the draft on men in the 30 to 37 years age group, with those engaged in essential activities virtually deferred indefinitely.

With draft calls scheduled to be cut 30,000 a month to 90,000 after July 1, 45 per cent of those to be inducted will be 18-year-olds, 33 per cent 19 to 25, and 22 per cent over 25.

Because of the services' insistence on younger men on the ground that they respond more readily to military training than do those over 30, 4-F's in the 18 to 25 age group will be re-examined in the light of changed conditions since V-E Day and the possibility that some may have improved in health since their rejection. Release of vets and displacement of older persons from other war work also will allow the induction of men in the 26 to 29 class previously deferred because of their engagement in necessary industry.

In considering deferment of men 30 and over, local draft boards were given the liberty to determine the importance of registrants' occupations. Men previously deferred, however, will not be able to switch jobs without their boards' permission.

EUROPE:
Thorny Problems

Diplomatic replaced military problems as Europe returned once more to peace, with ultimate disposition of the Istrian peninsula and major port of Trieste at the head of the Adriatic sea between Italy and Yugoslavia temporarily crowding the troublesome Polish question into the background.

Gen. Alexander Marshal Tito

Coveted and held by Italy because of its commercial importance to central Europe, and claimed by Yugoslavia because of its large Slovene population, Trieste became one of the early trouble spots of post World War II when Marshal Tito moved his Partisans into the territory and British Field Marshal Harold Alexander accused him of trying to back up his demands for it by force.

With Allied troops also moving into the Trieste region to take over the port area to assure shipment of supplies to U. S. and British occupation forces in Austria and southern Germany, and Alexander alerting his men for eventualities, there was an electrical tension to the situation until Tito finally backed down and indicated his willingness to talk the things over.

But if the Trieste incident seemed to come off smoothly, the Polish question continued to stick out like a sore thumb, with Marshal Stalin reiterating that the Moscow-sponsored Warsaw provisional government must remain the core of any reconstituted regime and ex-Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk declaring that a communist dominated administration was unacceptable.

Leader of the Polish Peasant party, and respected by Moscow, Mikolajczyk charged that until Russian troops and secret police were removed from Poland no free and open elections could be held to determine a representative government.

FREIGHT RATES:
Territorial Equality

First major victory in the South and West's fight for equality in freight rates, the Interstate Commerce commission ordered rail charges for manufactured and higher grade goods raised in the East and lowered in the foregoing territories to bring them in balance.

Until a permanent system can be set up, roads were directed to temporarily raise the so-called class rates 10 per cent in the East and scale them down 10 per cent in the South and West. Though Gov. Ellis Arnall (Ga.) said that the South would continue to press for other readjustments, the ICC action placed both the South and West in better position to compete with the East in industrial production.

Confined to manufactured and higher grade goods, the freight rate revisions do not apply to bulk shipments of such commodities as coal, livestock, lumber, grain, cotton and sand. At the present, the South and West enjoy lower rates on these items.

PAPER BALLOONS:
Drop Bombs

As a result of the appearance of balloon borne bombs in the West, the army and navy have undertaken an educational public safety campaign in cooperation with schools and civic organizations in the region to protect civilians against the danger of the explosives.

Although no military threat, some live bombs may have descended to the ground in isolated regions and wooded areas, or lay concealed beneath melting snow, thus necessitating the utmost caution on the part of civilians. In informing the public of the danger, the army and navy said the prevention of mishaps was of greater importance than the mere acknowledgment to the enemy that the bombs had drifted to the U. S. mainland.

Borne by balloons of gray, white or greenish blue paper with a diameter of 33 feet, the bombs are of no military significance because of their scattered and aimless appearance, the army and navy said. Because of their haphazard nature, neither are they to be viewed with alarm by the public, the services added.

HOME FRONT:
Reconversion Groundwork

Until supplies of steel, copper and aluminum and other material are established in midsummer, the War Production board has been setting up the machinery for more civilian goods output so that manufacturers will have a clear field when they get the "go" sign.

In preparing the ground for the resumption of civilian goods output, the WPB announced plans for production of 200,000 cars by the end of 1945; 530,000 refrigerators; 700,000 washing machines and numerous common utility items.

At the same time, WPB removed the quota limitations from the output of farm machinery and parts, with all manufacturers with over a $500,000 volume of business in 1941 compelled to submit their production schedules for approval, however. In revealing that output will be limited solely by material and manpower available, WPB announced restrictions had been taken off a large list of rubber-tired equipment including wheel-type tractors, combines, hay balers, corn pickers, beet, cotton and vegetable thinners, mowers, threshers and corn huskers.

Though 1945 output of 200,000 new automobiles is expected to rise to a rate of 2,000,000 annually by 1946, little of the early production will be available to other than essential users, what with the present stockpile of cars down to 8,000. Although none of the new models will be radically changed from 1942, they will sport new fender arrangements and ornamental trim and incorporate improvements in carburetion, braking, distributors, oil filters and water cooling.

As in the case of automobiles, most of the early refrigerator production will be set aside for such essential users as hospitals and blood banks, it was said. In line with its anti-inflation program, OPA will strive to keep prices at the 1942 level, plus allowances needed for covering higher material and wage costs incurred since.

With postwar demand for washing machines set at 5,800,000, plans for production of 700,000 units this year will represent a drop in the bucket. Should manufacturers be able to get additional materials, motors and parts without priority help, however, production may be expanded beyond the 700,000 level.

Of equal importance to homemakers is WPB's removal of restraints on production of electric floor and table lamps, ironers and driers, coat hangers, bathtubs, mop wringers and pie plates among numerous other commonplace utility items.

HARD COAL:
New Pact

Operation of hard coal mines virtually returned to normal as the War Labor board considered a new anthracite contract awarding workers underground travel pay and shift differentials for the first time in the industry.

Concluded by United Mine Worker Chieftain John L. Lewis and operating companies as the government took over hard coal mines after a three-week walkout, the new contract granted employees $1.13 for 45 minutes of underground travel time. Workers on the second shift would receive 4 cents an hour more and those on the third 6 cents.

Other features of the new contract call for an increase in vacation allowance from $50 to $75 and overtime rates beyond 7 hours a day and 35 hours a week. Like the soft coal contract recently okayed by the WLB, the hard coal pact is dependent upon government approval and increase in price to cover added costs.

WORKERS' BENEFITS

Revising unemployment compensation laws to increase weekly benefits and lengthen their duration, a score of states have acted so far this year to insure an adequate standard of living for workers and their families through a reasonable period of reconversion, and to minimize deflationary effects of unemployment.

Minimum benefits in most of the states were increased along with maximums, with the range between the two about $10 in most states.

FARE ENOUGH FOR EVERYBODY, SAYS USDA

The over-all food supply for civilians in 1945 will be from 5 to 7 per cent smaller per person than last year's record consumption — but about 2 to 4 per cent above the average level in 1935-39, the department of agriculture reported, with most foods in good supply, only meat will be relatively short. Difficulties of distributing the smaller supplies of some foods among civilians will be increased.

The reduction in over-all civilian food supplies from last year comes principally in the supplies of pork, lard, butter, other fats and oils, sugar, and canned fish. Smaller supplies of these foods greatly increase the problems involved in their distribution throughout the country. Larger noncivilian requirements than in 1944 are in prospect this year for canned fruits and vegetables, evaporated milk, and chicken, so supplies may be shorter.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The American vocabulary has been enriched by a new word which has burdened the notebooks of war department stenographers in Washington for a long time. When I was in San Francisco I saw its meaning graphically illustrated.

The word is "redeployment." No, I didn't make a typographical error. Reemployment we have heard about before. ReDeployment is different. And in that word, as in Hauptmann's "tear," can sparkle "all the joy and all the sorrow of the world."

This new word isn't in any dictionary. And in all the echoing acres of the Pentagon I could find no official definition of it but in its current application it simply means shifting a lot of American boys out of the European theater of war where the curtain has gone down. That process is causing many a headache in the Pentagon. It will cause many a heartache at home and abroad. It will cause some happiness, too.

For the boys and the families of the soldiers and sailors who are cast for the second act in the tragedy of World War II (and that is most of them) redeployment means heartaches. For the others it means happiness. But whether they go back to Main street and take up the plowshare or the pen, the hammer or the school book, or whether they go on to fresh battlefields, it is a headache as well as a heartache for the high command.

Heartache, Headache For Officers

Before writing this article I had a long conversation with one of the highest of the high command and I can tell you redeployment is both headache and heartache for him. He and all his officer comrades who have sons and grandsons of their own fighting at the front want them back as much as any rear rank private's mother, dad, sweetheart or wife, wants him.

But few outside those more or less intimately concerned realize the mechanical implications of managing this major migration of history in the moving of more than three million men.

Have you any idea how long the mere physical process of simply loading soldiers, one after another, on ships and sending them back to America would take?

I do not have official figures although they should be released shortly, but I have an estimate on good authority, of the time which would be required to transfer three million men now in Europe across the Atlantic to east coast ports. Assuming that the transport facilities available were devoted exclusively to this mission, perhaps three hundred thousand men a month could be carried home. That would mean that 10 months would be required to transfer them all. And, of course, that is a fantastic supposition, since ships as well as men, are needed in the Pacific and so are ships to carry the endless supplies which the army of the Pacific will require to carry on all-out warfare.

Redeployment, materially and morally, is a tremendous task and, as a result of personal conversations with the top men upon whom its twin burdens rest, I can assure you that the question of morale is, if anything, the greater of the two in their consideration.

There is no question that the suffering and the repercussions of the lengthy separation of young men from their normal life will become greater, now that V-E Day has come and gone. The army high command knows this and that is why so much time has been spent on taking every possible step to minimize the suffering which this slash that cuts across the heartstrings of America's social life, will cause.

I happen to know that busy with the terrific burden of bringing Europe's war to a successful termination and beginning the final portion of chapter two, General Marshall himself for many long months has spent hour after hour of his crowded days and interrupted nights working on this problem.

Everybody Must Play the Game

There are some phases of this shift of our main war effort from one side of the world to the other which many do not realize but for which they must be prepared. In the first place, it will be no easy task for those who have fought the good fight in Europe to be transferred to the Pacific without a chance of furlough in between. Some will have that privilege but not all. And even for the lucky ones the second parting will be hard unless the families play the game.

There is another group who will see America's shore but will not be allowed even to touch American soil. They are the ones who will pass through the Panama canal on a nonstop trip to points in the East. That will be a tough experience—to see Old Glory waving from flagstaffs in the Canal Zone and to watch its colors fade in the distance. It simply cannot be helped.

But perhaps, temporarily at least, the hardest test of patience and self-discipline will fall upon those who know that they are to be discharged, but who, because war takes the priority and the fighters must go first, can only sit and wait in Europe.

Aside from the personal anguish which this delay will mean, it is bound to raise a clamor from motives natural enough but nonetheless selfish, of those whose economic situation is suffering from the necessary delay in reinforcing our civilian manpower with the soldiers whose services are no longer needed but who cannot be moved back home immediately.

Before General Gregory, in charge of the great housekeeping department of the army, the quartermaster corps, left for France in anticipation of V-E Day, I had a long talk with this gray-haired, fatherly man who is loved by his comrades with a warmth of affection that outglows the well-earned stars on his shoulder-straps.

When I talked to him about redeployment, although he is responsible for the physical rather than the moral welfare of the soldier, it was of the latter of which he spoke first.

How are the folks at home going to take it? That was the question on his tongue, just as it had been in the minds of the high officers and officials with whom I had talked before.

I learned a lot from General Gregory and his aides about the tremendous industrial effort which it takes to produce what the army wears and eats and with which it is shaved and laved and sheltered. As long as there is a man in uniform he must be fed and clothed and furnished supplies from helmets and raincoats to socks and shorts to say nothing of a thousand odds and ends including writing paper, soap (they have a kind that will serve to wash clothes as well as bodies, and shave with too, and lather in salt water), tobacco, bug-powder, cigarettes, bandages, shoelaces, razor blades, matches . . . ad infinitum.

Thousands of men clad in woolens required by European weather will have to be supplied with cotton for the tropics. Thousands moving from the tropics toward the more northerly latitudes of the Japanese islands and China must have woolens to replace their cottons.

Meanwhile, they will have to continue to wear and to wear out what they now have on.

Another factor is the length of the Pacific "pipe-lines"—the great distances from base to front. The "turn-around" time of the voyage of ships is longer than the voyage to Europe and there must be enough supplies at hand for the troops to cover the period between each delivery.

All this will require continued manufacture by private industry for military use for a long time which means that much longer to wait for final conversion to civilian production.

This is why this new word "redeployment" is not a happy one and why it holds within it so many headaches and so many heartaches which will try the coolest heads and strain the stoutest hearts.

Kidneys Must Work Well-
For You To Feel Well
24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.
If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, acid, poisons and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.
Why not try Doan's Pills! You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

An Airport for Every Town Will Be Possible if Plan Before Congress, Granting Federal Aid, Is Passed

U. S. Funds Would Match Community's, Dollar for Dollar, in Building

By Walter A. Shead
WNU Staff Correspondent.

Taking a page from the book of the public roads administration, the civil aeronautics administration is asking congress for an appropriation to provide for a billion-dollar postwar airport construction program to be allocated the states as federal grants on a fifty-fifty cost basis.

In asking for this federal aid or subsidy for the development of air transportation the CAA is not without precedent. Declaring that we are entering "an air age of transportation vital to the unified growth of the nation's commerce," it points out that the government has always aided all forms of transportation in their early stages.

CAA estimated that it will cost approximately $1,250,000,000, spread over 5 to 10 years to carry through a national airport program adequate to the nation's aviation needs, including purchase of land and construction of terminal buildings.

A detailed survey of the nation's airport facilities by CAA indicates that for this billion and a quarter dollar cost, 1,625 of the country's existing 3,255 airfields can be improved, and 3,050 new airports can be constructed for a total of 6,305 airports.

Five Classes of Fields.

For the basis of allocating funds to the several states, the CAA has made a study of community needs and set up five classifications for airports necessary for communities on the basis of population and need.

These five classifications are: Class 1—suitable for private owner small type aircraft with two L-shaped airstrips 1,800 to 2,700 feet long, 300 feet wide. Class 2—for larger type private owner aircraft and smaller transport planes for local and feeder service, with A-shaped airstrips 2,700 to 3,700 feet long and 500 feet wide. Class 3—to accommodate present day twin-engine transport aircraft with several landing strips 3,700 to 4,700 feet long and 500 feet wide. Classes 4 and 5—to serve the largest aircraft now in use and those planned for the immediate future, with multiple landing strips 4,700 to 5,700 feet long and 500 feet wide.

The proposed national plan of the CAA would provide for improvement of existing airports as follows: 303 class 1; 690 class 2; 349 class 3; 213 class 4, and 61 class 5. In addition, construction of new airports is provided as follows: 2,597 of class 1; 1,101 of class 2; 101 class 3; 520 class 4, and 336 class 5.

According to this CAA survey of the 15,000 towns of under 5,000 population, only 1,500 now have airports, of which 313 are not now usable. The proposed program would improve existing ports and build 3,744 new airports in these towns for a total of 4,008.

In setting up the total cost of these proposed airports, CAA did not include cost of land or buildings. It does include, however, preparation of the land such as clearing, grubbing, excavation and grading, drainage, surface conditioning and fencing, paving of runways, taxiways and aprons, installation of all lighting including beacons, obstruction, runway and taxiway flood or contact lights; radio facilities and miscellaneous, such as approach clearing, access roads, marking and landscaping.

Small Ports Get 60 Per Cent.

Approximately 58 per cent of the total appropriation would be spent for new airport facilities, with 42 per cent for improvement of existing airports. Funds for class 1 and 2 airports comprise 60.6 per cent of the total proposed appropriation, or approximately $155,650,623 for class 1 airports and $463,443,567 for the class 2 ports.

The legislation now before congress for approval would provide that the state designate a single agency through which the CAA could negotiate, contract for construction, etc., and all construction would be in charge of local sponsors on plans and specifications reviewed and approved by CAA.

The Class 1 airport, known popularly as an "airpark," is designed for small private owner type planes up to 4,000 pounds gross weight. Fields of this class are designed to serve small communities, and as auxiliary airports in larger metropolitan areas. There are no paved runways, but landing strips with clear approaches must measure 1,800 to 2,700 feet long and 300 feet wide. Recreational facilities, such as parks, tennis courts and golf courses will surround the airpark in many cases.

The plan would work in much the same manner as highway construction for secondary and feeder roads. Local communities would make arrangements with the designated state agency to take advantage of the federal grant and with the CAA dealing with the state agency.

Subject to revision the proposed plans call for the following total construction costs for new and improved airports: Alabama, $12,185,000; Arizona, $10,935,140; Arkansas, $35,109,634; California, $56,912,500; Colorado, $12,178,000; Connecticut, $16,350,000; Delaware, $2,684,000; Florida, $23,734,630; Georgia, $9,310,000; Idaho, $9,085,300; Illinois, $40,076,000; Indiana, $16,032,000; Iowa, $9,951,500; Kansas, $7,732,000; Kentucky, $7,865,000; Louisiana, $40,617,890; Maine, $19,565,000; Maryland, $14,065,000; Massachusetts, $29,931,000; Michigan, $22,813,000; Minnesota, $11,736,000; Mississippi, $10,740,000; Missouri, $18,923,000; Montana, $10,473,100.

Nebraska, $7,824,000; Nevada, $4,752,100; New Hampshire, $14,934,000; New Jersey, $31,968,780; New Mexico, $33,016,594; New York, $58,590,895; North Carolina, $19,776,000; North Dakota, $3,842,000; Ohio, $31,161,000; Oklahoma, $37,300,440; Oregon, $6,579,000; Pennsylvania, $46,667,000; Rhode Island, $6,069,000; South Carolina, $12,837,000; South Dakota, $4,730,500; Tennessee, $13,142,000; Texas, $120,923,152; Utah, $12,120,790; Vermont, $12,867,000; Virginia, $23,239,000; Washington, $20,158,000; West Virginia, $28,649,000; Wisconsin, $17,944,000; Wyoming, $3,472,000; total $1,021,567,945.

Surveys May Start Soon.

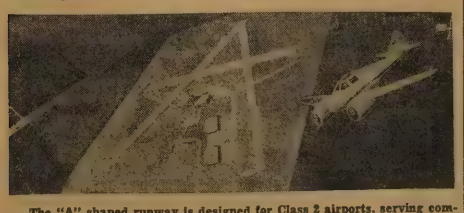
The civil aeronautics administration in the department of commerce will furnish detailed information to any of the 6,305 cities and towns selected to become a part of this national airport network.

Of the total appropriation, the CAA is asking congress for a $3,000,000 appropriation to be immediately available for detailed plans and surveys. According to estimates of the CAA and private aeronautic agencies, such as the aeronautical chamber of commerce, 65 per cent of the people will fly airplanes or the air lines after the war.

It is pointed out that even those who do not fly will utilize airport facilities as patrons of air mail, air freight and air express. Ton miles of mail flown in the last four years has increased from 10,000,000 in 1940 to 54,000,000 in 1944.

Up to 1942 approximately 4,000,000 passengers a year rode the air lines. Predictions are that this air travel will see a 10-fold jump during the first postwar decade. In addition there will be private pilots, owners and renters of planes drawn from such sources as the 350,000 army and navy pilots, the present 150,000 civilian pilots and students, the 250,000 students taking aeronautical courses in the high schools each year, the 2,250,000 men trained by the armed forces in aviation skills other than piloting, and the almost equal number employed in aviation factories.

At the present time there are five federal aid airport bills pending in congress, three in the house of representatives and two in the senate. The senate measures, however, are identical with the house bills, since all measures carrying an appropriation must originate in the house.



In support of this federal-aid airport legislation, Secretary of Commerce Henry Wallace testified recently before the aviation sub-committee asserting that action taken on the measures proposed would determine the progress of airport development in the country for the next quarter of a century.

Would Provide Employment.

"I believe," Mr. Wallace said, "that civil aviation will be a most important factor in the post-war drive for economic expansion and full employment. Our $19,000,000,000 aircraft manufacturing industry employing 1,700,000 workers must, like all munitions industries, undergo very drastic deflation."

While in the past a considerable portion of aviation activity has been confined to the larger cities and towns, the proposals of the CAA are designed to take aviation to the country and the small rural communities throughout the nation. If these communities take advantage of the federal grants in aid, once they are authorized, it will bring aviation direct to the farmer at least insofar as he wishes to use air transport in the shipment of farm commodities and the use of air transport and travel in his business of operating a farm. Merchants in the small communities, too, will be placed on a par with his city brethren in the receipt and shipment of freight and express, once aviation service has been brought to the small towns, as is proposed under this national network plan.

It, however, is up to the local communities included in the proposed plan to take up the cudgel for local sponsorship and local expenditure of 50 per cent of the funds necessary to comply with CAA plans and specifications. Then it apparently is up to these local sponsors to contact their state agency designated as the proper source for collaboration with the federal agency in order to obtain the grant-in-aid as authorized by congress.

The "A" shaped runway is designed for Class 2 airports, serving communities of 5,000 to 25,000 population. It will accommodate planes weighing between 4,000 and 15,000 pounds.

Motor Bus Lines Plan 'Air Bus' Service to Reach Small Communities

It is estimated that, even with many small airports throughout the country, some 50,000,000 people will not have direct air transportation. To take care of these folks, several motor bus companies hope to operate large helicopters, which can take off and land in small areas. These helicopters, or "air busses" would be used for journeys up to 250 miles. For greater distances, connections with air lines would be made.

From a commercial standpoint, it would be possible to give service to many small communities that can not afford to maintain airports. The helicopters would make stops every 25 to 90 miles, depending on the distribution of population. Since trips between 50 and 250 miles account for 25 per cent of all travel, the helicopter service would be a popular form of transportation, it is thought.

The air busses would travel about 90 miles per hour, in contrast to the 250 or more miles per hour of commercial air liners, but, since time lost going to and from distant airports would be eliminated, total travel time would not be much greater in the helicopters, at least for short trips. Most of the shorter journeys were made by private passenger autos before the war, at average speeds of 50 miles per hour. The air busses can obviously cut this time almost in half

LISTENERS to a recent "Johnny Presents" broadcast never even suspected that in the studio the sort of thing was happening that speeds radio performers and producers toward nervous breakdowns. Ginny Simms was singing when a man walked up on the stage and headed toward her. Since, when a big show like that one is produced, there are so many people on stage, no one realized just at first that the man didn't belong there. Then Ken Roberts, the announcer, spotted him. Just before the man reached Ginny, Roberts reached him; he took the stranger by the arm and led him off stage, whispering in his ear very confidentially all the while. All of one day Hollywood was filled with rumors that RKO and Paramount had merged—a big gate was opened between the two studios, and that was enough for the gossips. Church Accommodates but Three People at One Time

Of the many little houses of worship scattered about the United States, probably the smallest is the stone structure located at Covington, Ky., and known as Monte Cassino. About 6 feet wide and 8 feet deep, it can accommodate 3 persons at a time. Within are several kneeling benches and an altar.

On land adjoining his home at Sparta, Wis., Paul Wegner built a small church of stone and steel so that persons of any faith would have an opportunity to worship any time. It seats 12 persons. An 8 by 14 foot church at Woodbridge, N. J., was built to accommodate 18 persons.

At Festina, Iowa, a Catholic church seating eight persons is the scene of services held once yearly. It was built years ago by a veteran of French wars who voyaged to the United States and settled in Iowa.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of expressing our sincere thanks and appreciation to the many friends who helped us and showed their kindness during the death of our mother, Mrs. Balzora Payton. Especially do we thank the Undertaker, Mr. Bob White and the Rev. W. W. Robinson for their kindness and consoling words.

May God bless each and every one of you is our prayer.—The Family.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion,* thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

Legion Organizes Baseball Club For Junior Boys

The Chilton County Post No. 6 of the American Legion has completed organization of a baseball league, with the other American Legion Posts, shown in schedule of games to be played below.

The City of Clanton has provided and prepared a place for the games to be played, just north of the City water works plant, in Clanton, on Highway 31. The Clanton Motors, Inc., has very generously purchased the 15 uniforms, including caps and socks. Other expenses will be met by sales of the season tickets. (Admitting holder to any American Legion game in Alabama except "Play-off game") at $3.00. No charge for persons under eighteen years of age to see any American Legion game.

Mr. S. E. Waters is coach of the team and when playing here or away, all boys on the team will be under his supervision. Players to be eligible must not have reached their 17th birthday prior to January 1, 1945. Any boy within that age in Chilton County wishing to play baseball, should contact Mr. Waters at once.

Clanton team schedule as follows:

Friday, June 8 — Montevallo at Montevallo.

Wednesday, June 13—Columbiana at Clanton.

Friday, June 15 — Post No. 63 at Sylacauga.

Wednesday, June 20 — Post No. 45 at Clanton.

Friday, June 22—Siluria at Siluria.

Wednesday, June 27—Montevallo at Clanton.

Friday, June 29—Columbiana at Columbiana.

Wednesday, July 4—Post No. 63 at Clanton.

Friday, July 6—Post No. 45 at Sylacauga.

Wednesday, July 11—Siluria at Clanton.

Midnight Fire At Stapp's Dairy Causes Heavy Damage

Loss estimated at $8,000.00 was suffered Tuesday night about mid-night at the Stapp Dairy, when his huge barn burned to the ground.

A dozen head of mules and horses, several pure-bred calves and possibly other animals were lost in the blaze. Starting just before mid-night and spreading fast the whole barn was an inferno, with no possible chance to save the doomed stock.

The local Fire Department, headed by Chief Gene Goré, answered the call and worked hard to control the blaze but it had gotten too much headway.

Mr. C. E. Stapp owner of the Dairy stated Wednesday morning that it was a complete loss and only partly covered by insurance.

Tire Situation Still Critical Says OPA Director

Dr. Albert H. Collins, OPA District Director in Montgomery announced that the June quota of tires may raise false hopes because the tire situation is still critical and the allocation is not sufficient for current needs.

A heavy backlog of pending applications at the end of May, low inventories, and a seasonal increase in tire casualties due to hot weather, combine to make the new quota inadequate for the actual needs of all motorists now eligible for new tires, he explained.

"Recent reports of increased tire production have been construed in many quarters as meaning that an ample supply of tires is now available; or will be soon," he commented. "Unfortunately this is not true. The national quota for June, when tire failures greatly increase due to hot weather, is the same as the allotment for last December and will only partially meet the heavy demand," the director said.

He urged motorists to conserve tires through proper care, to maintain proper air pressure, avoid speeding, check for proper wheel alignment frequently and have worn tires recapped as soon as they need it.

Tire Dealers Deadline Dates

OPA reminded tire dealers in south Alabama of three important dates. Every tire dealer is required to begin keeping records of all transactions in Class 1 on the first of June. On June 30, he must make a complete inventory of tires on hand and of replacement certificates.

Between July 1st and 10th he must register with the OPA inventory branch in New York, on dealers inventory registration form which he will receive through the mail or obtain from his OPA district office or the War Price and Rationing Board.

Unless the requirements are complied with the dealer may not continue to receive or sell tires after July 10.

Observe Speed Regulations

OPA urged motorists to observe the 35-mile per hour speed regualtion to lengthen the life of their tires. We all know that tires wear out much faster above that speed, and the shortage demands that we take every possible care of our tires.

Referring to the recent increase in gasoline rations it was pointed out that the temptation to speed up on the roads might easily prove to be a boomerang.

The motorists might find himself with increased gasoline rations and no tires for his car.

15-Year Olds Eligible For Drivers License

Fifteen year olds can now apply for license to drive an automobile in Alabama by authority of the State Drivers License Division and H. H. Glenn Drivers License Examiner Chilton County.

license age from 16 to 15 years has

PILOT CLUB MET WITH MRS. LILLIAN SIMPSON

The Pilot Club met with Mrs. Lillian Simpson on May 29th, for their program meeting. A very appropriate initiation for two new members was conducted by Mattie Jo Barber. It was decided that the Club bring to the attention of the citizens of Clanton the observance of Flag Week, commencing June 11th, 1945

The meeting was attended by a large percentage of the members.

The next meeting will be with Mattie Jo Barber.

Plans Made For New Library Building At Thorsby

The Civic Club of Thorsby started a movement last night to raise funds for a new library building. Miss Jenkins, Principal of Thorsby Institute, announced that the library will be open for the public this Summer. The new building will be large enough to accommodate students and citizens of the community. Use of the library by the public will be encouraged by various methods.

The Civic Club of a hundred members sponsors the Boy Scouts, town band and many projects for the improvement of the community. Last night the club planned for improvement of the park, recommended safety devices for the main highway street, discussed new locations for the post office and the need for a basket factory.

UNITED CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH NOTES

"The Ways of War and Peace" will be considered in the morning worship service, beginning at eleven o'clock. Every professing Christian should have well established, christian viewpoints on the issues of the United Nations, and on specific propositions such as compulsory military training in the U. S. which is now being presented in open hearings before a congressional committee in Washington.

Sunday night at 7:30 the motion picture will be shown, entitled, "Here Is Tomorrow." In this picture we will see how thousands of American farmers are conducting their business on christian principles.

INDIANS CAN HAVE INDIA, HEISLER WANTS CLANTON

Corp. Morris J. Heisler, son of Mrs. W. E. Heisler, Clanton, is now stationed somewhere in India. He was stationed at Marianna, Fla., before going overseas. While training as an airplane mechanic at Marianna he received the Good Conduct Ribbon, the Airplane Mech. Medal and the Marksmanship MORRIS HEISLER Medal

Corp Heisler writes that he is looking forward to the day when he can step on the soil of the good old U.S.A. Should his friends care to write him his address is: Corp. Morris J. Heisler 34263933, Area B. 1346-A. A. F., ICD-A. T. C. — APO-433, care postmaster, New York, N. Y. (Montg. Advertiser)

Warren G. Walker, chief gunner's mate, of Stanton, Ala., was among the crew of the battered little destroyer Laffey, which came home under her own power from Okinawa after suffering the worst that 22 Nipponese planes could throw at her. Thirty-one of her crew were killed or missing, sixty more were injured. But her gunners shot down nine of the attacking planes.

Walker will be granted home leave in a short while, which he will spend at Stanton with his parents and friends.

Pfc. Lloyd J. Lawrence of the Infantry returned from 17 months overseas in the European Theatre of operations. He arrived in the states on the U. S. Hospital Ship, Thistle, and is being treated temporarily at [illegible] General Hospital prior to being transferred to another Army Hospital for detinntive treatment. He lives at Route One, Maplesville, Ala. His father, Hugh J. Lawrence, resides at the above address. Lawrence has been awarded the Purple Heart for wounds received in action.

Elizabeth Lawrence, storekeeper, 3rd class, (WR) USNR, is attached to the disbursing office at the Miami, Fla., naval base. She received basic training at Hunter College, Bronx, N. Y., and advanced schooling at Georgia College, Milledgeville, Ga.

She has two brothers also in the Navy. Samuel, a storekeeper second class, and Richard, who is now receiving his "boot" training at Great Lakes. Another brother, Harold, recently returned from overseas and was given an honorable discharge from the army.

Pfc. Ed Mitros from [illegible], visited Miss Alice [illegible] and other friends in Clanton over the week end.

Our family is gradually growing smaller while Uncle Sam's is rapidly increasing. Last week another one of my brothers, Raymond Cox, was inducted into the army. A letter from him this week says that he is now at Camp Shelby, Miss., but only for a little while. Where he will go next is still a military secret, but we are hoping that it isn't too far away. Another brother, T-5 Arthur Cox, Jr., is expected home from the European Area some time in the near future, and I'm sure it can't be too soon for him, 'cause, as he says, "I'm sure anxious to get my hands on that son of mine." The son is little two and one-half year old Arthur Lynn Cox, who is now living with his mother in Leesville, La. His father has been overseas twenty-one months.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Chinese Hit Jap Key Positions; Seek to Expand Social Security; Slash Plane Output 30 Per Cent

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PACIFIC:
Chinese Strike

With the Americans heightening pressure against the Japanese homeland, Chinese troops went over to the attack against enemy positions in China, assaulting coastal garrisons and the long overland corridor leading to Burma, Thailand, Malaya and Indo-China.

The Chinese attacks came in the wake of new Japanese maneuverings on the Chinese mainland, betraying the enemy's continued apprehension over possible Allied thrusts up through Burma and an invasion of the eastern coastal region.

In assaulting the Japs' long overland corridor stretching southward clear from Manchuria, the Chinese not only threatened the enemy's line of communication from Burma, Thailand, Malaya and Indo-China but also promised to choke off any flow of raw material from those naturally rich countries feeding the Nipponese war machine. In addition, the Chinese drove a string of former American air bases, which the Japs had rolled up last year in their effort to smash U. S. attacks.

Meanwhile, Flying Fortresses thundering out by the hundreds continued to raze Japanese industrial centers in the campaign to demolish the enemy's war production, with Tokyo being subjected to the same bombardment that laid Nagoya in waste.

As a result of the B-29 attacks, huge areas of Tokyo lay smouldering, with the imperial palace and government districts and the main business centers heavily hit. While U. S. intelligence officers were careful not to accept the Japs' account of the damage too readily because of the possibility it might have been put out to decrease the future tempo of American assaults, returning Super-Fort fliers said they left huge fires behind them.

Hot-up over the U. S. raids, the Tokyo radio declared that ". . . the enemy's inhuman atrocities had increased the Japanese spirit of hostility and they are firmly determined to fight to the last Japanese. . . ."

SOCIAL SECURITY:
Propose Expansion

Proposing that Uncle Sam provide for greater social security for U. S. citizens, Sen. Robert Wagner (N. Y.) and Rep. John Dingell (Mich.) called for extending coverage of the present act to 15,000,000 farm workers, professional people, small business men and domestics, and broadening benefits.

Under a bill introduced in congress, Wagner and Dingell proposed increasing minimum old age payments from $10 to $20 a month for single persons and up to $30 for a worker with a dependent wife 60 or older. Funds permitting, unemployment compensation would be payable for 52 weeks instead of the present 26, with the weekly scale $5 to $20 for single persons a maximum of $30 for recipients with dependents. Women would receive a 12-week maternity leave with the same scale of benefits.

With all social security registrants forced to subscribe to the health insurance phase of the Wagner-Dingell bill, workers would receive compensation for payless periods of sickness or disability, and be allowed 60 days of hospital care under doctors of their own choosing. In addition, the federal government would participate with states in a long-range program for construction of health centers, hospitals and clinics in rural areas.

To finance the new act, Wagner and Dingell recommended an increase in social security taxes from 1 to 4 per cent each on employees and employers.

SCHOOL LUNCHES

The War Food administration-Community school lunch not only appeases the appetites of hungry youngsters, but does a job of far more lasting results, according to reports from schools on the program.

In Wilmington, Del., a balanced lunch underwritten by WFA has been served daily at the schools since January, 1944, with children in one grade who ate the school lunch regularly gaining an average of six pounds, and those who never ate the lunch gaining only two pounds.

COLLABORATIONISTS:
Stand Trial

In preliminary appearances before their real trials get underway, Marshal Henri Petain of France and Vidkun Quisling of Norway sought to relieve their stigma as Europe's two arch collaborationists by pleading that their actions were prompted by a determination to protect the welfare of their countries as much as they could.

The opening hearings were dramatically flavored with Petain revealing that he would call upon Adm. William D. Leahy, former U. S. envoy to Vichy and now President Truman's chief of staff, to testify that he had actually opposed the Nazis, and Quisling defiantly defending his position.

Writing to Admiral Leahy to testify in his behalf, Petain said: "You who have lived beside me during those months, you who have witnessed my efforts to restore France, you will help me to convince those who are accusing me . . . that I have never had any aim other than to live and protect them against the demands and cruelties of the German-occupying troops. . . ."

In assuming the position that he had striven solely to lighten France's load, Petain vigorously denied membership in the secret society, La Cagoule, working for German interests, and declared that its use of his name was unauthorized.

With no high Allied personality to try to fall back upon, Quisling had to stand on his own. He did, however, claim to have represented Britain in Russia for three years before the war and to have received the thanks of parliament for his efforts.

Declaring that it was necessary for him to explain all of the heretofore hidden international political events leading up to World War II to justify the course he took, Quisling was assured that he would be given such an opportunity when he comes up for real trial August 25. With lower lip curled under his pug nose, the big, bulky collaborationist insisted he had worked with Prime Minister Chamberlain and Hitler in an effort to avert the European conflict.

PLANE PRODUCTION:
Heavy Slash

Emphasizing the streamlining of aviation needs of the Pacific war, airplane production will be cut 30 per cent during the last six months of 1945 and an additional 15 per cent during 1946, the army air forces revealed. According to unofficial estimates, the 30 per cent reduction this year may result in release of about 200,000 workers in a dozen cities.

Because of the long distances involved in the Pacific warfare, longer range bombers, fighters and transport planes will remain in large production, the AAF said. In this category are the B-29 Superfortresses, the P-47 Thunderbolts and P-51 Mustangs and the C-54 transports.

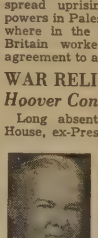
Since less and less American aircraft were lost in Europe as the Luftwaffe was worn steadily down, many planes used in the European war will be available for combat in the Pacific, the AAF revealed.

HOSPITAL CARE

Major nightmare of the average American civilian, the type of misfortune which results in a lengthy hospital session, with its stoppage of earning power and its aftermath of heavy bills, strikes the average American family once every 11 years.

Wives use half again as much hospital care as do their husbands, a survey also showed, and single men 25 per cent more than married men.

NEAR EAST:
Trouble Brews



Long noted for her friendly relations with native populations, France found herself deeply embroiled with Syria and Lebanon at the eastern end of the Mediterranean over the subject of establishing military bases in those countries after granting them independence.

Even as the U. S. and Britain stepped into the picture in an effort to smoothen the difficulties, Syria proceeded with a fevered recruitment program in preparation for a clash with the French, whose nationals hardly dared to appear in public for fear of being robbed. Though the question of bases shaped as the nub of the disagreement, the immediate cause of unrest lay in the arrival of French re-enforcements, presumably bound for the Pacific war. The natives, however, looked upon their presence as a move for exerting pressure for granting France greater concessions.

Because Arab disaffection in Syria and Lebanon could lead to widespread uprisings against western powers in Palestine, Egypt and elsewhere in the east, the U. S. and Britain worked anxiously for an agreement to avert hostilities.

WAR RELIEF:
Hoover Consulted

Long absent from the White House, ex-Pres. Herbert Hoover returned to the executive mansion he had left under a cloud in 1933 for consultation with Pres. Harry S. Truman on the pressing problem of European relief.

Herbert Hoover

Famed for his handling of a similar situation during World War I, Hoover was called in by the President following a V-E Day address proposing UNRRA (United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration) start an immediate stream of food flowing to the continent; establish canteens for undernourished children, and place shipping at the disposal of charitable agencies interested in relief. Hoover also suggested that cost of the program be borne by international contribution.

Charged with the task of saving 700,000 Belgians from starvation in World War I, the relief commission Hoover headed purchased food in the open markets with funds from various governments and private relief agencies and operated 200 ships. To assure prompt and efficient distribution overseas, boats, railroads, flour mills, bakeries and slaughter houses were taken over on the continent.

Get Priorities

In conformance with President Truman's instructions, the War Production board has assigned high priority ratings to critical material needed for the rehabilitation of liberated European countries.

Thus far, $170,000 of pumping equipment and pipe to relieve a serious water shortage in Athens, Greece, has topped the list of items, with $5,000,000 of drainage material for flooded Holland also receiving high ranking.

Besides being allocated 625,000 tons of carbon steel for the first nine months of this year, France also has been authorized to procure 700 locomotives and 10,000 freight cars. Another 180 locomotives have been scheduled for shipment to eastern Europe. In addition to military vehicles, liberated countries also will get 11,000 commercial trucks.

RECIPROCAL TRADE:
Passes House

With President Truman declaring that he would not use his increased authority to endanger any segment of American industry, agriculture or labor, the house passed legislation extending the reciprocal trade act for three years and granting the chief executive power to cut tariffs 50 per cent under existing levels.

Bitterly opposed by the Republican delegation, the bill was approved by a 239 to 153 vote after defeat of a motion to send the measure back to the ways and means committee for deletion of any provisions broadening the President's power over tariffs. In bucking the amended act, GOP members asserted that additional tariff reductions would invite a flow of cheap goods to this country, with the Democrats countering with the argument that the administration program was necessary for postwar economic cooperation.

Under the reciprocal trade act, 32 agreements have been negotiated with 30 countries for mutual tariff reductions, with the terms of the law providing that any such cuts be automatically extended to other friendly countries. Because tariffs may be pared on specific items chiefly produced by individual countries, however, the effects of the automatic extension to other nations have been limited, it was said.

AMPUTATIONS

Amputation cases in army hospitals in this country numbered approximately 11,000 on May 1, the war department announced, with no "basket cases," a term used to describe a person who has completely lost both arms and legs. There are 6 amputees who have lost 3 extremities and there is 1 case, a non-battle casualty, who lost part of four limbs.

Approximately 5 per cent of these amputation cases have lost more than one limb.

Cooperation for Peace Based on Compromise

Nations Must Yield Some Sovereignty to Lend Helping Hand Against Threats to World Security.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

SAN FRANCISCO. — The tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart, still stands Thine ancient sacrifice — an humble and a contrite heart. . . . so said Kipling in describing the end of a war ("far-called our navies melt away.") As I review this chapter of current history here at San Francisco where the world security organization is in the making, I am impressed with one thing: what has already been achieved containing merit and the seeds of hope for a peaceful world has been achieved by the sacrifice offered by the humble and contrite hearts.

That sounds somewhat idealistic perhaps but let me explain.

I think it is not an exaggeration to say that compromise is the keystone of harmony whether it is a question of interpersonal, interparty, interstate or international relations. And what is compromise but sacrifice?

Applied to the United Nations conference on international organization, sacrifice of national aspiration, and compromise which meant yielding actual selfish advantage of the moment in the hope of gaining potential advantage for the general good, have at least given evidence of good will. Good will, implemented by popular endorsement, means practical progress toward peace.

Peace More Natural Than War

You may have read a very trenchant article by Emery Reves, authority and writer on international affairs in the current Mercury magazine, which confutes the argument that since war is a part of human nature, it can never be prevented. Mr. Reves goes about his task of disproving this convent bromide of the pessimist in a highly scientific manner.

"Why," he asks, "did cities once wage war against each other and why do they no longer fight each other with weapons today?

"Why, at certain times did great landowner barons war with each other and why have they ceased the practice?

"Why did the various churches plunge their adherents into armed warfare and why today, are they able to worship side by side without shooting each other? Why did Scotland and England, the author continues, and other parts of what are now single nations, once fight and now live together peacefully?

Reves points out that these and other groups, presumably because it was the nature of the beast to once consider it natural to decide their differences with tooth, claw, powder and shot, or bow and arrow and yet that kind of legal murder no longer exists and would horrify modern man.

This is his answer to these provocative questions:

"Wars between these social units cease to exist the moment sovereign power is transferred to a larger or higher unit."

That is worth pondering.

Yield Sovereignty To Higher Community

The sovereign power of the cities yielded to the power of the nation; England and Scotland yielded their separate sovereignty to the sovereignty of the British crown. This occurred as a part of the due process of civilization which began when the individual cave man agreed to abide by the rules of the tribe, the tribe submitted to the will of the community and so on until the process produced the United States. Here is a vast area occupying a huge sector of a great continent, which, after a bloody war where state rights versus federal authority was the issue, became a unified whole. Hates, rivalries, competition, religious and economic difference continue (as a part of human nature) but internecine strife is unthinkable.

Where's the rub, then? Just, "sovereignty" which is a fighting word, still today. The United States is willing, anxious to participate in the United Nations organization — the people have given that mandate to both parties. But will she yield her sovereignty? If so, how much?

If she will not, it is largely a matter of ignorance as to what that sacrifice involves. And who makes the sacrifice? The people themselves or some abstraction known as the "government?"

At this point let me quote that other student of international relations, who, it is true, does not raise his sight to the point of world federation but who has urged it on a more limited basis.

I refer to Clarence Streit who has long campaigned for a federal union of the north Atlantic democracies. He says that the only loss of sovereignty involved is the subordination of the ruling bodies to the ruling body of the union, that a citizen still has the right of franchise and all the rest of his rights.

Does the citizen of Richmond, Va., who, after the secession of the southern states owed his allegiance to the Confederacy, enjoy any less rights today when the seat of his federal government is the capital of all the United States. Is the Scotsman in Edinburgh deprived of any privileges which he held when he was a subject of chieftain, laird or Scottish king? On the contrary.

U. S. Learns to Give and Take

The American representative who sits in the assembly or is chosen to the council of the proposed United Nations organization is no less the servant of John Q. Citizen of Bingville than the man he elects.

In proportion to their size, there are no less rivalries between San Francisco and Los Angeles than there are between any two nations of the earth. But cities and states of our federal union would no more think of attempting armed warfare with each other than any decent law-abiding citizen would think of shooting up his neighbor to get his radio, his wife or his parking privileges. We are that civilized. We accept the sacrifice of sovereignty of our home state to sovereignty under the United States.

When we advance to the point where we can sacrifice the degree of sovereignty of our nation necessary in order to guarantee world order we will be civilized enough to be sure that our sons won't run the chance of killing and being killed as part of a spectacle of mass murder which even the horrors of this war will pale.

The San Francisco conference can present a blue print of the machinery for peace. Only civilization itself can implement it.

It is easier to understand things we can see and touch than ideas.

Brooks Harding was born in Nebraska and grew up with the normal nationalism of a boy who had never seen a foreign flag flying anywhere. He served in the last war in the artillery, later became interested in aviation. He had a small aircraft factory, and then a small leather factory in New York state.

He watched the League of Nations rise and fall. He saw the United Nations start. He became convinced that unless there was some outward symbol, some outward appeal which would stir the imagination and the emotions of the people, the second attempt at world harmony would fail as did the first.

And so he literally left all he had with the sole purpose of making his contribution in the form of a United Nations' flag.

That flag has not been officially adopted but it flew in Washington and it flew in San Francisco — a plain white field with four vertical red bars symbolizing, he says, victory, equality, unity and freedom. It is sponsored by the United Nations Honor Flag committee supported by such contributions which he could make or which he could solicit in travels about the country.

He hopes for its official sanction. He feels that this banner may some day become the rallying insignia for the people of all peace-loving nations, who without slackening their loyalty to their own country will respect and support the forces for international good will which this emblem represents.

BARBS . . . by Baukhage

There were several noticeable shortages at the United Nations conference: stenographers who could talk Russian, taxis, butter (no end), news, time to get it, a good excuse to stay longer. There were some surplusages: invitations one couldn't accept, comments on the weather, mutton chops, trolley cars on Market street, propagandists parading as newsfolk, talk and work.

At one of the press conferences Secretary Stettinius who prides himself on getting names right addressed Mr. Kaltenborn as Baukhage. I got publicity—Stettinius and Kaltenborn got the red faces.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or frequent urination.

With Food Supply Expected to Be Tighter Than Ever, Women's Land Army Faces Its Greatest Challenge

City Girls and Women Are Urgently Needed for Every Sort of Farm Job

Women have done an outstanding job in this war, and nowhere have their efforts been more important than in helping with the farm harvest.

Until complete victory is won, there must be no letup on the home front. In this critical year of the war, the high rate of food production must be continued. At the same time, the farm labor shortage will be even more serious in many areas.

The answer is for town and city people—especially women and youth—to step into the breach, as they have done for the past three years. Farm people themselves are working harder and longer hours than ever before. But they need extra helpers, especially during the harvest season. That group of women doing emergency wartime farm work comprise the Women's Land army. Their patriotic efforts have saved farm crops in thousands of cases.

The Women's Land army is a movement rather than an organization. It is mainly a seasonal army. In each state, it is under the direction of the state extension service, with headquarters at the state agricultural college. Most states have a Women's Land army supervisor who works closely with the county agricultural agents and their farm labor assistants. In most localities, the county agent administers the emergency farm labor program . . . recruiting and placing workers on farms. Last year, these local placement offices . . . 12,000 over the country . . . placed about 350,000 women in farm work, and about as many other women were recruited directly by farmers or found their own jobs. These women received prevailing farm wages for the amount and type of work done. Besides these a great many farm women worked on their own and neighboring farms.

Her husband is fighting on some Pacific island, and she is doing her bit on the home front by working on a Connecticut dairy farm. Her duties include milking, cleaning the barn, and caring for the calves.

Who Are WLA Workers?

All women who help in the wartime production of food, feed, or fiber are a part of the Women's Land army. Women from farms, cities and towns . . . farm women who work longer hours than ever before . . . women from offices, factories and stores . . . women whose husbands are overseas . . . housewives, college girls and teachers. . . . They are women of all ages who spend all summer, all year, or only a few hours, a week end or a vacation period—helping bring through the farm crops our country must have.

North, south, east and west, women do all kinds of farm work. Singly and in groups, they pick beans, tomatoes and other vegetables. They detassel corn, shock grain, pick potatoes, pick and pack berries, apples, peaches, grapes, other fruits and nuts. They work in cotton, grain, tobacco and flax; drive tractors, farm trucks and combines; milk the cows and care for poultry flocks. In brief, as and where needed, women help plant, cultivate, and harvest the food and fiber crops and care for the livestock—all so necessary in the war effort.

Farm wives and daughters—hundreds of thousands of them—do a magnificent job, helping with haying, milking, feeding livestock. They handle just about every farm task, many of which they have never done before, putting in long hours at the double job of housework and farm work.

Probably the greatest need for seasonal help is in harvesting perishable vegetables and fruits. It is particularly important that all of the tomato crop be brought to market, as this vegetable is a cheap and abundant source of vitamin C.

Typical is one midwestern farm woman who, during corn planting time, drove a tractor from 4 to 8 a. m. each day, and then did the farm chores before starting her regular housework, which she does without benefit of electricity and running water.

Town Women Prove Capable.

Even though town women were at first accepted reluctantly by many farmers, they have now proved themselves in farm work. Their help is especially valuable at harvest time, for crops like apples, peaches and other fruit; for beans, tomatoes, potatoes, peanuts and cotton. Teachers and college girls often spend two or three summer months in farm work. Business women work part of their vacation time, evenings and week ends harvesting tomatoes, beans and carrots, detasseling corn and picking apples, peaches and grapes.

Homemakers also answer the local call for peak-season harvesting. For example, in an Oregon county last year, 500 homemakers helped save the bean crop. Each day they boarded the "Housewives Special"—buses leaving for the field at 8:30 a. m. and returning at 3 p. m. This gave them time to do the family breakfast before leaving and to market for supper in the late afternoon. In Washington, as in other states, women joined groups of "twilight pickers" . . . working evenings in the big berry crop. And in a California county, women working 7 to 11 p. m. as peach cutters to help save 20,000 tons of peaches by drying were known as the "Victory Shift."

Women's underlying motive for doing farm work is, for the most part, patriotism—a deep desire to help . . . to have a part in feeding our soldiers and our allies—and an intense conviction that no food should go to waste. As a 60-year-old woman said, after picking 3 tons of beans, "I'm glad to do it . . . you see, I have a son in the air corps."

Of women who do farm work, by far the greatest number live at home and work by the day, or part-time, on farms nearby.

Spend Vacations on Farms.

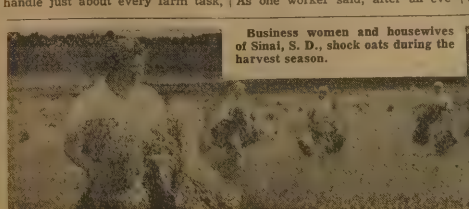
Some women, especially college girls, teachers and business women, spend part of their vacation time in labor supply camps, working on surrounding farms. For one week, two weeks, or the entire summer, they cultivate and pick vegetables or harvest fruit. Many Smith college students, as a part of their college's summer plan of "work or study" formed groups which lived as one household in the farming area where they worked.

Camps for women workers are operated in many states. Last year, New York state's WLA camps included about 3,000 New York City women and girls on their vacation time. Life in camp is not all work. Women find it interesting and broadening, with the companionship of women from many different places. As one worker said, after an evening of recreation in camp, "We're all friends, and that's what we're fighting for, isn't it?"

Even more interesting than picking cherries was the "contact with different people," wrote another camp worker on returning home. Her fellow campers included an Italian teacher, a woman who had fled from Germany, college students, a librarian, a magazine writer, a governess, and a mother of 12 children.

In some cases, women live right on the farm for the summer. They do such work as taking care of the garden, planting, hoeing and harvesting onions, carrots or other vegetables, or helping do a hired man's job. Typical of such workers are a serviceman's wife who has full care of the poultry flock on a large general farm, and a woman who has charge of the milk room on a dairy farm.

Some women serve as "hired hands." They milk, take care of the poultry flock, feed livestock, and work in the field. Of the approximately 9,000 women placed for year-round work in 1944, many of them were wives of men employed on the same farm.



How to Get a Farm Job.

A woman who can work for the entire summer or for several weeks, should consult her county extension agent or local farm employment office immediately. These offices usually are located in the county courthouse or federal (post office) building. If she cannot find this local office, she may write to the Women's Land army supervisor at her state agricultural college, or to Women's Land army, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington 25, D. C.

A woman who can work for only short periods of time should stand by for the call in her community. It will come through her local newspapers and over the radio. She will then be told when and where to apply.

IT SEEMS unfortunate that so lovely a title as "Hold Autumn in Your Hand" had to be changed to "The Southerner," but perhaps that's a better title for this very realistic picture. Directed by Jen Renoir, it is beautifully photographed. Zachary Scott and Betty Field give excellent performances as the young farmer and his wife who are willing to endure terrific difficulties in order to live in the country and work for themselves. In fact, the whole cast is excellent, and of course the direction is superb. At a preview the only complaints were that the picture was too real, so don't see this one if you go to the movies to laugh.

BETTY FIELD

Lola Lane, who's been absent from the screen for several years, returns in one of the top character roles in RKO's "Deadline at Dawn," supporting Bill Williams, Susan Hayward and Paul Lukas. With her Lola won screen fame in the "Four Daughters" series; the others aren't interested in making pictures any more, but she couldn't leave the screen permanently.

Six Hollywood beauties—two redheads, two blondes, two brunettes—representing the Goldwyn Girls from "Wonder Man," the new Danny Kaye picture, are making a 30-day tour of military hospitals in the Eighth Service Command area, in Texas and Arkansas.

Ralph Edwards is well started on another million dollar E bond drive—and what most folks don't know is that he's gone into those drives on his own, not demanding, as many another radio star has, that the treasury department underwrite the drive. If you've listened to Edwards' program recently you know about the young G.I. who'll get a plane if audiences buy enough bonds.

Joan Fontaine was called to the wardrobe department at Paramount to see a new costume; it turned out to be an elderly woman's. Wondering why she ought to be interested, she looked at the model—found it was her mother, who'd secretly got herself a role in "The Lost Week End."

When Andrew Stone produced "The Great Victor Herbert," he gambled on two newcomers to the screen—Mary Martin and Susanna Foster. He gave Diana Lynn her first big chance. Now, in "Bedside Manner," he introduces two new discoveries — Claudia Drake, who made her picture debut when she was one, and has done a few pictures since, and Renee Godfrey, a beautiful model. The picture stars Ruth Hussey and John Carroll.

Dinah Shore and Joan Edwards are all set to embark on concert tours, thanks to their radio popularity. Dinah will have Raymond Scott's orchestra, and cover five cities; Joan, who'll play piano solos as well as sing, visits eight between "Hit Parade" programs.

It'll be difficult for others to top the party given by the "Can You Top This?" stars to welcome members into their One Thousand Club. All listeners whose contributed jokes have hit 1,000 on the laugh meter are eligible for membership, but only members living fairly near New York could be brought to the party. Guests were bidden to a dinner party, and entertained at a vaudeville show, then taken to the broadcast.

Eight-year-old Clare Foley was delighted when she heard she'd play the role of "Janie's" kid sister in "Janie Gets Married," which stars Joan Leslie and Robert Hutton. The reason—the bannister in her house in the picture is swell for sliding-down purposes.

ODDS AND ENDS—Peter Lorre's signed to terrify us in Warners' pictures for another year. . . . Ted de Corsia, "Sgt. Velie" on the Ellery Queen shows, sells the other actors asparagus grown on his farm. . . . Martha Tilton's heard on Milton Berle's "Let Yourself Go" every Wednesday night, and seen wherever "Crime, Inc." is being shown. . . . Frank Sinatra, Mervyn LeRoy and Frank Ross have united to make a featurette-length picture designed to promote religious and racial tolerance; it will include two sings by Sinatra, and be released by RKO. . . . Proceeds will go to a charity active in juvenile work, to be selected by them.

TAR AND SHIRTS

Great industrial plants at Pittsburgh and elsewhere in Pennsylvania produce articles needed by other industries throughout the world. This state also leads the nation in its output of coal, tar, pig iron, sandstone, slate and petroleum. It produces shirts, stockings, felt hats, rayon yarn and lace goods in huge quantities. All this output adds to the financial strength of the nation, which stands solidly behind your War Bonds.

Bonds Over America

CLINTON COURTHOUSE

Justice as administered from the town court up to the Supreme Court of the United States has played a major role in the growth of this Nation. We appreciate our judicial system and buy War Bonds to supply warships, B-29's and tanks to protect it. The old court house at Clinton, La., with "lawyer's row" behind it, is an inspiring monument to justice's handiwork. There were decided the complex wrangles between cotton planters of East Felicians from the days of the Republic of West Florida, 1810, onward. It was the guiding hand for peace and happiness in the parish, worth fighting to preserve and worth buying War Bonds for. U. S. Treasury Department

TIME FOR TYPHOID SHOTS

This time of the year is the usual time that your local Health Department gives certain periods of the week to have typhoid clinics. Last year in our attempt to present this service in the various localities in the County the result on a whole was very disappointing.

Since the universal acceptance of the typhoid shots we have been able to practically eliminate this dread disease and I am of the opinion that if carelessness replaces care in the annual protection against this disease we will again have its presence possibly in any community in the County.

Every Saturday morning this service is offered at our Health Department in Clanton and every Friday afternoon in Maplesville. Any community that has enough interest to guarantee 20 or more people to attend the clinic if they inform us we will be glad to give them a definite schedule for clinics.

With the sincere desire to serve the entire County, I am,

Very truly yours,

STILL TIME TO SET SWEET POTATO PLANTS

It now appears that there will be a real need for all the sweet potatoes Alabama can grow and make ready for the market next Winter, says Lyle Brown, API extension horticulturist in urging farmers to set vine cuttings during June.

The sweet potato is one of the most widely used products in the southern diet. But it isn't always given credit for its true position. It's tops.

"It is 50 percent greater in food value than the Irish potato and has three times the food value of carrots and rutabagas. The Porto Rico variety is extra rich in Vitamin A, and is fair in Vitamins B, C, and G.

The huge plants in Chicago's "Packing Town" every day pour dollars into the national treasury to back your War Bonds. John B. Sherman opened the first centralized stockyards, Bull's Head Yards, in 1848. In 1865 he organized the Union Stockyard and Transit Company. The growth of this business developed rapidly with the development of refrigerator cars and improved organization of the big packing firms. The city's chief industry in the value of its products, it processes annually 12 million animals valued at $250,000,000.

RAILS AND RODS

Very early in the steel industry in this country, mills arose at Joliet, Ill., which produced rods, rails and wire, important to the agricultural West. These items could be efficiently made there because of the city's proximity to soft coal fields. While the great plants near Chicago have since overshadowed the Joliet industry, this steel center stands high as an asset in the might of America, insuring full payment of all War Bonds. *U. S. Florida's great variety of products help to keep the people of this and other nations vigorous. Fifty million boxes of oranges and grapefruit, its best known products, valued at 68 million dollars, come annually from the state's 33,000 groves. More than 500 million dollars is invested in them. This business employs 110,000 men and contributes to the full payment of War Bonds through the resources it adds to the nation.

Kathleen Norris Says:

The Other Woman's Child

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"Austin will gradually be restored to normality if all causes of friction are removed from the domestic scene."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"MY HUSBAND came back from air service in England three months ago," writes Margaret Jones from Canada. "He was four years in active duty and eleven months in a hospital. His injury was cranial, and is entirely cured. When he left, his son by a previous marriage, David, was two years old, and I was expecting my first baby.

"I was my husband's office nurse, at the time of his first wife's death, and we had discovered a deep affection for each other. This was, however, kept completely under control. I am telling you the exact truth when I say that, after the one first talk when we admitted our feelings, not one word or look passed between us that could be criticized. His wife was a delicate and nervous woman, and whether she actually took an overdose of sleeping tablets, or whether a normal dose was too much for a weak heart, never was ascertained. The coroner called it death from accidental causes. A few months later Austin and I were married, little David accepting his new mother very placidly.

"Then Austin went off to war and Deirdre was born—a lovely, sweet-tempered little girl and I lived very quietly during the first war years, I managing to do part-time work, and to clear the mortgage from our little home and Austin's mother living with us and managing house and children. She has now gone to live with a daughter.

Unmanageable David.

"There was the usual rejoicing when Austin returned, and he was fortunately able to assume his old work at an even higher salary, so that we could be quite comfortable if it were not for David, now nearly seven. He is a strange, unmanageable little boy, with something uncanny in his instinct for annoying and outwitting his teachers and myself. I seem to be eternally correcting him, or complaining of him, a position in which I hate to find myself. I've always liked children, and for our two I've always tried to plan intelligently, forgiving much, not hearing impudence, not forcing issues, substituting the pleasant positive for the disagreeable negative when I could.

"Austin criticizes my attitude toward David. Austin has come back in a nervous, irritable mood hard to endure, but it is mostly where David is concerned that the trouble arises. David will not eat his dinner, do his homework, go to bed, take his bath when I ask him to. I try good-natured coaxing, give him five more minutes, remind that he can float his submarine in the bath, cook what he likes. He will never cooperate, and Austin blames me, and sides with the child. To make it worse, my husband reverts to the past, thinks that perhaps Elsie did kill herself, perhaps she discovered the affection between us, perhaps he was the real cause of her death.

"All this has turned our home into a place of discomfort, petty quarrels, carping, nerves. I want to do my duty by all three, but when I see Austin spoiled and good little Deirdre ignored, when I hear nothing but criticism, it is really hard to bear. Austin takes the attitude that a wiser mother would not have these troubles, and perhaps he is right. I want to show him every consideration, but I confess I am a failure, and stumped, and don't know what to do."

This is one of the many postwar cases that demands the ultimate in self-control, patience—and humor. Yes, I mean humor, for Margaret is taking this much too hard. It is impossible to undo in a day or a week, or even a year, the mischief done by war conditions and home compromises.

Let Papa Deal With Son.

Austin will gradually be restored to normality if all causes of friction are removed from the domestic scene, and the easiest and quickest way to remove them is to surrender to his father full responsibility for David. Reduce yourself to an amiable onlooker. If David won't eat and won't go to school, don't even report it to Austin; let your husband see it for himself. Let the child sit up as late as he likes, always being amiable and kind, and wait for the first corrections to come from the man of the house. Let him play hookey until the teacher comes to complain. Ignore his affection of not having any appetite at meals, and reduce your relationship with him to amusing and affectionate companionship.

Several other cases of exactly this type have come to my notice in the past few years; the prevalence of divorce of course has created many of them. In every case which I have known, this aloof, friendly, unconcerned attitude taken by the stepmother happily solved the problem for all concerned. In most cases the right school was found for the difficult child.

"He's your son, Austin. I only want him to love me," is the unanswerable argument.

A STEPMOTHER'S WOES

The second wife's position—almost always delicate, is especially difficult when her war-weary husband comes home to stay. Every returned soldier goes through a period of irritability, fault-finding and restlessness before he settles back into the old ways again.

When there is a child by the first marriage in the situation, the unhappy stepmother has a hard time indeed. Whatever she does is wrong. She is too strict or too lenient, or she feeds the child improperly, or sends him to the wrong school, her neurotic husband complains.

The best way out of this problem, Miss Norris advises, is to let this father take entire charge of his son for a while. He will then find out what a hard job it is to rear a willful little boy. This responsibility will help the veteran to forget himself and to recover his sense of proportion.

"He outwits his teachers and me. . . ."

Europe Needs Our Old Clothes

Millions of people in war-devastated areas are in urgent need not only of food but of clothing. Until factories can be set up in these nations, we in this one country that has not suffered devastation must give of our surplus. Infants' garments, particularly knit goods are urgently needed, as well as serviceable blankets and quilts. It is suggested that pieces of matching cloth and a spool of thread be included with garments whenever possible. Usable remnants are also wanted.

CIO REBUKED AT SAN FRANCISCO CONFAB

WASHINGTON.—Here is the story no one could get at San Francisco—the inside story of why Sidney Hillman, Russian labor, and leftists of British trade unions happened to assemble their new world labor order on Oakland, across the bay, just at the very day of the opening of the world peace conference, and what they were up to.

Sidney Hillman

All inquiries were pushed aside out there with the explanation that this new world labor power, called the World Trade Union Congress, was merely looking for reflected publicity from its proximity to the conference, or something similarly inconsequential.

It is no wonder the story was hidden securely beneath a rubble of confusing explanations because it would have disclosed a coup de conference planned by Mr. Hillman and his Russian associates—a coup which was squelched completely in a secret meeting of the conference steering committee, despite intervention by no less a power than Molotov himself. These are the facts:

The Oakland labor assembly was completely under control of Hillman and the Russians, with the British riding quietly behind them. The head of the Russian labor delegation at Oakland was also an official delegate for Russia in the San Francisco peace meeting and the pipeline between.

PLAN WORKED UPON

Through him the Hillman crowd worked up a program whereby they would all get into the conference and into the permanent peace setup by being established as the group to handle world labor problems.

They succeeded in getting the economic committee of the conference to approve their entry as consultants. The economic committee includes strong representation of smaller nations, particularly Latin America.

A resolution carrying out this purpose was handed by the economic committee to the steering committee which is composed of all nations. After some warm discussion, that guiding committee of the conference decided it would not even go into the matter thoroughly and defeated the resolution.

When Hillman saw this coming he got Molotov to champion his cause, and it was the Russian foreign minister who pressed the matter as far as it went in the steering committee.

By his own adroitness, Hillman thus outslicked himself and disclosed his hand. That Molotov would champion his cause was all-too-obvious evidence to everyone on the inside that their fears and suspicions about Hillman's trade union congress had solid ground—that it was more Russian than worldly.

A few days later the Oakland meeting quietly adjourned without taking any noticeable action and Mr. Hillman went off to southern California for a rest.

The frustration of the coup represented a victory for Bill Green, the AFL president, who has been vigorously fighting Hillman's attempt since the last election to establish with the Communist a world labor front.

WORLD LABOR PLANS

Green demanded in resolutions passed by his executive council (May 8) that world labor be represented in the future world order by the International Labor Office, a successful creature of the old League of Nations.

Shrewdly he did not seek the place for his own AFL world group which is represented by an organization known as the International Federation of Trades Unions.

He did not seek to steal for himself the world authority and power which he would deny to the CIO crowd, but would leave it to an established League of Nations organization. His protection was impregnable.

I hear that even the British have become suspicious of Hillman's effort to align with the Communists in a front which would in some ways be as powerful as the peace setup of the nations and—if Hillman's coup had gone through—able to influence the judgment of nations. The Russian unions are not free trade unions.

I understand that even Sir Walter Citrine, the British ultra-liberal leader, is looking for open doors behind him to escape politely the agreement.

The British trade unions which were unanimously represented in that London gathering have now split, and I do not expect they will go very much further with Hillman and the Russian effort to capture world labor control.

Hillman, by this effort coming atop his domestic electoral activities, has lost much ground in Washington, particularly in congress.

Summer Planning

The sun's in its heaven and there's work in the garden that needs doing.

Or, perhaps it's the wash ready to come down from the line that needs folding and sprinkling. Vines hang heavy with berries crying to be made into jams and jellies. In the midst of all this hum of activity, it's lunch-time.

I know you hardly want to take the time to stop to make it, but the family will be indoors shortly. Something quick and easy to fix, and yet palatable enough to keep them sustained until dinner? That's the order and here's the way to carry it out:

1. Puree vegetables left over from dinner the evening before and store them in the refrigerator. All you need to do is make up a thin cream sauce quickly and add vegetables to it; reheat and serve.

2. Keep a stock of sandwich fillings on hand and let the family "spread" them for themselves during lunch time. It saves you work.

3. Salad ingredients are a "must" for hot weather time. If there is washed lettuce chilled until crisp along with washed tomatoes, cucumber, green onions, radishes, green peppers, and some of the fresh fruits kept on tap, it's easy to toss a salad together in the time you could blink an eyelash. A variety of dressings will keep salads from becoming monotonous.

4. Draw heavily on fresh fruits for desserts. Plan to make ice cream, cake or cookies once a week to have on hand for a quick solution to the dessert problem.

Sandwich Spreads.

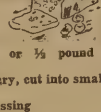
1. Bacon-Cheese Filling
3 ounces cream cheese
¼ cup chopped, cooked bacon
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon horseradish
1 tablespoon milk

Blend all ingredients thoroughly. Store in refrigerator until ready to use.

2. Chopped Meat Spread
1 cup left-over meat, ground or chopped
1 teaspoon mustard
2 hard-cooked eggs, finely chopped
1 tablespoon chopped pickle
Mayonnaise to moisten

Mix all together. Spread on buttered bread when ready to use.

3. Peanut-Butter and Chili Sauce Spread
1 cup peanut butter or peanut crunch
½ cup chili sauce



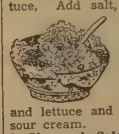
Mix together and use for spreading whole wheat or white bread.

4. Egg and Green Pepper Sandwich Spread
3 hard-cooked eggs, finely chopped
¼ cup pimiento, minced
½ cup green pepper, finely chopped
2 tablespoons chili sauce
Mayonnaise to moisten

Blend all ingredients together. Chill and then spread on bread to suit taste.

5. Savory Ham Filling
1 cup ground leftover ham
2 tablespoons pickle relish
½ teaspoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Mayonnaise to moisten

Mix all ingredients together until well blended. Spread on rye or whole wheat bread.



Salads.

1. *Salmon and Egg Salad (Serves 4)
1½ cups fresh flaked salmon or ½ pound canned salmon
1 small stalk celery, cut into small pieces
½ cup salad dressing
Lettuce
2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
2 large tomatoes, sliced

Break salmon into small pieces. Combine salmon with celery, and salad dressing. Arrange lettuce on platter, then place sliced egg and tomatoes around salmon.

2. Lettuce-Spinach Toss (Serves 6)
1 head lettuce
½ pound fresh spinach, washed carefully
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 green pepper, cut in rings
2 hard-cooked eggs
1 cup sour cream
2 tablespoons vinegar

Chill and chop raw spinach and lettuce. Add salt, pepper, vinegar, green pepper, chopped hard-cooked eggs to one-half the sour cream. Just before serving, fold in the spinach and lettuce and add remainder of sour cream.

3. Ginger ale Salad (Serves 6)
1 package lime-flavored gelatin
1 cup boiling water
Few grains of salt
1 cup ginger ale
½ cup green grapes
¼ cup pineapple
1 head lettuce

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water and salt. Add ginger ale and let cool. When mixture begins to thicken fold in halved, seeded grapes and diced pineapple. Place in mold and chill until firm. Serve on shredded lettuce with mayonnaise or sour cream dressing.

4. Molded Vegetable Salad (Serves 6)
2 cups cooked or canned string beans
3 tablespoons chopped green pepper
3 tablespoons chopped pimiento
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 tablespoon minced onion
¼ cup chopped celery
1 package lemon-flavored gelatin

Prepare gelatin according to directions on package. Add vinegar and minced onion. When cool, add remaining ingredients and allow to chill until firm.

5. Cottage Cheese Salad (Serves 6)
3 cups cottage cheese
1 cup diced pineapple, fresh or canned
5 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon mustard
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Mix all ingredients together in order given. Chill and serve on a bed of greens.

Lynn Says:

Sprightly Summer Ideas: Garden or head lettuce is good for you and good to serve when "wilted." Over freshly washed lettuce, pour bacon fat in which a little chopped onion has been browned. Toss together with oil and chopped hard-cooked egg.

Spinach nests make menus sparkle when served with eggs a-la-king, creamed spinach or shrimp.

Young beet greens take on new flavor when cooked and mixed with grapefruit section just before serving. Melted butter, salt and pepper are all the seasoning you will need.

Sour cream and cottage cheese, mixed thoroughly together are a good duo for sliced cucumbers, tomatoes, celery and green onions.

Green beans, peas and limas profit from a little bacon cooked with them.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Gulf Coast oil-producing companies use a rubber-tired vehicle called a "marsh buggy." It is equipped with tires 120 inches in diameter and with 33½-inch cross-sections. The OPA set price ceilings at $1,073.13 for casings and $328.34 for tubes.

Hawaii is currently producing very small amounts of natural rubber. It is the only tree rubber being grown under the American flag except for experimental plantings in Florida.

Undamaged tire plants in Belgium and France that have fallen into the hands of the Allies are to be put to work retreading truck tires for Army vehicles which would otherwise have to be discarded.

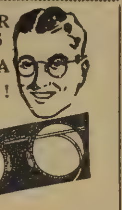
MORAL ECHOES



Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

In the Art Museum in New York, I saw an amateur artist place his easel before a famous painting. He stood there for some time viewing and studying the picture. Then he turned to his canvass and started drawing lines in preparation to reproduce the picture that was before him. His canvass was blank at first, but soon it was covered with lines and paints, and the picture was coming out under the skill of the painters hand. Every morning we should place the picture of Christ before us. We should study Him and worship Him, and then go out to the duties of the day to reproduce Him in what we do and say.

I went into the living room of Dr. George Washington Carver, the great Scientist and painter, and there he explained to me his method of painting the pictures that helped to make him famous. He let me know that he rarely ever used a paint brush, but that he did most of his painting by touching his long, slender fingers to the paint, and then with skill spreading it on the canvass, with his fingers he painted the pictures that made him known to the art world. May I not say to you that we are to paint a picture of our lives by the service that we render. It may be the touch of service, it may be the touch of thought, and then it may be the touch of love. With our hands and personalities we paint our picture of life that will make us known to the world.

The great wall of China was built after the expenditure of much money and labor on the part of the Chinese people. This wall was built to make them safe from their enemies to the North. In a few years after the wall was completed their enemies poured into their country three different times. Brick and morter did not fail, and the gates were not torn from their hinges, but the enemy came marching through. The thing that failed the Chinese was the character of the men who were placed to guard the gates. They accepted bribes and betrayed their own country. The walls did not collapse, but character did. It is not locks and vaults that make our money safe in the banks. but the character. There is no stronger bulwark to stop the march of a foe than character.

100 PACKS OF CIGARETS PER CAPITA

Difficult as it was to get cigarets during the latter part of 1944, Americans managed to smoke an average of nearly 100 packs each last year.

That meant more than 258,000,000,000 cigarettes went up in smoke during the year.

These figures are given in an article in the Encyclopedia Britannica's 1945 Book of the Year.

Although cigaret production dropped slightly last year, consumption was estimated to have increased about 5½ per cent, the article says.

It explains the 1944 cigarette shortage as follows:

"The scarcity of cigarets in domestic markets during the last quarter of 1944 was attributed to higher civilian and military consumption; the building up of stocks for the military forces, which were taking nearly 30 per cent of production; and the lower manufacture due to shortages of labor, machinery and some types of cured leaf."

4-H Feeder Beef Club Holds Banquet

The 4-H Feeder Beef Club banquet, sponsored by the Clanton Chamber of Commerce was held in Clanton, Tuesday, May 22nd. This [illegible] in recognition of the fine w[illegible] Chilton County boys and girl[illegible] their feeder beef projects. N[illegible]ion could have been more [illegible] or more appreciated by the [illegible] girls than this event. Of the [illegible] two beef club members, thirty [illegible] were present. This almost perfect attendance in itself shows the expectations with which they looked forward to the banquet and after it was over every club member felt that the banquet was everything that they anticipated.

The genrosity of ethe Clanton Chamber of Commerce in making this banquet possible was adequately proof that these men have a clearer understanding of the value of training and encouraging the pursuits of more progressive agricultural projects on the part of farm boys and girls.

The principal speaker at the banquet were: Mr. Will Howard Smith, master farmer who has bred more Grand Champions than other Alabama breeders, of Prattville; Mr. John Deramus, Clanton; Mr. G. C. Passmore, Prattville; Mr. Capp Reid, Field Representative of the State Chamber of Commerce, and Miss Ida Mae Wilkins, County 4-H Club Council member of Enterprise. Mr. Bob Oglesby, master of ceremony, introduced the speakers and directed the activities of the evening. Besides the Club boys and girls and out-of-town guests, the banquet guests were comprised of members of the Chamber of Commerce who made this event possible.

Through the courtesy of the Methodist Church, the basement was made available for the banquet. The use of the basement was genuinely appreciated, for without it, there would have been very few accommodations for the occasion. To Miss Mattie Jo Barber and other members of the Pilot Club goes the credit for preparing and serving the food that would have graced any banquet table.

The members of the Chlton County Beef Club have made an envable record at the Birmingham Fat Stock Show and the Clanton Chamber of Commerce has recognized their work in a very complimentary and fitting way in sponsoring the banquet in their honor.

STATE FARMERS URGED HARVEST LEGUME SEED

The War Food Administration has announced a purchase price of 12½ cents per pound for crimson clover seed with 85 per cent germination and 98 per cent purity.

This makes it most desirable for Alabama farmers to harvest every acre possible of crimson clover seed, says J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist, Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Present indications are that there will be a tremendous demand for crimson clover and rye grass seed for planting this fall for winter pastures, he says.

For full information on the harvesting of crimson clover seed and purchase prices, farmers are advised to consult their county agents or county committeemen.

NEWS FROM—

CANE CREEK

The home-coming and singing last Sunday were really good and enjoyed by a large crowd. Some of our old friends and members who have not been able to attend services here in years. We were glad to have them with us, and wish it was possible to have them at all our services. Come again and feel welcome here.

The opening song was sung by Mr. R. E. Jones, prayer by Rev. E. C. Hand. Directors for the morning were: Mr. R. E. Jones, Mr. Floyd Bailey, Mr. W. L. Sanders, Mr Posey Cleckler, Mr A. H. Glasscock and Mr. Lum Scott. Prayer by O. R. Robinson. Message by the pastor. Rev. E. C. Hand. A special song was sung by Mr. A. H. Glasscock, "How Beautiful Heaven Must Be," in honor of Carl Durwood Williamson, one of our members who is reported killed in action.

At the noon hour we spread dinner down close to the spring on a table. We had plenty of food and enough left to feed another such crowd.

The afternoon service was opened with a song by R. E. Jones. Directors were: Mrs. Mildred Martin, Mr. Posey Cleckler; a special song by Misses Frances Collins and Dot Rutherford, with Miss Warrena Willis at the piano. Mr. E. L. Glasscock sung three songs, R. E. Jones, A. H. Glasscock, Ammie Boswell; another special song by Rev. Sanders and family in honor of Carl Durwood Williamson Mr. W. L. Sanders sung three songs.

The afternoon message was brought by Bro. Grady Williams. We were all glad to have him.

Several special songs were sung by the Rev. Sandlin and family or arranged by him. A piano solo by Miss Ammie Sandlin and also a solo sung by Miss Ammie Sandlin. Mrs. Howard Robinson sung two songs, Miss Mary Helen Hilyer, Miss Ruth Boswell and Miss Dot Retherford.

Pianists for the day were: Mrs. E. C. Hand, Mrs. Howard Roper, Misses Ruth Boswell, Warrena Willis, Ammie and Joe Ella Sandlin and Lillie Mae Weldon.

We had visiting singers from a number of different places—Oak Hill, Union Grove, Friendship, Clanton and places we didn't know. We thank each and every one for helping us out in any way. We hope you enjoyed being with us as much as we enjoyed having you. Our home-coming and singing will be held again next year at the same time—June. 1946. We hope to have you all again.

Our hearts were made glad last Thursday when Mr. and Mrs. Lon Robinson received a message from their son, Pvt. Jack Robinson, who had been reported missing in action. He was a prisoner in Germany, captured almost as soon as he reached Germany. He was okeh and expecting to come home soon. His return will surely be welcomed by his loved ones and friends. We have lost one of our boys, but are glad and thankful some can be spared to return to us.

Our Sunday School will be held next Sunday at 10 o'clock; preaching days the first and third Sundays; revival meeting week the first week in August.

Remember the cemetery and come see about your loved ones' graves, or send in money to help take care of the graves to Mr. R. E. Jones, Clanton Route 5, or to Mr. J. Lee Yates at Clanton, Ala.

Visitors are always welcome here Come.

SWEET POTATO CEILING PRICES ARE INCREASED

Ceiling prices for 1945 crop sweet potatoes will be increased 17 cents a bushel, announces the War Food Administration and Office of Price Administration.

This will mean that ceiling prices will average $2.75 per bushel over the season at the Sunset, La., basing point. The season average of the ceiling prices for the 1944 crop was $2.58 per bushel.

Upward adjustments in prices will reflect a new average price of $2.75 per bushel for 1945.

ANNOUNCEMENT! To Farmers Of CHILTON COUNTY

On or about June 1, 1945, the Farmers Marketing & Exchange Association, the farmers' cooperative organization of Alabama, owned and controlled by the farmers themselves with headquarters in Montgomery, will take over the Chilton County Exchange at Clanton and operate it as a branch of the State Organization.

We have leased the building formerly occupied by the Clanton Wholesale Grocery Co., and will have splendid facilities for unloading cars right at our warehouse door. As we do in many counties in Alabama, we will carry in stock at all times, as available under present conditions, a complete stock of those items needed by you in the production and protection of your crops. This line will consist of quality feeds and tested seeds of every kind, insecticides, fertilizers and fertilizer materials, basic slag, pressure cookers, poultry supplies, spay equipment for every need and many other items needed by you.

The purpose and desire of this organization is to serve the farmers of Alabama. We are doing it in about forty other counties in the State and can do it in this section with your cooperation.

We employ the patronage dividend system which is the fundamental principle of cooperative effort. In other words, if the branch shows a net earning for the fiscal year, and they usually do, a dividend will be paid each patron of the store, each patron receiving the same percentage, the difference being in the amount of your patronage. The more you buy, the more is paid back at the end of the fiscal year.

We maintain current prevailing prices. We must be competitive, of course, in quoting prices.

A visit to our store by you and your family, and you are always welcome, will convince you as to just what we are trying to do to serve you. We hope to work out a plan for handling your poultry and eggs. We pay cash and do not take these items in trade, which makes quite a difference.

Mr. Phillip G. Eiland, who is known to all of you, I am sure, will be our local manager and will have associated with him an able staff of assistants to serve you, including a member of the staff of our Cullman Branch, who will remain with Mr. Eiland until such time as he has thoroughly familiarized himself with our type of business.

We extend to you and your family a most cordial invitation to make our place your headquarters when in Clanton.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for June 10

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:14, 15; Luke 4: 16-21; Mark 3:27a, 29, 31.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10:10.

The dawn of a new day had come! The long-promised and expected Messiah came to break the 400 years of silence by His personal presence.

We learn of His coming, His life and ministry, His death and resurrection, and find the promise of His coming again in the four Gospels. They are our complete lesson for this Sunday, but we obviously cannot review them in their entirety in our limited space.

Our Scripture references speak of His ministry in presenting the good news of the gospel to needy mankind.

I. The Good News Preached (Mark 1:14, 15).

Jesus always honored preaching as the primary and the effective means of spreading the good news of the gospel.

The forerunner, John the Baptist, had borne his witness. Jesus had come, had been baptized, and as John was cast into prison, He began to preach, "Repent ye and believe the gospel." The key verse of Mark is 10:45: "For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." The characteristic words are "straightway," "forthwith," and "immediately." The Greek word thus translated appears about forty times in the book.

The Servant of God went quickly about the Father's business. Christians, can we say the same for ourselves?

II. The Good News Practiced (Luke 4:16-21).

The daily ministry of Jesus as He lived here on earth is summarized in the prophecy of His coming which was given by Isaiah the prophet. As we read these words, we realize that we who profess to follow Him need to learn more of His spirit of tender and loving service to others.

It is significant and appropriate that Jesus' declaration of Himself as the fulfillment of Isaiah 61:1, 2 was made in the synagogue on the Sabbath day. He met with the people in the house and at the time set apart for God's worship. He opposed spiritual deadness, the misinterpretation of the truth, the distortion of religious principles; but He was not, as some would have us believe, a religious free lance who despised the established worship of His people.

Having been prepared by the thirty years of privacy, and more particularly by the baptism and the temptation in the wilderness, He appeared at the synagogue in Nazareth to declare Himself as the fulfillment of prophecy.

Those who teach that Jesus was only a young Jewish teacher with a new philosophy of life have evidently not read the Scriptures. He knew Himself to be God's Son come into the world to bring the good news of salvation by His own blood to poor, sin-captive, blinded and bruised humanity. He is the Saviour

Look at Isaiah 61:1, 2 and note that Jesus stopped reading before the end of the sentence. "The day of vengeance of our God" will come when Christ returns. This is the day of grace. Sinners are urged to accept God's love now, and thus to escape the terrible day of judgment which is to come.

III. The Good News Prepared (Mark 3:27a, 29, 31).

Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom. He went about doing good, but always He knew Himself to be the Christ, the One who was to die for the sins of the world and to arise again for the justification of those who put their trust in Him.

Even those who deny to our Christ the recognition of His deity, and the devotion of life which is His just due, must, if they are at all intelligent, admit that no man ever lived who has made such an impact on human history. Even now, unbelieving men speak of Him as the founder of Christianity, a mighty leader, a wonderful example, or an unequalled teacher.

It is not enough that we stand with the mass of humanity who may thus admire Him, but who do not count Him as Saviour and Lord. The question comes to us as it did to the disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" "Thou art the Christ"—this alone suffices as the foundation for Christian testimony and conduct.

Although Jesus was not yet ready to have His Messiahship proclaimed to the public, He was prepared to teach His disciples concerning not only that important truth, but of His rejection and death.

Note the divine "must" (v. 31). While it is true that wicked men showed their hostility toward our God and His Christ by hanging Him on Calvary's cross, yet it was to die for our sins that He came into the world. The cross has rightly come to represent God's love to the world rather than man's hostility to God.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the order, to permit food and water to enter the city. Lord Runcin, high British official on the Amgot, called upon Major Joppolo, and after receiving reports on the work done at Adano, expressed himself as well satisfied with the progress made. The Major was naturally pleased. Lord Runcin told the Major how he might get a bell.

CHAPTER XVI

I found that your barbarians had smashed my terra cotta head, it was done by the Florentine Camilliani in the sixteenth century. What value can you place on that? They tore my Venus; it was by Giorgione. What is the price of that? They smashed the glasses in which my mother drank her bridal toasts in Venice. How many lira do you think they were worth to me?"

Quattrocchi began to cry, and became incoherent.

Major Joppolo was furious. He called up Captain Purvis and said: "Purvis, what's the matter with your men? Did you know they'd been behaving like a bunch of wild men in their billet? This fellow was good enough to let them use his house and some of the stuff in it, why the hell did they have to abuse it? I want you to find out who busted up the stuff down at your billet and have them in your office in fifteen minutes." And he hung up without waiting for the astonished Captain to take a deep breath.

Major Joppolo walked around to the other side of his desk and patted the sobbing Quattrocchi on the shoulder. He said: "Come, Quattrocchi, let's go down to your house and see exactly what they did."

So the two men walked down the street to the beautiful house. Quattrocchi led the Major through the rooms on the second floor and showed him the broken things.

Major Joppolo was terribly depressed by what he saw. "There is no excuse for it," he said softly to Quattrocchi, who was beyond fury.

Major Joppolo took Quattrocchi up to the M.P. headquarters. Captain Purvis had Chuck, Bill and Pollack there. As soon as the Major came in, the three boys stood at attention.

"At ease," Major Joppolo said, "but listen."

The three boys stood at ease.

"You fellows ought to be sent home to the States," he said. "What kind of an example do you think you men are for the people here? How do you think we'll ever persuade them that we're decent people if you behave like we all live in the woods and have shaggy fur?"

Polack said: "We didn't mean no hurt, Major."

The Major said: "Your intentions don't make the slightest bit of difference. It's the result that matters."

Polack said: "We was doin' it for you, Major."

"What do you mean, doing it for me? How could you think I would want you to do anything like that?"

Polack said: "We was lookin' for a present for you, sir." Polack thought that if the Major stacked up to all the boasting Chuck Schultz had done about him the night before, he ought to be able to talk their way out of this fix.

The Major said: "Why would you want to get me a present? I've never seen you before."

Polack said: "We're just enlisted men. We seen you before."

Major Joppolo said: "I still want to know how you thought you were getting me a present, and why you were."

Polack said: "It was goin' to be a goin'-away present."

The Major said: "Who's going away?"

Polack said: "Well, Corporal Schultz here said—"

Chuck Schultz said: "You let me handle this, Polack."

Major Joppolo turned on Corporal Schultz: "Say, what is this all about anyway?"

Chuck Schultz saw that there was no way out. He said: "There wasn't no excuse for what we done, Major. We was very drunk. I think Polack here's still a little drunk."

Polack raised a threatening fist and said: "Why you . . ."

Major Joppolo said: "What's all this about a present?"

Chuck said: "Sir, we just got some kind of a drunk idea that you was about the best officer we ever seen, and we figured we wanted to give you a present. We thought maybe we could find a present for you in the house. We knew you was Italian, more or less, and we thought you'd like something Italian from the house. That's all there was to it."

Major Joppolo said, and his voice was much softer: "I'm not Italian, boys. I'm American, and sometimes I'm not as proud of it as I'd like to be."

Then the Major turned to Quattrocchi, and he said in Italian: "I hardly know what to tell you. I know that no apologies and no payment can ever return what you have lost. I wish to tell you that these men who committed the crime are sorry for what they did, now that they realize how cruel they were to you. I wish to tell you, Quattrocchi, that I feel less proud of being an American than I did yesterday. These men will be punished justly and severely for what they have done. I want you to file a claim for payment for what was destroyed, and I wouldn't blame you for doubling the prices. That's all I can say, Quattrocchi."

Quattrocchi said: "I don't know about most Americans, but I know I can always get justice from you, Mister Major."

The Major said: "Good day, Quattrocchi. From now on your house will be kept nicely, I can promise you that."

Quattrocchi left. The Major turned to the three boys. He said: "I don't know whether you realize yet what you've done to this Italian. It's as if you had cut his arm off. He loved those things you busted up. Now I just told him that you three would be punished severely—as severely as you have hurt him."

The three boys stiffened up a little.

The Major said: "I'm going to make this your punishment: to have this man's unhappiness on your conscience, and from now on to keep his house as clean as if everything in it belonged to your own mother. That's all. You're dismissed."

Chuck said: "Yes sir, thank you, sir."

Polack said: "Thank you, sir."

Bill said: "Thank you, sir. We'll take care of the house."

Polack said: "Yes sir, we sure will."

As soon as they were outside,

Major Jopollo was terribly depressed by what he saw.

Chuck said: "What'd I tell you about that guy?"

Polack said: "That's the best guy I ever seen in this Army."

Bill said: "The thing that got me down was what he said about my mother. Mom was always so proud of her glass. Cut glass it was. I feel like I busted it last night."

Having weathered eighty-two winters, Cacopardo was not the least cooled in his desire to help the Americans by General Marvin's behavior.

Every two or three days he would send a note to Major Joppolo. Many were silly suggestions. Many were about things Major Joppolo had already done. But one day he sent a note which caught Major Joppolo's interest.

The thing which interested Major Joppolo in this note was the fact that old Cacopardo blamed the black market on Fascist graft. Now Major Joppolo was acutely aware of the black market. He had intended for some time to investigate it. Now he did, and what he found was disturbing.

The black market was not the fault of corrupt Fascists. It was not even the fault of the merchants who jacked their prices out of all bounds. It was the fault of the invaders. Demonstrably, it was the fault of the Americans.

There were two reasons why the Americans gave Adano its black market, and the inflation which inevitably went with it. One reason was American generosity. Apparently the Italians thought the Americans were coming to their soil armed mainly with cigarettes and candies, for every grown person asked for cigarettes and every child shouted in the streets for candies. And the Americans gave what was begged. They also gave C Rations, both cans which they had opened and had been unable to finish, and unopened cans. When they bought anything, they figured the price by their heart. And the second thing was that when they bought anything, and could not find an Italian-speaking pal to dicker for them, they just paid what they figured they would have paid in the United States.

Here are four examples that Major Joppolo dug up, which show exactly how the black market and inflation grew up:

He traced the black market in wine to the house of Carmelina, wife of the lazy Fatta. The very first person who bought wine from Carmelina, on the very first night of the invasion, was Corporal Chuck Schultz. Carmelina's story to the Major was that the Corporal had just handed her a dollar and walked away. Schultz's story was that the Italian lady had haggled and shouted and threatened to call the police. In any case, Schultz paid a dollar. The regular price for that grade of wine before the invasion had been twenty lira, or twenty cents.

Four soldiers sauntered into a barber shop one morning, and made motions with their fingers around their skulls that indicated they wanted haircuts. None of them could speak Italian, so they based their payment on what they had last paid for haircuts in the States. Each plunked down a fifty cent piece and said: "Keep the change, Joe." The regular price for haircuts had been three lira, or three cents. Shaves had cost two lira. Here in one morning's work, the barber had made two hundred lira. He retired to a life of leisure, and refused to cut any hair for three weeks, till his money gave out.

To stop, or at least to curb, the black market, Major Joppolo did three things: he put the town out of bounds to American soldiers, who from then on could enter only on business; he had the Carabinieri stop all foodstuffs from leaving the town; and he fined anyone caught selling over-price or under-measure three thousand lira—a lifetime's savings for a poor Italian peasant.

Sergeant Trapani's having addressed the purple slip reporting the countermand order on the carts to the wrong person did not help much. As soon as the wrong person opened up the envelope and read the slip, he forwarded it to the right person.

The right person was Lieut. Col. W. W. Norris, G-One Officer of the 49th Division. The wrong person put the purple slip on his desk. Col. Norris, who was burdened down with much too much paper work, did not even read it all the way through. He just read the first part, about General Marvin's issuing the order that carts should be stopped on the outskirts of Adano.

Then he wrote in pencil on the upper left hand corner of the slip: "Usual copies for Division files. One extra copy to be sent to Colonel Middleton marked 'For General Marvin's Information.'" And then he tossed the slip in his outgoing basket.

A couple of hours later a Technical Sergeant emptied Col. Norris's outgoing basket, and in time got around to making three copies of the purple slip for the files of the 49th Division, where they would be buried, never to be seen again. One copy went under M.P.'s, one copy into the Personnel file, and the third into the Intelligence files under Occupied Territory, Disciplinary Measures. The Technical Sergeant recopied the purple slip, so that he could make a clean top copy for Colonel Middleton and the General. He wanted to get ahead. He didn't want to do anything sloppy. He was so careful in his typing that he didn't even notice what the purple slip said.

The Technical Sergeant put the four copies and the original purple slip into Col. Norris's incoming basket.

It happens that Col. Norris had an assistant, one Lieutenant Butters, who was very inquisitive. He annoyed the Colonel often by reading over his shoulder. He always wanted to know what the Battle Order was the moment it was drawn up, before it even went to regimental commanders.

The only advantage of Lieutenant Butters' curiosity was that he usually read Colonel Norris's mail more carefully than either Colonel Norris or his Technical Sergeant.

The morning after the Technical Sergeant put the purple slip and the four copies into the Colonel's incoming basket, Lieutenant Butters got up bright and early, dressed, shaved out of his helmet, and before breakfast went to Colonel Norris's desk and went through his incoming basket.

When he came to the purple slip and the four copies, he took the papers out of the pile, read until he had finished, put the pile back into the incoming basket, and then tucked the purple slip and the four copies into a portfolio on his own desk.

Later in the day, when the Colonel was out to a conference, Lieutenant Butters took out the purple slip and the four copies. He called the Technical Sergeant over to his desk.

"Did you see these?" the Lieutenant asked.

The Technical Sergeant, who was afraid he had made a mistake in typing, said merely: "Yes, sir."

"Well, that Major was right," the Lieutenant said.

The Technical Sergeant, who hadn't the faintest idea what the purple slip was about, said: "He was?"

Household Hints

Do not use sheets or pillow cases for laundry bags as they are not woven to stand the strain.

The water in which rice is boiled is just right for starching organdy blouses and white shirts.

An electric griddle for pancakes works more efficiently if wiped with olive oil.

When sewing, fasten a small pincushion to your wrist with a piece of elastic. This way as soon as pins are removed they can be put in place. Keep pins handy, too.

Fancy household linens, put away to save time and effort, should be washed and aired occasionally to keep them fresh and white. Ironing is not necessary.

Cover the bottom of your scouring powder can with adhesive tape. Then when can stands in your white enameled sink, it will leave no rust stains.

You Women Who Suffer From HOT FLASHES then CHILLY FEELINGS

If you—like so many women between the ages of 38 and 52—suffer from hot flashes, weak, dizzy, nervous feelings, distress of "irregularities", are blue at times—due to the functional middle age period in a woman's life—try taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. It's the best known medicine you can buy that's made especially for women.

Pinkham's Compound is famous to relieve such distress. Taken regularly—it helps build up resistance against such annoying symptoms. It also is a fine stomachic tonic.

Thousands upon thousands of women—rich and poor alike—have reported benefits. Time and again Lydia Pinkham's Compound has proved some women's happiest days often can be during their "40's". Follow label directions. Worth trying!

If You Suffer 'PERIODIC'
FEMALE PAIN
With Its Weak, Cranky, Nervous Feelings

If at such times you, like so many women and girls suffer from cramps, headaches, backache, distress of "irregularities", periods of the blues — due to functional monthly disturbances—

Start at once—try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. It's famous not only to help relieve monthly pain but also accompanying tired, weak, nervous feelings of this nature. This is because of its soothing effect on ONE OF WOMAN'S MOST IMPORTANT ORGANS. Taken regularly — Pinkham's Compound helps build up resistance against such symptoms. Follow label directions.

THE BATTLE MUST GO ON—While Americans are dying on Okinawa, in China, the Pacific Islands and at sea, Americans in Alabama are being called upon for even greater effort so that those who have given their lives will not have died in vain.

Greater Home Front Effort Called For In Mighty 7th

State War Finance Chairman Urges State To Finish War Bond Job

Alabama has just three more weeks in which to finish its 7th War Loan job.

Each county in the state was urged today by State War Finance Chairman Ed Leigh McMillan to make a great effort to meet their quota so that the state's brilliant record of every county-over-the-top in every war loan drive would have no blemish.

"Our soldiers in the Pacific battle areas are still dying," Mr. McMillan said in making his appeal.

"Here at home we must keep on buying so that their sacrifices will not have been in vain.

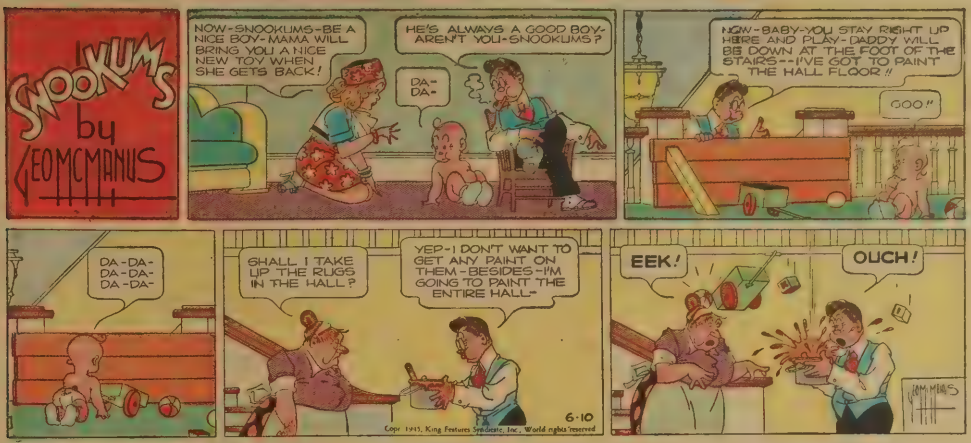
"We can best honor the valiant men who have had to give their lives by doing our best to see that those who are still fighting have the proper implements of war.

"It takes war bond dollars to keep the supplies moving to the front. It takes war bond dollars to move the veterans of the battles of Europe to the Pacific.

"Many Alabama counties have done outstanding jobs in selling E bonds. Many are already over the top on their quotas.

"But other counties still have a big job to do to keep the state's record standing of 'every county over the top in every drive.'

"I know that no man, woman or child will hesitate, when they take time to think what it means, when they do not buy their share of E bonds.



"The stake is great. Many of our men have given their lives and their future happiness to make sure that that stake is secure for their children and our children.

"We cannot fail them now. Let us make every hour that remains of the Mighty Seventh an hour in which we do more than our duty.

"IF YOU HAVE BOUGHT BONDS . . . THEN BUY MORE . . . IF YOU HAVE NOT BOUGHT . . . THEN DO YOUR DUTY."

SGT C. M. KING TELLS OF HORRORS OF GERMAN PRISON AND CRUELTY OF SS TROOPS

Clanton Resident Says Sights Unbeleavable That Were Witnessed By American Troops Entering Dachau

Dachau is no longer a name of terror for hunted men. 32,000 of them have been freed by the 42nd Rainbow Division. The crimes done behind the walls of this worst of Nazi concentration camps now live only to haunt the memories of the Rainbowmen who tore open its gates and first saw its misery, and to accuse its SS keepers of one of the worst crimes in all history.

When Infantrymen of the 42nd Division fought their way into Dachau against fanatical SS troops who met deserved violent deaths along the moats, behind the high fenses and in the railyards littered with the bodies of fifty carloads of their starved victims, these hardened soldiers expected to see horrible sights.

But no human imagination fed with the most fantastic of the tales that have leaked out from the earliest and most notarious of all Nazi concentration camps, could have been prepared for what they did see there.

The keen descriptive powers of a score of ace correspondents who entered the camp while the battle of liberation was still in progress, and through whose eyes the whole world looked upon that scene, could not do justice to this story. Seasoned as they were by long acquaintanceship with stark reality, these trained observers gazed at freightcars full of piled cadavers no more than bones covered with skin and they could not believe their own eyes.

Riflemen accustomed to witnessing death had no stomach for rooms stacked almost ceiling-high with tangled human bodies adjoining the cremation ovens, looking like some maniac's woodpile.

And when an officer pressed through mobs of the forgotten men of all nations inside the electric barbed wire enclosure and entered a room where lay the dying survivors of the horror train, he wept unashamedly as limp ghosts under filthy blankets lying in human excreta, tried to salute him with broom-stick arms, falling back in deathly stupor from which most would never rouse.

Ten days before the arrival of the Rainbow Division fifty carloads of prisoners arrived at Dachau from the Buchenwald concentration camp in a starving condition after 27 days without food. When Buchenwald was threatened by advancing American troops the Nazis hurriedly crowded about 4,000 of their prisoners into open flatcars unfit even for cattle. 27 days later—days of exposure to freezing weather without anything to eat, a trainload of human suffering arrived at Dachau only to be left to die in the railyard leading into this extermination camp.

In those stinking cars I saw the bodies of these prisoners too weak even to get out. A few tried, and they made a bloody heap in the door of one of the cars. They had been machine-gunned by the SS. A little girl was in that car.

In another car, sitting on the bodies of his comrades, his face contorted with pain frozen by death, was the body of one who completed the amputation of his gangrenous leg with his own hands and covered the stump with paper. Underneath was one with a crushed skull. "He's better off now" was the comment of one newsman. Close by was one who had been beaten until his entrails protruded from his back.

But most of them had simply died in the attitudes of absolute exhaustion that only starving men can assume. Curled up with their faces resting in fingers tipped with blue nails. With naked buttocks angling up to pivot on a skeletal pelvis. Or twisted over to show an abdomen stretched drum-tight against the spine with ribs making an overhanging bulge.

Some of the cars had been emptied and the bodies carted to the crematory. In one room adjoining the furnace-room on the left they were neatly stacked. The stripped corpses were very straight. But in the room on the right they were piled in complete disorder, still clothed.

With the help of a husky Yugoslav inmate who worked at the furnaces and who told that all four of them had been going "tag und nacht". . . "day and night" with a capacity of bodies each, the explanation was partially unfolded. The straight neat ones had probably been brought in alive, showered in the "brausebad" or shower-room, then gassed or hanged from hooks on the rafters in front of the furnaces. Those on the right were just as they were dumped out of the freight cars where they had died of starvation.

It was incredible that such things could happen today, but there was the visible proof. It was unbelievable that human beings were capable of perpetrating such unspeakable atrocities, but there were the men who did it. The SS.

At least 25 and perhaps 50 were beaten to death by inmates who struck with all the fury of men who suddenly release years of pent-up hate.

One was lying beside his own bloody artificial limb with which his brains had been exposed.

Someone said there were 14 in the canal.

One in a railroad car had no face left.

These once-swaggering Hitler-worshipers would pocket no more of the profits from the hair-oil, shoe-polish, thermos bottles, notebooks, stationery, brushes, porcelain works of art, and cigarette paper manufactured there by men and women from all of Europe who slaved until starvation and disease made them worthless and then they were burned.

Now the SS guards were dead but their deaths could not avenge the thousands dead and dying there in Dachau.

These tortured dead can only be avenged when our world is aroused so much by what the 42nd uncovered at Dachau and by what others have found at all the other Dachaus scattered throughout Germany, that never again will any party, any government, any people be allowed to mar the face of the earth with such inhumanity.

This is not just talk, it is actually what we found when we took this prison at Dachau. It is about ten miles from Munich. No one can describe how bad it was, I would not have believed it if I had not been there myself.

— SGT. C. M. KING.

FRED GANDY REPRESENTED LOCAL LEGION POST

The Chilton County Post No. 6 of the American Legion after investigation of the qualifications of all high school boys in the county who had completed their junior grade and intended to complete their senior next year, chose Fred Gandy of Maplesville to represent their Post in Boys State at Montgomery, Ala.

Boys State is a week's training for boys all over Alabama held by the American Legion every year in Montgomery, Ala. Fred attended the Boys State which was held this year at Hurts School on the 1st day of June and returned home on June 8th. On June 11th Fred was a guest to the regular meeting of our American Legion Post and in about a thirty-minute talk to the members, told of his experience in this week's school of training.

W. G. ROBINSON

W. G. Robinson, age 65, died at his residence in the Alabama Mill Village at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday.

J. Moll Martin & Sons in charge.

Push Needed To Reach Crippled Children's Goal

A call for help came today from I. S. Levine, County Chairman of the Crippled Children's Service Drive in Chilton County.

Chairman Levine stated that the Drive had dragged along terribly and urged all Beat workers who had lists to complete their canvass and make a report to him so that the work might be completed.

As you will notice by the chart of Beat standing, Beat 4, alone, could put the county over her goal by completing their quota. There is much work to be done in this field, the quota set is comparatively small, and should not bear too heavy on anyone. Complete your canvass and make your report to Mr. Levine before Saturday night of this week.

Let it not be said that Chilton County failed to support her Crippled Children's Service.

SONS OF MRS. L. A. CALLOWAY TO SPEND SUNDAY HERE

Dr. J. Lamar Calloway of Durham, North Carolina, and Commander Raymond R. Calloway, U. S. Naval Hospital, Pensacola, Fla., sons of Mrs. L. A. Calloway, will be at home with their mother Sunday, June 17th being "Father's Day" they have asked that they might place flowers at the Altar at First Baptist Church in memory of their father, the late L. A. Calloway.

JIM PARRISH MUCH IMPROVED

Jim Parrish, who has been in a Selma Hospital for the past two weeks in a serious condition, is reported as very much improved. His friends will be glad to know that he returned to Clanton Tuesday afternoon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MEETING FOR MEMBERS OF ASSOCIATION

We will have on the third Sunday in June, an all-day Sunday School meeting for all the Sunday Schools in Chilton County Association. We will be glad to have all Sunday Schools present at this meeting, which begins at 10 o'clock.

The first thing on the morning program will be the Sunday School Class after which there will be preaching by Pastor J. I. Bice.

After lunch Brother Burks, Bro. Webb, Bro. Ham and Bro. G. G. Williams will speak.

Everyone is urged to come and bring the Sunday School spirit with you.

NEGRO DIED IN COUNTY JAIL MONDAY

A negro man, believed to have lived near Anniston, Ala., was found dead in his cell in County Jail Monday. From papers found on the body his name was determined as William Richman. He had been lodged in jail on a vagrancy charge.

STANDARD OIL BUYS LARGE BOND IN MIGHTY SEVENTH DRIVE

The Standard Oil Company entered a subscription for a $2,000 War Bond to apply to the Chilton County Quota in the Seventh War Loan Drive.

In entering the subscription for Standard Oil Messrs. J. P. Lawrence and W. L. Hampton, local agents, stated this was the largest allocation Standard had ever made in our county, and the Committee expressed its appreciation for this added consideration.

Mr. Lawrence also stated that the action of the Standard Oil Company was taken as an expression of the genuine interest of the organization in the success of the Mighty Seventh War Loan Drive.

WAYS CONTROL GARDEN INSECTS ARE PRESENTED

Since insects are the worst problem for summer gardeners, W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist, API, offers these suggestions:

Tomato worms can be controlled by dusting the plants once a week with calcium arsenate or with a poisoned bait. The bait is made by mixing one part calcium arsenate or Cryolite with nine parts corn meal. Sprinkle this bait by hand on the fruit clusters. Start dusting as soon as first tomatoes are set. Three to four applications should be made.

Worms in roasting ear corn can be controlled by using mineral oil which can be bought at any drug store. The oil should be applied as soon as the silks start to turn brown. An oil can or an eye dropper can be used to force six or eight drops of oil in the tip of the ear.

Cantaloupe, cucumber and squash plants should be dusted with rotenone-talc dust containing .75 per cent mixture rotenone to control worms. Do not use a dust that contains sulphur on these crops. A mixture of Cryolite and talc is also a good dust to use for the control of these insects. The plants should be dusted at least once a week from the time the first fruit is set until the crop has been harvested.

Rotenone-sulphur dust is best for the control of the bean beetle, collaro bugs, or the Harlequin cabbage bug providing the dust contains .75 per cent rotenone and the material is fresh. Cryolite, if applied with a dust gun, will give good control of bean beetles.

Cryolite will give good control of potato bugs, worms on cabbage and many other chewing insects. It can be used on any crop grown in the garden except corn.

Legion Baseball Club Loses to Montevallo 14-2

Chilton County Post No. 6 American Legion Baseball Club played its first game in the Central Alabama Tri County American Legion Baseball League with the Montevallo Post on the Montevallo Diamond last Friday, the eighth day of June. All of the boys that made the trip had a good time, and although they were defeated by the tune of 14 to 2, our Club is in no way discouraged. We did not have time to practice much, as the results of the game shows very plainly.

Most of our boys work and do not have time to practice much, however, they are getting in all of the practice that their work will allow, and we know that we are going to furnish the baseball fans of Chilton County some good Junior baseball games. Our object is to teach sportsmanship and good, clean competitive baseball games. We ask all young boys who are interested in playing baseball to come out to practice all they can.

Box score of game:

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Japs to Press Suicide Attacks; Severe Terms Set for Germany; U.S. War Casualties Top Million

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Working under direction of Russian soldiers, German civilians clear rubble from Berlin's famed Unter den Linden for pedestrian and motor traffic. Picture shows extent of ruin of city during historic siege.

PACIFIC:
Suicidal Intent

Faced with the material superiority of the Allies, the Japanese announced intensification of their suicide plane attacks, and at the same time threatened to send piloted balloon bombs over the American mainland.

In revealing the acceleration of suicide attacks, which have inflicted a heavy toll of U. S. shipping off Okinawa without retarding its conquest, the Tokyo radio reported that every Jap navy plane will be ordered to crash-dive into an Allied warship. "If this tactic is successful," it was blandly stated, "victory is assured . . . If otherwise, the navy will have many heroes for our shrines."

In threatening to dispatch piloted balloon bombs over the American mainland, the Japs said that the present pilotless balloon bombs dropping on the west coast are being used for experimental purposes. Revealed by the army for their nuisance value, the missiles are borne by grayish, white or green-blue paper balloons 33 feet in diameter and lack direction.

While the enemy talked of stepping up use of suicide weapons to make up for his material inferiority, huge fleets of B-29s continued to raze Japan's great industrial centers, producing Nippon's weapons of war.

One by one, the enemy's sprawling manufacturing areas are being put to the torch, with Nagoya, Tokyo, Yokohama, Osaka and Kobe all smouldering from tons of jellied-gasoline incendiaries. In firing these cities, B-29 crewmen have seared air plants, steel mills, munitions factories, utilities, drug and dye centers, warehouses, port facilities and rail lines.

As the superforts continued to wreck ruin on the great industry Japan has carefully built up over 100 years, Pres. Harry S. Truman announced the U. S.'s intention to press the fight to the finish.

Calling upon the Japanese to quit and spare their country the destruction visited upon Germany, the President revealed that a force greater than the 3,500,000 men in Europe on V-E Day would be employed in the struggle besides the concentrated might of the navy with its strength in excess of 3,000,000.

Should the enemy elect to carry on the war, President Truman envisaged no easy job, what with the Japs reputed to have 4,000,000 men under arms and millions of military age eligible for service. The enemy still possesses 3,000 combat planes, he said, and Jap industry still is capable of turning out between 1,250 and 1,500 aircraft a month despite bombardments.

EUROPE:
Severe Terms

Stripping Germany of all Hitlerian conquests and subjecting the country to absolute Allied authority in every phase of national life, the U. S., British, Russian and French joint military control council, meeting in rubbled Berlin, dictated the most severe terms ever imposed on a defeated power. As U. S. representative, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's presence marked his first appearance in the former German capital following its downfall.

The signing of the declaration did not set final terms, leaving the door open for further alterations of the German frontier already whittled to its 1937 size, and reserving the right to formulate any other orders relative to the regulation of the country.

In addition to remarking the German borders and assuming full authority over the life and death of every person in the shattered Reich, the Big Four claimed control over every labor union, industry and service for use in the occupation and reconstruction period.

Immediate establishment of machinery for the joint Allied military council to coordinate the work of the occupying powers struck a snag, with the Soviets insisting that the U. S. and Britain retire from the fringes of the Russian occupation zone before arrangements be discussed.

WAR CASUALTIES:
Top Million

Costliest of American conflicts, World War II already has claimed over 1,000,000 U. S. casualties, including 227,097 dead, 607,468 wounded, 63,455 missing and 104,867 prisoners.

With the big pull against the Japanese still ahead, U. S. dead exceed the 190,000 Union and Confederate soldiers killed in the Civil war, and the 50,280 troops who gave up their lives in battle in World War I. In all, 620,000 men died in the War Between the States from all causes including disease and imprisonment while the toll in World War I approximated 125,000.

With Allied war expenditures estimated at 558 billion dollars and those for the Axis 442 billion, the direct cost of World War II has topped the trillion mark, the American university of Washington, D. C., reported. Not included in the figures is the tremendous damage to private and public property, nor China's outlay during its 14-year conflict with the Japanese.

Of the 1,000,000 plus casualties suffered to date, 890,019 were incurred by the army and 112,868 by the navy. Army deaths total 183,563 and navy 43,534. Of the 52,746 army men listed as missing, little hope is left that an appreciable number of the 44,000 unaccounted for in Europe will now turn up following their continued absence after Germany's conquest.

FOOD OUTLOOK:
Cut Lend-Lease

Along with stoppage of shipments overseas, improved distribution to acute shortage areas should materially ease the tight meat situation during the July, August and September quarter, government officials said, though supplies will remain tight.

Suspension of meat shipments overseas reflects the gradual curtailment of lend-lease operations following Germany's defeat, with total food deliveries expected to drop to 2 or 3 per cent of the nation's supply by the end of the year compared with about 7 per cent in 1944. Overall relief shipments will rise 5 to 10 per cent, however, with wheat and flour the major "bulk" foods.

With federally inspected packers unable to keep up with both military and civilian demands, and non-federally inspected slaughterers' production quotas cut, small towns reportedly were beginning to feel the effects of the meat shortage. Except for those with food lockers, many farm wives were said to be taking their turn in line with townsfolk for the dwindling supplies.

Food Sales Show Greatest Wartime Rise

Sales by restaurants, groceries and other food stores in the United States rose from $12,693,000,000 in the prewar year of 1938 to $28,261,000,000 in 1944, an increase of 122.7 per cent, according to the Alexander Hamilton institute. This was a much larger percentage increase than that shown by retail sales of all other commodities which rose from $25,360,000,000 to $41,014,000,000.

Half of the gain in total retail trade from $38,053,000,000 in 1938 to the record high figure of $69,275,000,000 in 1944 was accounted for by the increase in food sales alone. In 1938, food sales represented 33.4 per cent of total retail trade. In 1944, food sales amounted to 40.8 per cent of the total. Reports for the first two months of 1945 show a continuation of the expansion in food sales.

NEW GERMANY:
Pope's Hope

Declaring that his residence in Germany as a papal nuncio had acquainted him with the great qualities of its people, Pope Pius XII hoped for the nation's rebirth to new life and dignity after the overthrow of national socialism and the expiation of war criminals.

Addressing the world on his name's-day, the Pontiff said that the Vatican had concluded the concordat with Germany in 1933 to permit continued Catholic practice and establish a spiritual barrier to the subversive and violent doctrines of Naziism.

In defending the rights of small nations, Pius XII said that though they could be expected to surrender some sovereignty in world cooperation, they must be given full control over their internal affairs. With Europe desolated by the war, the Pope said that dispossessed, disillusioned and hopeless men threatened harmonious relations between the various segments of society.

NEAR EAST:
Power Politics

France's major family row with Britain over Syria and Lebanon took on a broader aspect, with Gen. Charles de Gaulle insisting on a five power parley for settlement of the entire near eastern situation.

Gen. de Gaulle

Using his aces, De Gaulle's bid for a five power parley including the U. S., Britain, France, Russia and China would put him in a position to play up to the friendly Soviets for greater concessions in Syria and Lebanon, while a conference involving just the U. S., Britain and France could be expected to tip the scales in favor of the English.

In asking for a settlement of the whole near eastern situation, De Gaulle projected the question of British holdings there as protection for extensive oil concessions and the vital Suez canal, lifeline of the empire.

As the British moved in force to take over Syria and Lebanon to prevent further disorders in the two colonies, which balked at French demands for military bases following their grant of independence, De Gaulle repeated charges that British agents had provoked the uprisings. Said he: "Everyone knows their names, and I would blush to give them to you."

FRANCE:
New Money

Undertaken to invalidate the huge sums taken by the Germans, root out concealed fortunes of war profiteers and collaborators, and obtain an accurate estimate of personal wealth upon which to slap a capital tax, France began the exchange of $115,000,000 of old bank notes for new ones.

Largest and most complicated operation of its kind ever attempted in France, the exchange proceeded smoothly following months of the most careful preparation. Armed with carbines, police and troops guarded banks, post offices and tax bureaus in every town, village and hamlet during the exchanges.

Only $1, $2, $20 and $100 bank notes were being exchanged, with each holder given a maximum of $120 in cash and the remainder kept until the completion of the whole operation. Lesser notes corresponding to American "change" were not included, leading to a frantic bid on the part of people short of them to obtain some for smaller but all important daily transactions.

RECIPROCAL TRADE:
Farm Split

Testifying before the senate finance committee on the house-approved bill extending the reciprocal trade act for three years and granting the President authority to reduce tariffs 50 per cent under existing levels, farm organization leaders split on their views of the legislation.

Declaring that tariff making constitutionally was a function of congress and duties should be based on the difference between cost of production here and abroad, Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange, called for continuation of the present act for another year and further study of effects the proposed legislation would have on agriculture.

Backing the bill, Russell Smith, legislative secretary of the National Farmers' Union, said that without the provision for presidential authority to slash tariffs an additional 50 per cent under present levels, the measure would lose much of its effect as a contribution to international economic cooperation.

RELIEF CLOTHING

Army clothing unserviceable and beyond repair for further military use is being reconditioned to the fullest possible extent for distribution to needy civilians in liberated areas.

In no way interfering with the existing program for repair of all serviceable army clothing for reuse by military personnel, the new project is using facilities of the nine service commands which otherwise would be inactive during the interim period until redeployment of troops to the Pacific gets fully underway.

Animal Pets Hike With Soldiers on Drive in Burma

Red Hen Hatches Turkeys On 1,000-Mile Jaunt of British Forces.

LONDON.—The British 14th army in Burma provides many examples of the fighting man's traditional love of animal pets.

An officer of the Burma intelligence corps down in the Arakan peninsula kept a pet bear cub, which later achieved the distinction of being thrown out of the Grand hotel in Calcutta for eating the end of a bed, writes a correspondent of the London Times with the forces. An officer with the 5th Indian division had a pet sheep that slept in his tent. A sergeant herpetologist in the transport section keeps a 10-foot python, to which he is singularly devoted.

Dogs by Thousands.

Pet dogs there are in thousands. Indian army officers have brought dachshunds, bull terriers and spaniels with them. Lt. Gen. Sun Li-jen, commanding the Chinese 1st army, has an Alsatian called Mogaung, and six puppies named after scenes of Chinese military victories. Lt. Gen. Sir Montague Stopford, commanding the 23rd Indian corps, contents himself with a flock of ducks, which moves with headquarters.

Small monkeys ride with the drivers of trucks, chattering angrily at any who have the impertinence to overtake them. Parrots and parakeets, brilliantly colored but poor linguists, are to be found in more than one mess. Nearly every unit has a poultry flock. The Burmese hens, however, are nearly all abstainers from the egg-laying habit.

A young major, commanding a unit serving with the 14th army, when in Delhi last autumn, bought two turkeys, a gobbler and a hen, for his unit's Christmas dinner. Turkeys are almost as rare in India as in wartime England. He took them with him, by rail and road, to the Arakan, where his unit was stationed. The hen laid her first egg on a ferryboat crossing the Brahmaputra and the major ate it for breakfast. At Christmas the turkeys paid the traditional penalties of their kind, but not before the hen had laid six eggs. These were put under a broody Rhode Island Red hen.

Birds Hatched En Route.

A week later the unit received orders to move to the Shwebo plain by road. A coop was hastily constructed which would fit snugly into the back of a trunk. It contained three compartments, one for the unit's ducks, one for the chickens, and one for the broody hen setting on the turkey eggs. It was a journey of more than 1,000 miles, over some of the worst roads in Asia, and it took in all 18 days. But the old hen continued to sit placidly and, mirabile dictu, in the Kalewa gorge, probably the bumpiest stage of the whole journey, while the truck was actually in motion, three little turkeys hatched out. The major, whose confidence in the hen had not been shared by the other members of his unit, immediately collected a handsome sum in wagers.

The turkey poults survived the remaining stages of the journey and are running happily about a small wire - netting enclosure under the proud but vigilant eye of their foster-mother. They are the special charge of a Derbyshire corporal, a former army middleweight boxing champion, who feels strongly that they deserve something better than the turkey's usual Christmas fate, and he is anxious to take them back with him to Derbyshire when his term of service is up.

Holdup Men Find This Cashier Doesn't Care

SAN FRANCISCO.—Marian Humphreys, cashier, was indignant when two young men paused on their way out of a restaurant on upper Market street, and instead of paying their bill handed her a note saying:

"This is a holdup. Hand over your money and you won't get hurt."

"I'll do no such thing!" she said firmly. "Your check is $1.53 and you'd better pay it!"

A pistol waving somewhat vaguely didn't change her mind a bit. Seconds passed and panic seized the men. They dashed for the door and there collided with John R. Janzen, who was delivering a crate of eggs.

All of them, including the eggs, went down together, the eggs spilling on top of one man. The other rose and fled. Police booked the egg-smeared one on suspicion of attempted robbery.

Beavers Winning Battle With Railroad Workers

FARMINGTON, MAINE.—A daily struggle between a beaver colony and a Maine Central railroad crew has been going on for months, with no end in sight.

One morning last summer, Alfred Cowan and his crew discovered that the shoulder of the track near West Farmington was being washed by impounded waters caused by a beaver dam.

Optimistically, Cowan and his men destroyed the dam and thought that was the end of it. But every morning the beavers have presented the railroad men with a completely rebuilt dam.

Found Wife's Picture In Bombed Farm House

LOS ANGELES.—In a bombed out German farmhouse, Capt. Harry Parkin Jr. found a picture of his wife, Virginia. He sent it to her in Los Angeles. She explained: In the 1932 Olympic games here she served as a junior hostess at a dinner for athletes. The picture was taken then.

FBI Fingerprint Bureau Efficient

55,000,000 Persons Covered In Washington Files.

WASHINGTON.—Known to man since the days of the ancient Chinese, the science of fingerprinting really has been making up for lost time the past few years. No better illustration is to be found than in the mushrooming of the FBI identification division from its nucleus of 810,000 prints in 1924 to well over 95,000,000 at present. They represent an estimated 55,000,000 persons.

Despite the seemingly staggering task involved, only 36 hours elapse from the time a criminal fingerprint card is received for searching until a report is sent out. Over 82,000 wanted notices are on file, and last year's identifications were made on 70.25 per cent of the criminal fingerprint cards received. There are now nearly 12,500 contributing law enforcement agencies that utilize this cooperative service of the FBI.

In one instance, a man who tried to get a government job in Hawaii was found to have been arrested previously in New Jersey for sabotage, although this charge later was changed to violation of the national explosives act. Likewise, the fingerprints of a Missouri defense plant applicant showed he had been arrested for arson.

Fingerprints on file with the FBI insure one's identification in the event of amnesia or death. A hand found in a shark off Florida was identified as that of a missing seaman. Hundreds of armed forces dead have been identified in equally strange cases. There is even one case of an amnesia victim of 20 years, whose identity was established through fingerprints taken when he enlisted in the army in 1912.

The FBI's fingerprint files are maintained in the huge District of Columbia national guard armory in Southeast Washington. Long rows of filing cabinets completely fill the mammoth drill floor under a high arched ceiling. It is by far the world's largest clearing house of fingerprint data and criminal records.

'Backs' Out of Danger; Lets Wind Supply Power

SANTA MONICA, CALIF. — Add to the strange true tales of the troop carrier command the story of the C-47 pilot who, while in the air, "backed" his plane out of danger.

It is related by Capt. William P. Carlyn of Columbus, Ohio, and appears in the Airview magazine, Douglas Aircraft employe publication.

The ingenious pilot, Captain Carlyn's story relates, was flying for TCC in Alaska and found himself battling "Windy Pass," an unusually gusty canyon with high, precipitous walls.

There was an exceptionally terrific gale blowing through the pass, the captain's story relates, "and the pilot found he was making no headway at all, even with the engines of his cargo carrying Skytrain at full throttle."

"So," the story goes on, "he just eased up on the throttle, and letting the wind supply the power, 'backed out' of the pass and took a different route home."

For those who might feel inclined to take the above with a grain of salt, veteran transport pilots say it not only could be done, but should be done if a landing was impossible, the canyon walls too high to surmount with safety—and if the pilot had "backing up" room.

Germans Sold Slaves in Koenigsberg, Reds Charge

LONDON. — The Moscow radio said that a brisk slave market had existed in Koenigsberg, capital of East Prussia, at which adult persons from occupied lands were sold for about 10 marks (about $4 prewar) each, and children for 5 or 6 marks each.

The broadcast quoted a captured German, identified as Erich Zwemmer, director of the market, as telling a Russian war correspondent:

"I had 52 assistants and we had plenty to do, as in the last year 250,000 foreigners from occupied areas of the Soviet Union, Poland, France and Belgium passed through the camp. I sold no fewer than 75,000 Russians a year."

5,000 Jobs Are Listed That Navy Men Can Fill

WASHINGTON.—The War Manpower commission listed 5,000 civilian occupations which navy enlisted personnel would be qualified to take up when discharged. A book "Special Aids," soon to be published, will contain the list and explain how the training and experience of sailors, WAVES, seabees and coastguardsmen can be used in civilian jobs.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in this work—do not act as Nature intends. Fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache; persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Bible Enjoys Postwar Revival of Interest

World Is Reawakening to Spiritual Values; Scriptures Source of Inspiration For Millions of Disconsolate.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Last week I sat down to write a piece about a man who wrote a book about the Bible. I thought the book and its creator were worth more than casual comment because of the nature of both creation and creator. Both are unique. But before I had made more than a dozen inquiries in search of colateral material for my article I discovered that the production of the book was news in another sense. I found it to be more than another contribution to modern literature and scholarship. I found it to be part of a modern phenomenon —a phase of what appears to be the greatest revival of interest in the Bible which the world has ever seen.

George Stimson, who wrote "A Book About the Bible," is one of Washington's newsmen whose name is known to many readers of his dispatches and his column, especially in the Middle West and South. He is known to a smaller circle for the profundity of his knowledge on many subjects, especially the Bible. I think it more than coincidence that he completed the work to which he has given a lifetime of study and devotion this year. He may have guessed that this period in the world's history which has witnessed the greatest brutalization of humankind would naturally be followed by a strong reaction toward things of the spirit. In any case the arrival of this "Book About the Bible" could not be more timely. Lloyd Douglas, author of that gripping work, "The Robe," informed me last month that the American Bible Society has received the largest order for scriptures in its 129 years of history, and that the distribution of Bibles, New Testaments and Bible portions by this non-profit organization has reached the highest level since it was founded in 1816.

This biggest single order was for 350,000 Protestant scriptures (including military missals and prayer books) for the European theater of operations and in addition 50ft German Bibles, 120,000 testaments and 95,000 "portions" for use with German war prisoners and interned civilians.

Right here in the nation's capital, Dr. Darby, District of Columbia secretary of the same society, tells me that this was the busiest year in the chapter's history.

War's Brutalities Bring Reaction

So much for the situation to date. Why is it predicted that this great revival of interest in the holy writ in this country is only the beginning of a movement of world-wide magnitude. First, there is the obvious suggestion already mentioned that it is logical to expect a reaction toward things of the spirit after these years of brutal warfare.

However, there is another answer which is given by many thoughtful people. They say this: The defeat of nazi-fascism was the defeat of an idea as well as a military power. That idea based on a purely material concept was opposed and overcome by the western nations whose philosophy of government as well as of morals and ethics is based on the Christian religion.

This triumph of the Christian-democratic ideal has affected different people for different reasons but with the same general result. To many who yielded to the lure of nazi-fascism its failure revealed its fundamental error. Their alluring idol showed its feet of clay and they are turning repentingly back to its opposite, Christianity.

To many who have been but passive followers of the Christian teachings, the terrible price the world has paid in blood has been a harsh reminder of their delinquencies. They have a renewed zeal in their faith.

To those, of course, who have suffered or are bereft, comfort comes with the contemplation of the scriptures, with their hopeful message.

And then there is another explanation of this desire to renew and reinforce their communion with the word of God. If I may venture into the realm of the metaphysical let me quote from an anonymous article in a pamphlet entitled "Let Freedom Ring," (also a product of the American Bible society).

The author states that Samuel Smith, author of our patriotic hymn "America," put only one major idea in his verses.

"It is God that is the 'author of liberty'," this article continues. "Liberty does not have its origin in man. God has implanted it in man's breast. Perhaps this is the reason that, more than all others th the oppressed lands, the churches have stood up before tyranny and rebuked it . . . perhaps this is the reason urgent requests are coming from the liberated lands for the Book of which they have been deprived. . . . Christians all over Europe are again studying the Bible to learn afresh its lessons. . . ."

Whether for these or still other reasons of which we are unaware, we know that a tremendous renaissance of interest in the Bible is sweeping the world.

And so it is the good fortune of the Bible lover, whether he be an erudite scholar or a simple and devoted reader spelling out the texts as he goes along, that George Stimson completed his helpful, interesting, searching and authentic "Book About the Bible" in this particular year of our Lord.

"The purpose of the author in writing this book," says Stimson in his brief introduction, "is to supply reliable and adequate answers to a great number of popular questions asked about the Bible."

And that is what he does. Take the first one: when was Jesus born? and the last one: does "mile" occur in the Bible? Or, how old are the oldest Bible manuscripts?

And that brings us to the inquiry, who is this man Stimson, anyhow? He is a man of about fifty, born on an Iowa farm and is still a keen lover of the soil. He worked on his college (Valparaiso, Ind.) paper and then on small town papers, came to Washington to help edit the "Pathfinder" and was on its staff for 10 years. He is the author of four successful volumes of popular information, and still syndicates a unique and colorful column called "You'd Be Surprised."

I wish I could take you into George Stimson's little office in the National Press building in Washington and see him toiling at his old-fashioned roll-top desk.

You will probably find him poking at his ancient typewriter with two fingers or running them through his healthy mane of brown hair while he cogitates. You might find as a caller the speaker of the house of representatives, some foreign diplomat, a distracted correspondent or some poor, ambitious girl or boy seeking advice on a career. In any case you would be welcomed with a smile and the chances are you would not leave without some aid and comfort, moral or material.

Intrigued by Bible Through Life

Of course I asked George how he happened to write "A Book About the Bible." "Because," he said with no hesitation, "I wanted answers to those questions myself." The first Bible Stimson ever owned he got from a mail order house when he was 15. It was his second "own" book. The first was "Pilgrim's Progress." He read them both, by a kerosene lamp, stretched out on his stomach on the kitchen table. Then he began to ask questions—questions—questions—of his Sunday school teacher, of the preacher, of anyone who would listen. How did Paul look? What about Jesus' brothers? What became of the lost tribes of Israel? and many others which thousands of readers of the Bible have asked before and since. The answers weren't so satisfactory to the young inquisitor and so he kept on asking. And reading, and clipping and searching and researching.

Nor did he cease to examine the source of his curiosity. He has read the Bible from cover to cover at least 10 times. He has read it countless times if you added up his browsings. He has read it twice aloud to himself.

And now, he gives the world the answers to the questions he himself began asking back there in the little country church, giving them to the world simply, authoritatively and completely, at a moment when the Book which is more widely read than any other ever printed, is being read more widely than ever, by a yearning, asking world.

GRACE MOORE, who's gone overseas to entertain servicemen, is booked for a new radio program of her own, which will take to the air this autumn. If it isn't good it will break her record — she's been successful in musical comedy, in opera, in the movies, and whenever she's done a radio stint listeners have wished for more. All that's known at the moment is that George

GRACE MOORE

Givot, "The Greek Ambassador," will appear with her. Miss Moore, looking most attractive in uniform, bade farewell to New York officially just before she was due to leave. No small task lay ahead of her; a little singer named Lily Pons had already set the pace for singers entertaining servicemen.

Way back years ago, Lew Ayres shot into stardom via his role in "All Quiet on the Western Front." William Goetz, head of International Pictures, thinks he has under contract a young man who can duplicate that feat. The young man is Richard Long; he hasn't completed his chores in "Tomorrow Is Forever," but the Hollywood grapevine caught up with him, and Goetz has turned down four offers to share Long's contract.

THE CHURCH BEGINS ITS WORK

LESSON TEXT—Acts 5:29-35, 38-40, 42
GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

The church of Jesus Christ, glorious in spite of her failings, is the greatest institution known to this world. That is true because while it is in this world, the church is not of the world, but of God. He established the church as the fellowship of believers to do His work in the world. For more than 19 centuries the Christian church has served Him with varying degrees of consecration and usefulness.

The beginning of the work of the church is of special interest, for such a study will show whether we today are following in the right path. We find in our lesson that the early church was distinguished by:

I. Obedience to God (vv. 29-32).

The disciples filled with the Holy Spirit were bold in declaring the gospel and in proclaiming their risen Lord. Realizing that the apostles' message was winning the people, the leaders of the Jews admonished them not to speak in the name of Christ (Acts 4:18). When they continued, the priests threw them into prison, but an angel set them free (Acts 5:19).

When they were again apprehended and accused of disobeying the command of the high priest, Peter and the others responded by pointing out that they were under a higher command, that of God Himself. Him they would obey, come what may.

Who will deny that we need a renewal of that spirit in the church today? We need to lose our fear of men and their little authority, and regain a larger measure of obedience to God.

II. A Convicting Message (v. 33).

When God's Word is preached with complete obedience to Him, something is sure to happen. Men and women will be convicted of their sin. They will be cut to the heart.

That conviction will show itself in one of two ways. Some will be repentant and will cry out with the jailer at Philippi, "What must I do to be saved?" (Acts 16:30). Turning to Christ, they will find deliverance from sin.

Others will harden themselves in their wicked ways and become even more bitter in their hatred of Christ and the church. In our lesson we find them taking counsel to kill the disciples. Knowing themselves to be wrong and seeing that God's work revealed their sin, but not being willing to give it up, they tried to destroy the witness against them.

We see that same spirit operative today. To be sure, it does not usually show itself in such crude action as physical killing, although the day when that may happen again may not be far away.

In our cultivated time, it is revealed in a scholarly attack upon God's Word, an undermining of the faith of our young people in schools or colleges, or a ridiculing of those who wish to live a separated, consecrated life.

III. No Compromise (vv. 34, 35, 38-40).

A wise man, Gamaliel, presented what we would now call a program of appeasement. He urged that they wait and see what would happen.

At first glance his idea seems to be most commendable, and of course it did save the lives of the disciples at the moment. But it was essentially a "do-nothing" policy of compromise. If he believed in what the disciples were doing, he should have come out boldly on their side.

Notice that the believers had no part in this scheme. They listened, but did not give assent. They took the beating and went right out and preached the gospel again. What a fine example for us to follow! Those who are alert to the real problems of the church today recognize that the willingness to compromise with the world, the flesh, and (so it seems at times) the devil himself for the sake of peace, is destroying the real ministry of the church.

IV. Absolute Fearlessness (vv. 40, 42).

The early church was a very small group of believers with no position of influence or power in the world. Humanly speaking, it would have been expedient for them to heed the admonition now twice given (compare Acts 4:18) and confine their testimony to a private witness.

But they had hearts which were aflame with the fire of God, a commission to take the good news of God's saving grace to all men, and the assurance of God's presence (see Matt. 28:19, 20, Acts 1:8), and they were absolutely fearless.

The world admires true courage not only on the battlefield, but in the pulpit.

The criticism which men in the armed services make of the church centers at this point, namely, that the church has been too timid about giving out the Word of God, about really believing and practicing it.

To keep slip-covers new looking, iron them on the wrong side.

Flat stones pressed beneath a porch that rests directly upon the earth will retard wood decay.

If brown sugar becomes lumpy, place a damp cloth in the jar with the sugar and cover it tightly.

When boiling potatoes for mashing, cut them as for french fries. Much time and fuel will be saved.

Cut blotting paper to fit the bottom of the large salt shaker. This will take up the dampness, leaving the salt dry and free running.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Rubber contracts and ripples into an unstretched state in much the same way as an earthworm moves across the surface of the ground.

From April 1, 1942, to August 31, 1944, the total amount of natural rubber imported into the United States was 214,148 long tons. India and Africa supplied 33.3%; 31.9% came from Latin America, and 15.3% from Liberia. The remaining 17.5% came from shipments in transit when sources were lost to Japan.

Buses now carry more than half the total number of persons transported by intercity public carriers in the United States.

500,000 War Criminals

The work of drawing up indictments against German war criminals is underway in Europe, but no one has the slightest idea how many Nazis will be tried for criminal acts.

There are crime lists, compiled by the Russians, Czechs, Yugoslavs, Belgians, Greeks, French, Dutch, Danes, Letons, Poles and Norwegians. Moreover, it is expected that Italians, Rumanians and Hungarians will add names to those accused of crimes.

Some estimates place the number of prospective defendants around 100,000 but if certain suggestions are followed, such as that to try the entire German General Staff, Elite Guard and Gestapo, the war-criminals group would probably exceed half a million individuals.

The Japs Will Collapse

The hard fighting on Okinawa leads many so-called experts to predict that we will find similar difficulties throughout Japan.

This reminds us of the similar predictions about what we would find in Germany. It was said that the Westwall would cost hundreds of thousands of lives, that the invasion would be all but prohibitive in human costs and that, thereafter, we would face subterranean resistance inside Germany that would require years of bitter fighting.

The predicted difficulties did not materialize. It may be safe to assume that the same will be true in the Far East. The Japanese fight desperately upon Okinawa because it is a key to the defense of southern Japan. They have much to lose and consequently they risk much.

If it becomes necessary to land troops on the Japanese home islands the course of the fighting will probably follow the pattern seen in Europe. There will be bitter resistance on the beaches and throughout the initial phases of the great military operation. Losses will be heavy, no doubt, but there will come a stage in the advance of our forces when Japanese resistance, like that of Germany, will collapse and the war will end.

Chilton's Traffic Record

Chilton County is holding its traffic accident deaths this year to the same number reported in 1944, the Department of Public Safety announced over the three months period of January through March of last year no deaths were reported and the county records an increase for those months this year.

In spite of this encouraging trend, the county's share of the savage toll of human life is on the increase throughout the state. Alabama's mounting traffic death list is already high in comparison to other states. The 388 deaths marked up by Alabama motorists in the same three months period in 1944 has jumped 1 per cent to 103 traffic deaths reported in the identical period this year.

Nineteen of Alabama's 67 counties reflect an increase in traffic deaths during January, February and March of 1945 over the corresponding months last year, according to figures released by the department's Accident Record Bureau. Thirty-two counties held the same score over both periods while only 16 show a decrease.

The blame for the destruction of America's manpower through traffic accidents cannot be assigned to the slight seven per cent increase in mileage traveled by Alabama motorists. The mileage increase is still considerably lower than the 17 per cent rise in traffic deaths, the Department of Public Safety points out.

Figures on traffic accident deaths are complete for the first three months of 1944. Traffic accidents may not yet have claimed their final death for those same months this year. Victims of January, February and March accidents still lie in serious condition in hospitals throughout the state.

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

You know, we really do enjoy sending the soldiers their papers overseas. Of course the several hundred we send are more trouble and expense than all our mailing list combined. But that isn't the thing—if the boys want their hometown paper, we intend to see that they get it. Just to make things interesting, and because we do not have enough to do already, now the post office department comes along with a new order. From now on we have to make a statement on the first of each month to the Postmaster giving—well, tell you what we'll do, just let you read the thing yourself:

"I hereby certify that..... .....new subscriptions and..... renewal subscriptions were received for Chilton County News during the month of ..... from personnel of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard having addresses VIA Fleet Postoffice at New York, N.Y., or San Francisco, Calif., that there is available for inspection by the postmaster upon request the requests initialed by the addresses for these subscriptions and renewals; and that..... from such personnel expired during month and were discontinued."

You can see for yourself what this means. If you came in and subscribed for the paper to go to your son, brother, husband or daughter, who is a member of any one of these three departments of the Armed Forces, we will have to discontinue their paper until we have in writing an order, or request, from the addressee that we send them the paper. This request has to be shown the postmaster on demand. All we can say is, write your boy in service and get him, or her, to send their request at once. As soon as we receive it we will reinstate their name on our mailing list and get their paper going to them again.

More and more of our boys arrive in Chilton County each week, discharged from the army, navy or marines, to go back to living a normal life. Those with whom we have talked are all glad to get back to their old home town and to get back to work in civilian life. However, these boys are not a bit happier to be home than we are to see them home. The business men of the county should make special efforts to see that these ex-servicemen are employed as fast as they return.

Among those returned the past several days are John White Plyler, Adell Thornton, Cecil Carter and Harold Lawrence, just to mention a few. Louie Smith has been back several weeks now, and Burke Allison was home on leave last week and says he will roll in, in about thirty days. Things are getting better all the time.

You know about the little moran who cut a hole in the rug to see the floor show? Well, he had to cover it up—too many dirty cracks.

In this day of strikes and quarrels in labor it is indeed refreshing to see such crews as that formaned by S. G. Cox at work. Mr. Cox and his crew raised the L. & N. station and accomplished the feat in record time without fuss or fanfare. Supervisor Jim Williams is also to be highly complimented for his work on the tracks across Second Ave. Dispite the fact that this is possibly the busiest place in town, the general public was inconvenienced hardly at all during the process. Such smoothe working crews restores our faith in labor.

REV. A. T. HICKMAN WILL PREACH AT CONCORD

Producers Cautioned About Insecticides

Here are seven simple rules for safe handling of insecticides used on the farm and in the garden.

rich in natural sugar, to add sweet-

ABOUT INSECTICIDES

1. Take extra precautions in handling and using insecticides, especially the arsenicals, calcium arsenate, lead arsenate, and paris green; fluorine compounds, such as sodium fluoride, sodium fluosilicate, and cryolite; and nicotine compounds.

2. When mixing or applying insecticides, take extreme care to keep ingredients out of the mouth and eyes.

3. To avoid accumulation of residues, frenquently wash clothing used in spraying operations.

4. Don't keep sodium fluoride or other household insecticides where foods are stored and see that they are distinctly marked.

5. Do not leave open containers in which materials are being mixed, nor set aside batches of prepared insecticides where domestic farm animals can lick them in passing.

6. Burn empty bags which contained insecticide materials: arsenical containers must be burned in open air, with care to avoid exposure of persons or animals to fumes. Bury unused, discarded materials at least a foot below the surface and away from water supply or drainage.

7. Guard against leaving residues of insecticides on harvested products.

BEST HAY IS CUT AT CORRECT STAGE

Here are some "cutting guides" hay specialists advise for producing high-grade hay of various kinds.

Cut alfalfa when from one-tenth to one-fourth in bloom.

When it blooms sparingly, cut before the lower leaves begin to turn yellow and fall.

Cut red clover and alsike at the half-bloom stage.

Cut annual lespedeza when it is in full bloom and sericea lespedeza when it is from 10 to 12 inches high.

Cut soy beans when the beans are half to three-quarters developed or before; cowpeas when the first pods begin to ripen and turn yellow.

Cut timothy when it is in full bloom or before and Johnson grass when the heads are just coming out of the boot; other grasses, such as redtop and orchard grass, not later than full bloom.

Bro. Rube Bearden of Maplesville preached two very inspiring sermons to a good crowd at Mulberry Sunday and Sunday night.

Our pastor, Rev. R. W. Stuckey, is improving and expects to come home some time this week from the hospital.

We will meet Sunday morning at Mulberry at 9:30 a.m. and have a short Sunday School period and then the entire Sunday School will go to Bethsalem Church for Sunday School and the rest of the day there.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Camp and family of Montgomery were visiting in our community Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Quinton White and Gwen of Wetumpka and Melvin White of Wright Field, visited their parents here, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. White, last week.

Little Ronny Jones of Birmingham is visiting her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Jones, and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wells here

Miss Alma Tucker of Birmingham spent the week end here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Tucker.

Mr. and Mrs. Arville Wright and family of Birmingham spent the week end here with the former's sister, Mrs. Jessie Summers.

Miss Ethel Lee Griffin of San Diego, Calif., is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Griffin, here.

Honeybees work hard for farmers and also for victory gardners and other city people. In an orchard, bees pollinate the blossoms, thus providing a good set of fruit. Every clover field requires plenty of bees to give a high production of seed. For more than 50 crops, the honeybee helps farmers meet production goals. Victory gardeners, too, get more abundant crops of cucumbers, pumpkin, melon and other garden vegetables and fruits when bees are plentiful.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Our faith in answered prayer was strengthened the other day when we read the story of Rickenbacker and his crew, who were forced to land on the bosom of the far away Pacific. For days they drifted and their food supply was about exhausted. They held a prayer meeting and with the faith of one who believes in God, they prayed for food supplies. An hour after their prayers were uttered, a sea gull came and lighted on the head of Rickenbacker. Nervously, and yet cautiously, he caught his hand on to the feet of the gull and seized them, with a firm grip threw it over his head. Then prayers were answered and they had food. With the exception of one who have faith in God, he never had to Rickenbacker. God hears prayer and He sent the bird to the sea to help him to life and safety. Ask and ye shall receive.

On entering the studio of a great painter, a visitor saw a ruby, a sapphire and an emerald on the easel She was astonished beyond measure that such valuable gems should be exposed, and when the painter saw her amazement he said to her, "Madam, I keep those gems there to tone up my eyes, when I am working on delicate colors. Often my sense of color becomes weakened and when I look upon these I can go on with accuracy." Often do we see a great musician catching his sounds from a tuning instrument, so that he may bring his strings to a concert pitch. You may be ever so careful about your way of life, but my friends, you need the teachings of Jesus Christ, ever before your vision, that you may bring your conduct up to His ideals. Study to show thyself an approved workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Keep your life tuned by the ideals of the Man of Galilee.

When I was a lad my mother kept a bunch of geese in the back yard. They spent their time waddling aimlessly about the yard and place. They ate all that they could find and honked to each other in contentment. I noticed that in the fall and in the spring these geese were a bit disturbed when the wild geese would fly over in droves, honking to each other and calling to the geese on the ground. On hearing the call of the geese going over in perfect formation, our geese would flop their useless wings as if to fly, but we knew that they were not going to follow. Soon they would be waddling around, eating and gabbling as they had always done. Sometimes I have wondered if my soul is not like these geese, too much at ease, too much indulged, to heed the call of a cultured soul to the heights above. Listen to that call that comes to us out of the heavens. It is the call of God, it is the call of spirits that are flying high. Why spend our time gabbling and eating, when the horizons are up there.

New Horizons

FOR THE FARMS OF TOMORROW

The future is bright for more and better telephone service for people living in rural areas.

Plans are already under way for resuming our rural telephone expansion program which was suspended in 1942 when equipment and materials became more urgently needed for the armed forces. Surveys are being made to determine the needs and to provide the facts from which we can carry out plans for expansion of farm telephone service.

The Southern Bell Company's farm telephone expansion program is part of the Bell System's nation-wide program for rural telephone extension when materials become available again. This program calls for expenditure of a hundred million dollars during a three-to-five year period and will be an important factor in providing jobs for the thousands of telephone men now in the armed forces.

Kathleen Norris Says:

The War Wife and Her Lover

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"About a year ago, she had a friendship with a painter we might call Morgan."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

CAROL BROWN is 31, beautiful, affectionate, mother of two small boys. When Fred Brown went away to war two years ago she suffered all the pangs of loneliness, fear, grief that any woman could know. She wrote him loyally, and after two years she writes him still.

Carol is not a sociable woman. She studied painting for many years, works hard at her art still, fills her time with her books, garden, studio hours and children.

About a year ago she had a friendship with a painter we might call Morgan. Morgan had a charming artistic place about 30 miles away from Carol's town, and presently Carol and the children began to spend week-ends there. Other artists, writers, newspaper folk did also, and for some months, she writes me, everything was open and aboveboard. Then she and Morgan became lovers.

But Morgan evidently, however much a lover, is canny, too. When Fred Brown wrote that he was coming home, minus a leg, Morgan got married. He married a young and dashing newspaper woman, and at 41 has apparently settled down to complete domesticity.

What this meant to Carol she doesn't say. She briefly outlines her problem to me in a long letter of which this is part.

"Fred was so far away, and everything that belonged to our old happy life was so completely changed, that I think I lost my bearings," says her letter. "The crowd that went to Morgan's is naturally a rather free-thinking crowd, and they accepted our relationship without any question.

Husband Is Devoted.

"My problem is this. I love my husband, and to think of his coming home crippled breaks my heart, for Fred was a great walker and loved nothing so much as country outings with me and the children. My one wish is to compensate him for all that he has been through. He is a most affectionate man, passionately devoted to me and to the boys.

"Shall I tell him honestly all that has occurred? If I do, it must be immediately, for putting it off will infinitely complicate matters. He may resent it deeply; he may wish to avenge it by a divorce and the separation of me and my sons. His older sister is devoted to the boys, she has but one child, a half-grown girl; she would be delighted to add boys of 5 and 7 to her family, and have Fred all to herself.

"If I do not tell him, sooner or later someone may. I will have to live with that sword of Damocles hanging over my head from day to day. It does not seem just to me that for a few months of indiscretion, which never meant to me what any week of the long happy years with Fred has meant, should cost me so dear. I may say that my mother and my sister-in-law have no suspicion of the state of affairs; they do not like Morgan's crowd, that crowd is many miles away, and they have always rather studiedly ignored my friendship with it. Fred does not know these people well, either. Please advise me of the simplest course that will mean happiness and security for us all."

This last phrase almost makes me smile, although the situation is any thing but funny. It is tragic to think of the devoted husband and father coming home to this news, and in his first agony of realization he may well threaten to take legal action. But I don't believe he will. I think that after a little, while he will appreciate the boys' position, he will see that they have rights, that it is all-important to keep the surface smooth and the family intact.

Regretfully tell him the truth. . . .

No Safety in Secrecy.

Ordinarily I would advise secrecy. I would advise Carol to put this whole affair from her life and her thoughts, as if it had never happened. But since her intimacy with Morgan was pretty well known to quite a large group of persons, there is no safety in concealment now. A blackmailer might appear at any moment, after Fred had been happily restored to his family, and wreck the whole scene.

Far wiser to simply and regretfully tell him the truth. Tell him that it was the result of association with persons who had themselves no particular respect for conventions, that it is all over, and Morgan married. Ask him to think of the boys, of Carol's own love for him, before he takes any action. He'll decide upon forgiveness.

For a long while things won't be the same, of course. But after while happiness will come back. Loving consideration for him, wisdom in handling the boys, clever management of your affairs will all help, and human hearts being as mutable as they are, time will work its usual miracle.

But it would be wonderful if lonely service wives could see some statistics upon the outcome of illicit love affairs, hasty divorces, disruption of homes and scattering children. Perhaps one reason why all the books on morality preach fidelity and self-control is because they are the only secret of successful and happy marriage.

PAINFUL DILEMMA

The unfaithful wife of the absent serviceman has become a familiar theme. In this article, however, a rather unusual situation is considered. Carol Brown loves her husband and her children, and wants nothing more than quiet and virtuous family life. When the war took Fred away, however, Carol was so lonely and miserable that she tried to get what solace she could from friends. Before she was really aware of it, she was seeing a man named Morgan, an artist like herself, more and more often. These visits developed into an "affair" lasting for months.

All during this period, however, she continued writing affectionate and, in a sense, sincere letters to her husband. He never suspected that anything was amiss. Now he is coming home, crippled. Carol is anxious to have him back, and to try to resume life as it used to be. This ugly episode with Morgan, however, clouds the future. While Morgan has ended their meetings, and can be depended upon to keep silent, many other people know about them, and a disclosure some day is always possible, perhaps likely. Carol doesn't know what to do—whether to confess, and trust to Fred's understanding and generosity, or whether to try to conceal everything, and live in constant fear.

RIGHT WAY TO COOK EGGS

Unless eggs are properly cooked, they lose some of their food value and flavor. So-called "boiled eggs" are best cooked below boiling. Use one pint of almost boiling water for each egg, put the eggs in the water, cover, and set the pan in a warm place where the temperature will fall slowly. Keep the eggs in this water for from five to six minutes for soft-cooked eggs. Allow about 45 minutes for hard-cooked ones, then drop them in cold water. For oven cooking, use between 250 and 300 F.

TRUMAN'S CHOICES MEET APPROVAL

WASHINGTON.—The type of men Mr. Truman is beinging into government is likened by some to Coolidge or Harding, and the assembling personality of his whole regime is being run into that past character niche, especially by bewildered and confused radicals.

It is a bad simile, inaccurate and of no value except for political opposition. You cannot find the personality counterpart of this administration in the past. It is something new.

Look into the first one, John S. Snyder, head of the Jesse Jones financial empire (not considering yet the fresh cabinet men). He is a banker brought in to handle the biggest banking business in the history of the world, the people's $46,000,000,000 RFC and associated lending ventures, which the radical clique wanted to place in the hands of a man who knew nothing of banking.

J. S. Snyder

Nothing like Mr. Snyder happened in the Harding or Coolidge era. Why he was not even president of the First National bank of St. Louis from which Mr. Truman extracted him. He was a reasonably young vice president, with no gray hair, no wrinkles, a clear round open face genial, open-talking. In experience, appearance and every other way, he was about as far from New York banking leadership as you could get and still obtain experience and knowledge. (He did not rate Who's Who.)

First thing Mr. Snyder did also rates only as an obscure paragraph from the press associations. He found six lending agencies under RFC functioning with six separate staffs, costly individual paraphernalia of bureaucracies—by order of law.

STARTS CONSOLIDATION

Mr. Snyder had his staff write a new law consolidating this absurd duplication. The congressional banking committee introduced it. The bill passed the senate unanimously, without objection, Tuesday, and will shortly receive the same approval of the house.

Now it required no superior ability for Mr. Snyder to start out this new way. Any man with a fresh outlook and ordinary common sense might have done it, but in view of the contrary spirit prevailing in Washington for so long, his simple step stood out like a new beacon of hope. Mr. Snyder would be a good man for secretary of the treasury, and I think he will get the job.

Look into Edwin W. Pauley, Truman's leader of the Allied Reparations commission, whose head is being projected into the bear's mouth in Moscow now. Pauley made a million or so in California oil, but he looks like an oil worker. His ham-hand handshake could make your teeth rattle. He is towering in height, but a rather young man as international dealers go—and a sharp oil fields trader.

E. W. Pauley

No one ever saw his likes under Harding or Coolidge, where the choices for such work ran to men like Dwight Morrow, the Morgan partner, and Charlie Dawes, the biggest Chicago Banker.

Mr. Pauley will step higher in this government, probably to Mr. Snyder's job if Snyder goes to treasury.

Or look again into Bob Hannegan, the new postmaster general (beginning July 1) who requires another look in view of his sharply advanced eminence in this new regime. He is second man to Truman now.

R. E. Hannegan

It was Hannegan who brought Pauley in here as treasurer of the Democratic National committee for Roosevelt. They all are of the same stripe, Snyder, Pauley, and Hannegan, aggressive, untired, sharp men from the middle class, hard - knocked, experienced, knowing, earnest.

Hannegan certainly knows more of inside Washington than anyone who has been around here in a long time.

The one characteristic these men have in common is that they want to give good government. I do not know whether they can, but they want to. I am inclined to think they may succeed to unexpected proportions because their minds are not disturbed by idealogies.

They are not reactionary or even conservative. They are liberals, but they do not want to fight, hate, and kill everyone who does not agree with them on every subject.

Light Supper Is Cooling on a Hot Night
(See Recipes Below)

Keep Kitchens Cool

Nothing makes the family's appetite wane quite so quickly as a meal that makes the house uncomfortably warm during hot weather. A cool and comfortable room, set with a table that suggests coolness, will be much more comfortable all the way around.

Mother would do best to plan a meal that is nourishing but not too hearty. The main dish and vegetables may be warm, but dessert and salad should be icy cold to suggest that summer was kept in mind during the planning of the menu.

If the bulk of the actual cooking is done during the cool mornings, then the kitchen can retain some semblance of coolness during the evening hours. Such things as cooking filling for pies, making cookies or cake or cooking vegetables for a salad can be prepared before the sun rises high in the sky and sends the temperature to the highest rungs of the thermometer.

Main entrees, if broiled, will also help during hot weather. They take only a few minutes to cook, like this low-point grill:

Hamburger Grill.
(Serves 6)
1 pound hamburger
½ onion, grated, if desired
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
4 slices bacon
2 large bananas
1 tablespoon lemon juice

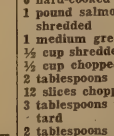
Combine meat, onion, salt and pepper. Mix well. Form into 4 cakes about ½ inch thick. Arrange strips of bacon on broiling rack. Broil slowly until brown, turning when necessary. Drain on unglazed paper while other food broils. Arrange meat cakes on rack. Brush bananas with lemon juice and place alongside meat. Broil until meat is browned. To serve, arrange hamburgers on individual serving plates. Top each with a strip of bacon and place broiled banana slice at each side. Potato chips and tomato cucumber salad may be served with the grill.

Chicken is delectable when cooked a la king, but it's invitingly cool when served molded. Then it can be sliced and served garnished with quartered hard-boiled eggs and tomato wedges:

Moided Chicken a la King.
(Serves 8)
4 tablespoons butter or substitute
¼ cup chopped green pepper
½ cup sliced mushrooms
1 cup milk, scalded
½ cup hot chicken stock
¼ cup chopped pimiento
1 cup diced cooked chicken
4 egg yolks
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water

Melt butter or substitute. Then add green pepper and mushrooms and cook slowly until tender but not browned. Blend in milk, stock, pimiento and chicken. Beat egg yolks, add lemon juice and pour a little of the liquid over the chicken mixture, stirring constantly. Stir egg yolks into the rest of the chicken mixture and cook over boiling water for 5 minutes, still stirring constantly. Remove from heat and add gelatin which has been soaked in cold water for 5 minutes. Turn into a mold and chill until set. Unmold and garnish with hard-cooked eggs quartered, tomato wedges and parsley.

One of the important points in cooking fish is to avoid overcooking. Here is a dish that can be turned out in less than half an hour:



Mackerel With Bacon and Onions.
(Serves 4)
¾ pound cleaned fillets of mackerel
Salt and pepper
1 cup sliced onions
4 tablespoons butter or drippings
½ cup soft bread crumbs
2 slices crisp bacon, broiled

Separate fillets and arrange in greased, shallow baking dish. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Saute onions gently in butter until tender but not browned. Turn out on fish, sprinkle with crumbs and top with bacon. Bake in a hot (400-degree) oven until fish is done and crumbs are browned, about 15 minutes.

Hot evenings sometimes call for hearty main dish salads. Use a good protein food as a base so that it will be nourishing enough even for so-o big appetites. Here are two good suggestions:

Baked Bean and Egg Salad.
(Serves 6)
1 medium sized can of baked beans
4 sweet pickles, chopped
3 hard-cooked eggs, sliced (reserve 6 slices for garnishing)
½ cup chopped celery
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
3 to 4 tablespoons mayonnaise

Chill beans until cold. Add the remaining ingredients in order given, mixing carefully. Arrange on nests of lettuce and garnish with sliced, hard-cooked egg and parsley.

Salmon Salad.
(Serves 6 to 8)
6 hard-cooked eggs
1 pound salmon, cooked or canned, shredded
1 medium green pepper, chopped
½ cup shredded cabbage
½ cup chopped celery
2 tablespoons grated onion
12 slices chopped sweet pickle
3 tablespoons prepared yellow mustard
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 teaspoons sugar
1 tablespoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

After salmon is shredded mix with chopped egg whites, green pepper, cabbage and celery, grated onion and pickles. Mash the egg yolks and blend well with mustard, vinegar, sugar, salt and pepper. Combine the two mixtures, blending thoroughly. Serve in cups of lettuce, garnished with radishes and whole slices of pickle.

French Fried Shrimp.
(Serves 6)
2 cups corn flakes
1 egg, slightly beaten
2 cups cooked jumbo shrimp

Roll corn flakes into fine crumbs. Dip shrimp in egg and then in cornflake crumbs. Fry in deep fat until brown (365 degrees F.) Serve plain or with tartar sauce.

Perfect Salads: You'll like oranges sliced or sectioned and rolled in shredded coconut on lettuce cups.

Peach or apricot halves placed on top of shredded cabbage which is rich in vitamin C is a delightful salad for hot weather eating. Blend mayonnaise with peach juice or sour cream for a really smooth dressing.

Odd bits of meat go well riding the tops of vegetable salads. Shred or cube them and extend with bits of cheese, if necessary.

Thousand Island dressing which is so excellent on quarters of chilled lettuce is even better if it has a few wedges of meaty ripe olives in it.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the order, to permit food and water to enter the city. Lord Runcin, high British official on the Amgot, approved of Joppolo's plans. The Major found out that the American generosity was responsible for a troublesome black market. To stop this condition he placed a ceiling on all prices. He also barred troops from the city.

CHAPTER XVII

The Lieutenant said: "Sure he was. It's easy to see he was. And if General Marvin ever lays eyes on this Information copy, it'll be just too bad for the Major."

"Yes, sir," said the Technical Sergeant, to be on the safe side.

Lieutenant Butters said: "Here, you file these, I'll take care of the Information copy."

"Yes, sir," the Technical Sergeant said, taking the copies.

The Lieutenant said: "That Marvin trimmed me down once for something I didn't do. I never have liked him. I don't know this Major, but I think it would be a shame if he caught a trimming just for this."

"Yes, sir," the Technical Sergeant said. Then he frowned and added: "You aren't going to get me in trouble, are you, sir, like when that letter to Colonel Norris from the P.R.O. got 'lost'?"

"No, don't worry," the Lieutenant said.

But the Technical Sergeant did worry for several days, until he got up the courage to ask the Lieutenant: "Sir, what did you ever do about that Information copy I made for General Marvin? You didn't throw it away, did you? Colonel Norris is liable to ask me about it."

"I wish I had thrown it away," Lieutenant Butters said. "I didn't have the guts. I put it in the courier pouch for Algiers. You know how much stuff we've been losing on that run. I thought maybe—"

The Technical Sergeant, relieved of his worry, smiled and said: "It might get lost accidentally on purpose?"

Mayor Nasta had just come out from his daily repentance before Sergeant Borth. He walked across the way to the broad sidewalk in front of the Palazzo. Every day knots of people gathered on that sidewalk, some just to pass the time of day, some to air their perennial complaints, some to get in touch with the town's mean little lawyers, whose office was that sidewalk.

Mayor Nasta walked up to one such knot. There were about ten people, and he found that they were discussing the war.

He waited for his chance, and said: "I got some news from the interior yesterday afternoon."

Mercurio Salvatore the crier was so far gone in boldness that he said: "We have no desire for news from the one who is no longer Mayor."

Mayor Nasta remembered the time when he would have put the crier in jail for a whole year for saying something like that, but now he said: "This news came from the son of your friend Afronti, the noisy cartman. The boy deserted on the first day of the invasion and he is now here. Perhaps you know him. He is an honest boy."

The Mayor's poison was beginning to take hold. "If that is the case," said the lazy Fatta, who was to be found on this stretch of sidewalk every morning, "if that is the case, what did he say that was so interesting?"

"He said that our friends the Germans are mounting a counter-attack."

"There is nothing new in that," said Father Pensovecchio. "They have counterattacked before. They counterattacked near Vicinamare and it did them no good. They were thrown back. They will be thrown back again."

"Not this time," said Mayor Nasta. "This time they will employ five fresh divisions. They have the crack 29th Panzers and the Pilsener Division. These are good troops. This time they will not be thrown back. They intend to push the Americans into the sea."

The lazy Fatta, who had no sense about the news, said: "When will this attack come? I think I will go to the hills."

Mayor Nasta looked very important, as he used to in the old days. "I should not tell you this," he said, "but the attack will begin on the morning of the twenty-third, at four o'clock in the morning. You can expect the Americans to be pushed into the sea between the twenty-fifth and the twenty-eighth."

The impressionable ones were beginning to believe him. Laura Sonino, the unmarried one, who stood around on this sidewalk in the belief that she might catch a husband that way, said: "The twenty-third, that is next Wednesday."

But Mercurio Salvatore, who had been treated well by the Americans, refused to believe that they were leaving. "I do not believe it," he said. "The Americans will stop the attack." Even the crier was now willing to believe that there was going to be an attack. All he would not believe was that the Germans would succeed.

Mayor Nasta said: "The Americans will not stop it. The Americans may be friendly, but they are not good fighters."

Margherita, the formidable wife of Craxi, said with a threatening look: "Liar!"

But Mayor Nasta said: "This is not my opinion. This is the opinion of the son of Afronti, the noisy cartman. You know the boy. You know that he is honest. He says that the Americans are timid in battle. He says that our own troops could even beat the Americans."

Mercurio Salvatore, the crier, was reduced to saying: "I do not believe it."

Mayor Nasta said: "It is true. This boy fought in Tunisia. He says that at the place called El Guettar the Americans did not press their attack, he says that they behaved like frightened men and were defeated. The British can fight, perhaps, but not the Americans."

The formidable Margherita said: "It is a dirty lie," but there was no anger in her voice, it was nearly drained of conviction.

This man Nasta was a very persuasive man. He had persuaded himself into office, and he had persuaded the people into fear of him, and now it was easy for him to persuade them to mistrust the Americans.

Mayor Nasta said: "The son of Afronti told me that in the interior

This man Nasta was a very persuasive man.

the Americans behaved themselves very badly. They were generous to us along the coast because they had to have a beachhead, but in the interior they have been different. Negro troops have raped seven Italian girls. There has been much looting."

The lazy Fatta said: "I hear that the Americans looted the beautiful house of Quattrocchi right here in Adano. They did much damage."

Mayor Nasta said: "Yes, that is true, I talked with Quattrocchi yesterday."

The formidable Margherita said: "What happened?" This was something close to home, and she considered anything that happened in Adano more or less her personal property, to use as gossip.

Mayor Nasta said: "The American vandals destroyed four hundred and seventy thousand lira worth of stuff in Quatrocchi's house. Heirlooms, paintings, sculpture, glassware. They said that Italian art is degenerate; they did all this because they wish to impose American ideas of art on Italy. That is what Quattrocchi told me the American Major had told him."

Mercurio Salvatore, the crier, said: "That I will not believe. The Mister Major is our friend." The crier was annoyed enough to say this in very nearly his crying voice. He spoke loudly enough to be heard inside the Palazzo.

"Quiet," Mayor Nasta said. "He will hear you and punish you."

"Why should he punish me?" Mercurio cried. "I am defending him."

"He is unpredictable," Mayor Nasta whispered. "You will see. I must be going now," he said, bowing to the circle, as if the fact that it was beginning to grow embarrassed him. "Good day," he said, "do not forget the twenty-third."

Each day when he came out from his repentance before Sergeant Borth, Mayor Nasta would go across to the sidewalk in front of the Palazzo, and he would approach a different group, and he would tell them pretty much the same thing.

Sergeant Borth allowed this to go on for several days, because Sergeant Borth was a careful worker. He waited until he was sure of all his facts. He had his informers trap Mayor Nasta into new exaggerations and accusations. He made sure that the son of Afronti the noisy cartman had not deserted. He checked with Intelligence at IX Corps to make sure that the Germans were not expected to counter-attack on the twenty-third. He even went so far as to check with Captain Purvis.

When he was ready, Sergeant Borth went to Major Joppolo. "Major," he said, "we've got to put Nasta away."

The Major said: "What's he done?"

"He's been planting rumors against us. I hate to admit it, but he's done it very systematically and very skillfully."

"What kinds of rumors?"

"Oh, all kinds. He has quite a few people thinking that the Germans are going to put on a major counterattack next week. He even has some of them believing that you haven't been doing right by certain young ladies in this town."

Major Joppolo blushed. "That isn't true," he said.

"I know," Borth said. "I checked into it. But they tell me the Mister Major could make time if he wanted to."

"Cut it out," the Major said.

"That's what they tell me," Borth said. "They say these particular girls don't smell of fish, but their old man knows a good fish when he sees it."

"Cut the kidding," the Major said, and that echo was in his voice. He changed the subject quickly. "When are you going to arrest Nasta?"

"In the morning, when he comes in for his daily worship."

"Okay," the Major said. "Let's keep him in the prisoners of war cage for a few days, and not send him to Africa till we've questioned him a bit. I'm sort of glad to have him put away."

The next morning Mayor Nasta was somewhat surprised to see, besides Sergeant Borth in his office, two other men wearing brassards marked M.P. He said, as suavely as ever: "Good morning, Mister Sergeant."

"And what crime would Mayor Nasta like to repent this morning?" Borth asked.

"Is it not the Mister Sergeant's turn to pick a crime?" the Mayor asked.

"Perhaps it is, perhaps it is. Well, let's see. This morning I think Mayor Nasta will repent the crime of not having made good use of his freedom. He will repent the crime of having talked against the Americans."

Mayor Nasta turned pale. Borth stood up.

"He will repent the crime of having invented false rumors, of having told the gullible people here in Adano that the Germans were planning a counterattack for next week."

Mayor Nasta turned his head and looked at the door. Borth motioned to the M.P.'s to step into it, and they did.

"He will also repent having said slanderous and false things about Major Joppolo. Also he will be very sorry that he lied about the son of the cartman Afronti."

Mayor Nasta was white as a sheet. "Lies! They are lies!" he said.

Borth said: "Mayor Nasta is excitable this morning. And he had grown so calm about his repentances. Why is he excitable this morning?"

Mayor Nasta was excitable because he knew he was caught. "Lies," he shouted. "My enemies have been lying against me."

Borth said: "Is this a lie? Is it a lie that you said yesterday morning, before fifteen people on the sidewalk in front of the Palazzo: 'The Americans are such cowards that they had to be pushed from their transports into landing barges when they came here'? Is it a lie that you said . . ." And Sergeant Borth repeated word for word ten sentences that Nasta had said, as informers reported them. Sergeant Borth had a very good memory, and he enjoyed deflating this man, and he made a very terrifying show of it for Mayor Nasta.

Then Borth said to the two M.P.'s in English: "Take him away, boys. He's getting noisy."

The M.P.'s took Nasta by both arms. Borth said: "I'm going to miss your daily visits, Mayor Nasta. I hope you will come to see me when you get out, I mean if you get out."

Mayor Nasta said stubbornly: "You will be sorry."

The M.P.'s took Nasta away to the prisoner of war cage.

Mayor Nasta did not make a very good start in the cage. The Americans had a forty-year-old, Italian-speaking Top Sergeant in charge of the guard. The first time Mayor Nasta saw the Top Sergeant walking in the enclosure, he rushed up to him and said: "This is a mistake. I should not have been imprisoned. It was all a mistake."

"Is that so?" the Top Sergeant said in a slow, Brooklynese Italian. "You are another mistake? We have several mistakes here. All mistakes here must clean the latrine. You are our newest mistake, so you will have the privilege of cleaning the latrine this week."

Ice cubes frozen from left-over fruit juices are a distinct addition to summer drinks in both flavor and color.

With most home canners, tomatoes top the vegetable list because they are easily and safely canned in a boiling-water-bath canner. The canned tomatoes store up vitamins A and C for winter and they may be used many ways for variety in meals.

While doing your periodic cleaning, don't forget to clean door knobs, light fixtures, lamp and ash tray stands, and all flower containers.

During the time milk is plentiful, serve more foods cooked with milk, more cottage cheese, ice cream, buttermilk, and drink more milk.

Jar rings for home canning this year, though still made of synthetic and reclaimed rubber, will have better sealing quality generally and less tendency to impart off-flavors to food.

Behind Your Bonds

Lies the Might of America

PICKLES

Industrially great as is Pittsburgh, it demands recognition, too, as the home of one of the nation's greatest food processors. Heinz pickles and other vegetable products in glass and metal containers are sold throughout the world. From a small brick building, this business has grown to require 26 major plants and 150 branches. The small sums housewives pay for its items everywhere contribute to national prosperity and help assure War Bond payments. U. S. Treasury Department

Behind Your Bonds

Lies the Might of America

ORANGES AND GRAPEFRUIT

Florida's great variety of products help to keep the people of this and other nations vigorous. Fifty million boxes of oranges and grapefruit, its best known products, valued at 68 million dollars, come annually from the state's 33,000 groves. More than 500 million dollars is invested in them. This business employs 110,000 men and contributes to the full payment of War Bonds through the resources it adds to the nation. U. S. Treasury Department

Where they are and How they are

Lawrence E. Jones, electrician's mate, second class, has been advanced while serving aboard an escort carrier in the Pacific.

Jones is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Jones, Route 2, Verbena, Ala. He enlisted in the navy in January 1942, and has taken part in numerous engagements, including the Battle for Leyte Gulf and the invasion of Tarawa, during his 26 months at sea.

J. Leslie Bailey, baker second class, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Bailey of Maplesville, Ala., says it's not all cakes and bread for a baker in the Navy, explaining that on days that he does not have duty in the bakery he and the men double as ammunition passers during general quarters.

Bailey who enlisted in the Navy nearly five years ago, wears the American Defense Ribbon with a star, and the Asiatic Pacific and American Theatre Ribbons as well as campaign stars for the Alutians, Gilbert, and Marshalls, the Kavieng strike, the Marianas, Palau, Iwo Jima and now the operations in the Ryukyu Islands.

T-5 Daniel W. Hudman, son of Mrs Clara Hudman, Verbena, has been admitted to the AAF Regional and Convalescent Hospital, Miami District, for treatment and rest.

Second Lt. Charles E. Thomas, bombardier on a B-24 Liberator Bomber has completed his final overseas training at Gowen Field, Boise, Idaho, and will soon be leaving for combat duty.

Our wishes for safety and an early return go with Lt. Thomas on his overseas mission. He is the son of Mr and Mrs J. S. Thomas of this city. They also have another son, Jack, EM 3-C USN who is now serving in North West Africa.

Earl Ellis, MM 1-C and Mrs Ellis from Corpus Christi, Texas, are spending Mr Ellis leave here with Mr and Mrs John T. Ellis.

M-Sgt and Mrs Morris Johnson and and little daughter, Jennifer, returned to Birmingham Sunday after spending a week here with Mr and Mrs Perry Johnson and other relatives. They will spend a week in Birmingham with Mrs Johnson's parents and relatives before returning to Little Rock, Ark., where Sgt. Johnson is stationed.

Lt. John Higgins U.S.N. will leave Sunday after a few days spent here with his wife and mother: Lt. Higgins has seen combat in the South Pacific for the past few months.

Cpl. James Duke Heflin was home the past week for a visit with his parents. He left Monday morning for Daytona Beach, Fla., where he was to report for duty.

Noel Morgan S 2-C who is stationed at Mare Island, Calif., is spending a few days leave here with relatives and friends.

Pfc. Williard Aubrey Cox is at home with an honorable discharge from the U. S. Army after having just returned from thirty-two months in the Pacific.

He was a member of the 43rd division which fought in Guadalcanal, New Georgia, New Guinea and the Philippines. He has been awarded the Infantryman Combat Badge, Good Conduct Medal, Asiatic Pacific Theatre Ribbon, three Bronze Stars, Philippine Liberation with one Bronze Star.

Mr. Cox entered the Service in February, 1942.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion," thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

LOOK INTO this 2-way help

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

PATROLMEN CAPTURE AUTOMOBILE THIEF IN RECORD TIME

Tuesday morning a Taxi was stolen from a stand in Columbiana with a little boy in it. State Highway Patrolmen were notified and the alarm went out over the State. Local Patrolmer, Glenn and Brown, were in Thorsby when they received the message. Knowing that the Shelby County Patrolmen were away from their territory the two patrolmen rushed there to lend their aid. Within less than two hours they had recovered the taxi and the child and placed under arrest Trell McMillan, 28, an ex-convict from Elreno, Ohio. He was placed in the Shelby County Jail at Columbiana.

PILOT CLUB HAS INTERESTING BUSINESS MEETING

On last Tuesday night Mattie Jo Barber was hostess to the Clanton Pilot Club. President Lillian Simpson being absent, 1st Vice-President Ruth S. Waters presided; Sophia L. Jones gave invocation.

This proved to be a very interesting and outstanding business meeting. A great deal of international correspondence was read and voted on as well as many local affairs of the Club

Mable Woods Jones, the Club's latest bride, was presented with a gift from the Club. A salad plate, with delicious cake and fruit punch were the refreshments served to a large percentage of members.

The annual picnic will be on June 26th at Dr. Nix's Camp, Maplesville.

BOARD OF REGISTRARS TO MEET IN JULY

The Chilton County Board of Registrars will meet for five days, beginning July 2nd. Those eligible to register are asked to take notice and be on hand to register at that time.

Local Quartet Wins First Place In State Contest

The N. F. A. Quartette from the Chilton County Training School captured first place in the State N. F. A. Musical contest which was held at Tuskegee Institute during the one-day session of the State N. F. A. Convention on June 14, 1945.

The State N. F. A. Convention was very inspiring for all participants and the prospects, for valuable prizes to be won, facilities for leadership training and the production of quality farm produce in the future, were very bright.

Mr. A. Floyd, State Teacher Trainer for Agricultural Education and Mr. F. T. McQueen, assistant, were very much pleased with the work done in the convention.

The Chilton County Training School N. F. A. Chapter's local secretary, Ocie L. McBryde was elected to the State office of State Vice-Preesident. Our quartette will contest in the sectional meeting which will be held in Atlanta , Ga., on June 27, 1945. Let us give the boys a hand by encouraging them to do better work whether in contests, classroom or in the field.

We were honored in our convention by having Mr. Potts, our new Director of Agriculture at Tuskegee Institute to speak so encouraging to the N. F. A. boys.

Again we were honored by having Mr. R. W. Montgomery, Mr. T. L. Faulkner and company, District Supervisors of Agricultural Education, to sit in our meetings. Mr. R. E. Cammack, State Supervisor of Agricultural Education, also the man who stands at the "rat-hole" with a barrel stave installed the State N. F. A. officers for the new year.—B. T. Whittington, Local N.F.A. Advisor and Teacher of Vocational Agriculture.

DR. JOHN D. EILAND RETURNED HOME AFTER VISIT TO WEST

The many friends of Dr. John D. Eiland are glad to see that he has returned from his trip out west.

About ten days ago Dr. Eiland with his wife and daughter left for a short visit with their sons who are stationed at the Army Post at Kingham, Ariz., where Major John D. Eiland, Jr is second in command. Sgt. Bill Eiland, their youngest son, returned with Dr. Eiland and daughter for a short visit at home. Mrs. Eiland will continue her visit for two weeks or more.

Dr. Eiland reports a most pleasant trip both ways. The only trouble being the Doctor says, is the song you hear in every restaurant, "Sorry but we haven't got it."

7th - Day Adventists Need More Clothing For Relief Work

The Clanton Seventh-day Adventist church is continuing its drive for War-Relief Clothing. Large stocks on hand have been sent to war stricken areas and more clothing is urgently needed.

Seventh-day Adventists have established two large war-relief clothing storehouses—one at San Francisco to supply the needs of the war-devastated peoples of the Far East and the Pacific Islands, the other at New York to aid the threadbare war victims of Europe an Northern Africa. In the last few weeks the U. S. Government permitted shipping space for relief supplies and the New York storehouse has been completely emptied of many tons of goods.

Church officials, from the Adventist headquarters at Washington, have urged by wire that all churches immediately solicit their communities for clothing. Ladies of the Dorcas Society of the Clanton church are busy gathering, repairing and packing clothing. They are anxious that any surplus clothing may be given to them to be sent on to the needy war-stricken people. Please contact any Seventh-day Adventist and garments will be called for.

Pieces of felt cut from old hats and glued to the bottoms of vases, lamps and ashtrays, form splendid table-top protectors.

Where they are and How they are

Odis Rudolph Smith, Seaman 2-C of this city has been admitted to the U. S. Naval Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., for treatment of shrapnel wounds received aboard ship while under fire at Okinawa.

Prior to enlistment in the Navy September 21, 1944, Rudolph was employed as a butcher here. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Smith.

Sgt. M. D. Foshee, Jr., who has been stationed in Oklahoma City, Okla., for the past several months, is now spending a short furlough here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Foshee, Sr.

Sgt. Foshee is en route to Deleware where he will receive further orders.

Corporal Douglas C. (Billy) Smith from Keesler Field, Miss., was here Saturday evening with relatives.

CLANTON MAN HELPS BUILD OKINAWA AIR BASES

T-5 Marvin Headley, who is with an Aviation Engineer Battalion on Okinawa, is helping build air bases by operating his bulldozer. They are now constructing the biggest air base in the world next to the island of England.

As a member of the fast building aviation engineers units, T-5 Headley is crating an AAF center on Japan's from step from which the knockout blow will be launched by American Forces.

Pvt. Carl E. Culp, husband of Mrs. Ruby E. Culp of this city, has returned from service outside the continental United States and is now being processed through the Army Ground and Service Forces Redistribution Station in Miami Beach, Fla.

Pvt. Culp served 11 months as an orderly in the Southwest Pacific Theatre of Operations.

Sgt. Robert W. Sumner, who was a Prisoner of War in Germany for six months, has arrived at Camp Patrick Henry, Va., and expects to be home soon.

We just received a nice letter from Braxton Bates, Rdm. 3-C, who is with the U.S. Navy in the Pacific. He said that he had intended writing us for some time, but hadn't gotten around to it, until he received three copies of the News, and then he just had to write to let us know how much he enjoyed those papers.

"Those county papers are really morale boosters," he says, "And the comic section is simply swell. No matter how tough the sailors, soldiers and Marines are, they still enjoy reading the comics more than any other reading material."

(Some of you folks might take a hint from this and send your overseas serviceman a comic book occasionally.)

Bates says that he has been lucky enough to meet two of his relatives since he has been in the Pacific. He met his brother, T-Sgt. Oscar Bates, who is now in Lawson General Hospital in Atlanta, and his brother-in-law, Lamar Edwards RM 3-C.

S 1-C of Thorsby, Ala., and James A. Jones, S 1-C of Verbena, Ala., Thomas T. Bates, Seaman First Class, Route Two, Clanton, Ala., Cecil D. Jones are serving with the Navy's Utility Squadron Seven in the Pacific.

Utility Squadron Seven is a jack-of-all-trades outfit "somewhere west," a roving group which performs many tasks for the vast Pacific Fleet. Its pilots and air crew men fly single engine aircraft today and twin engine jobs tomorrow.

Carey Earl Kelley, gunner's mate, third class, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. Z. Kelley, Route Three, Clanton, has took part in many actions, including Okinawa and Iwo Jima.

A graduate of Verbena High School, Kelley received recruit and service school training in San Diego, Calif., and was assigned to a light cruiser in the Pacific in August, 1943.

A brother, Joseph, also is a gunner's mate, third class, in the U. S. Navy.

Onions that sprout in the kitchen at this season should not be discarded. The tender green sprouts offer a colorful and flavorful pick-up for spring salads and many other dishes. Cut the sprouts in small pieces and add to salad greens, deviled eggs, white sauce, cooked vegetables or stews. Cut away the soft part but the rest is still good to save and use.

Honey may be used cup for cup instead of sugar for canning or cooking up to one-half of the sweetening called for. If it is measured in a greased or moist cup, it will pour easily. If honey granulates, put the container in a bowl of warm water until the crystals are melted. When baking a dough or batter containing honey, it is best to use a low temperature, between 300 and 325 degrees Fahrenheit.

HIGHWAY PATROLMEN PICK UP TWO BOYS AND STOLEN AUTO

Local highway patrolmen last Thursday placed under arrest two youths and a stolen automobile, the boys giving their names as Tommie Oaks and Collins Guin, each 16 years old and from Bessemer. They had stolen a big Buick automobile belonging to a negro at Bessemer, and on their way down had broken into the Jemison school building and sacked everything they figured worth while. When caught the boys each had on pretrip trimmed band uniforms with caps to match, which they had taken from the school building. They had fountain pens, two radios, 60 records, half a loaf of bread and other articles. They were brought to Clanton and placed in jail, charged with burglary and grand larceny. Glenn and Brown, local Highway Patrolmen, made the arrests.

National Farm Safety Week July 22nd

MacArthur Braves Fire on Borneo; Predict Another Bumper Harvest; Pare Army Budget to 39 Billion

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Taking off time from arduous duties in the Pacific, 2nd marine division vets stage mud fight in rest camp, with the game calling for one side to put the other out of the gooshy pit. Boys will be boys, so rugged marine in foreground tries to hold opponent under mud.

PACIFIC:
'Mac's' Show

"He'll do for me!"

Thus spoke toughened Australian vets from Tobruk and El Alamein upon seeing swank Gen. Douglas MacArthur swagger up a battered macadam beach road to the front of a column exploiting an Allied landing in British North Borneo.

Per usual, "Mac" was the whole show during his inspection of the operations, which further cut off the Japs from the material resources of their early conquests. As cool as a cucumber, the general stood his ground during an exchange of small arms fire while his aides dived for cover, and his shirt remained dry while those of his companions dripped from tropical sweat.

With Australians heading the charge inland after heavy U. S. and Aussie aerial and naval bombardment had driven the Japs from beach positions, Allied troops were well on their way to conquest of the third biggest island in the world, with the latest landing supplementing a previous invasion of the southeastern coast.

Emergency Powers

Quickened by the destructive American aerial raids on Japan and the gradual U. S. advance to the home islands, the embattled empire's powers - that - be called upon the enemy diet (parliament) to relinquish its powers to the war cabinet for government by decree during "the most critical situation in the history of the nation."

Although Emperor Hirohito himself supported the move, diet members debated the measure with vigor, seeking to assure themselves that any surrender of authority was only of a temporary nature. As a sop, Premier Suzuki declared that the diet would set up a committee to confer with the cabinet on war measures.

Designed to permit the cabinet to act quickly to relieve damage caused by Allied operations, the government's program coincided with the establishment of independent administrations in all of the home islands in the event of their isolation during forthcoming campaigns.

CROP OUTLOOK:
'Above Average'

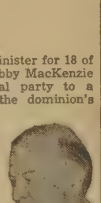
Because most of the intended acreage will be planted and early season gains have not been offset by recent bad weather, the U. S. can look forward to another bumper food harvest in 1945, the department of agriculture reported.

Volume of crops is expected to be above average" despite one coldest Mays on record, deleterious rains in some sec- being matched by local droughts in the southwest and dry weather in the southeast.

With an indicated winter wheat crop of 729,255,000 bushels and a spring wheat harvest of 287,397,000, the total of 1,084,652,000 bushels would represent the largest ever produced, USDA said. Oats and hay production should be above average and rye output good. A record crop of early Irish potatoes was forecast along with another bumper harvest of fruits and vegetables.

Pushed to the limit whenever weather permitted, the corn crop is two-thirds planted, USDA said, with the grain lacking color in Iowa and other states affected by cold and wetness.

Car Shortage



With winter wheat harvesting well underway and local grain elevators chock full, the southwest is suffering from a critical shortage of freight cars to move the bumper crop. As a result, many farmers have been compelled to dump the wheat on the ground.

Unable to create the usual reserve of from 20,000 to 30,000 freight cars on elevator sidings because of the heavy war traffic, railroads are striving to relieve the transport pinch by pressing gondolas and stock and refrigerator cars into service.

With the redeployment of men and materials through this country for the Pacific war coming on top of the switch of the bulk of transport from the east to the longer west coast lines, the carriers' problems will be especially complex this year.

CANADA:
Election Returns

Canadian Prime Minister for 18 of the last 24 years, stubby MacKenzie King led his Liberal party to a decisive victory in the dominion's general elections, with a coalition of the Independent Liberals assuring his forces of a majority in the parliament of 245 members.

MacKenzie King

Return of King and his party served as a vote of approval for their stand on largely maintaining the dominion's overseas army on a volunteer basis, while John Bracken and his Progressive Conservative forces' comparatively poor showing tended to repudiate their advocacy of conscripting men for the war against the Japanese.

While the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives ran one-two in the heated race, the Cooperative Commonwealth federation trailed far behind, with CCF Chieftain M. J. Coldwell attributing the lag "out of confusion created by the communists."

ARMY BUDGET:
Cut 25%

In a budget that reflected reduced needs following V-E Day, stretching of some expenditures over a period of two years, and conservative contracting in the face of uncertainty over the duration of the Pacific war, Pres. Harry S. Truman called for an appropriation of 39 billion dollars for the war department for the fiscal year ending in June, 1946.

Based upon the reduction of the army from 8,320,000 men to 6,968,000, the new budget is 25 per cent smaller than the current one of 52 billion dollars.

In addition to covering the financing of the war against Japan for the year beginning July 1, the budget also provides for expenditures for munitions and equipment to be delivered through December, 1946, and for heavier types of aircraft due in June, 1947. Whereas contracts for material heretofore have exceeded expenditures, it is now planned they will balance, thus avoiding the creation of huge backlogs in the event of a sudden end to the Pacific conflict.

Test Ultraviolet Lamps in Schools

Control of epidemics of measles, chickenpox and mumps by the installation of germ-killing ultraviolet sky lamps in classrooms is being tried on an experimental basis by the New York State department of health.

The decision to begin the study with some of the large central rural schools was based on the fact that schools of this type, which are a relatively recent development, have been found to play a major role in rural areas in the spread of the communicable diseases of childhood.

Tests to determine the bacterial contamination of the air in representative rooms with and without ultraviolet lights will be made. The ultraviolet light intensity and bactericidal activity of the lamps will also be studied periodically.

EUROPE:
Map Reparations

Use of Germany's resources, both human and material, for restoration of war damage, came to the fore with an American delegation's flight to Moscow to discuss war reparations with Russia and Britain.

Keynoting the U. S. viewpoint before taking off for the Red capital as the American delegation's head, Oil Operator Edwin W. Pauley of Beverly Hills, Calif., declared that the Allies cannot make the same mistake of World War I, of loaning the Germans money to rebuild their industries so as to produce goods in return for reparations.

Asserting that such a policy only enabled the Germans to reestablish their great industrial machine, Pauley said that this time the Allies must seek to divert their energies to other channels, indicating acceptance of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's proposal for converting the country into primarily an agrarian state.

Since Pauley said that the U. S. does not expect to receive appreciable reimbursement for its war costs, heavy American demands are regarded as a trading point for moderating astronomical claims of the other Allies. France alone has asked for reparations totalling 40 billion dollars.

Love at First Sight

To James Augustus Cooper, 101, and Mrs. Julia Westpatet, 62, it is love as first sight, with the old Civil war vet married to the plump little widow in Racine, Wis., after a sixweek romance.

Mr. and Mrs. Cooper sample wedding cake.

Said the new Mrs. Cooper: ". . . . It's lonesome living alone, and besides, he's still very active for his age."

Replied the beaming bridegroom: "You're durn tootin'. I cut 14 trees since yesterday morning. . . . Fourteen children, which my women bore unto me, are dead and buried, but I'm still kickin.' I always say it was the first 100 years that were the hardest."

VET CARE:
Called Inadequate

With a spokesman asserting that the veterans administration presently designed to handle the cases of 5,000,000 men may have to eventually attend to 18,000,000, the American Legion joined with the Veterans of Foreign Wars in calling for general overhauling of the whole bureau to furnish efficient and adequate service.

Chief complaint of both organizations was in the care afforded G.I.s at vet hospitals, with both groups reporting overcrowding, staff shortages, low salaries and red tape in many instances. With care found inadequate in 47 per cent of the centers, standards of vet hospitals only compared with those of state, county and municipal institutions in the localities.

With Gen. Omar Bradley taking over as veterans administrator, the Legion and VFW proposed a comprehensive program for correcting present conditions, asking for increased bed capacity in vet hospitals; more authority for hospital directors to procure sufficient help and supplies; more intelligent segregation of patients to promote speedier recovery; swift and unprejudiced handling of complaints, and replacement of army personnel with civilians or establishment of army personnel on a civilian basis.

BUND:
Chiefs Freed

Sentenced to five years' imprisonment by a federal district court for conspiring to advise members of the organization to evade the draft, 24 officials of the German-American Bund were freed by the Supreme court on the grounds that the government failed to prove their guilt within the meaning of the draft law.

Though the defendants were convicted on charges of conspiracy to distribute copies of a bund command asserting that the selective service law infringed their rights and they should refuse military duty if they could, the high tribunal ruled that the evidence was insufficient to establish their guilt.

Writing a dissenting opinion, Chief Justice Stone declared the conclusion "seems inescapable that petitioners . . . counseled evasion of military service, and that the jury's verdict is therefore sustained by the evidence. . . . "

FARM TRUCKS

The office of surplus property of the department of commerce has announced that periodical surveys will be made throughout the country to determine areas where trucks are urgently needed to prevent impairment of farm production. These areas will be allocated reasonable quantities of available surplus trucks under a sales agreement with dealers that they will resell only to farmers and farm cooperative associations, within the designated areas with required certificates.

Plan Just and Speedy Trials for Nazi Bigwigs

Allied Commission to Handle Cases of High Leaders; Local Officials to Prosecute Minor Offenders.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The legal profession is about to meet the greatest challenge it has ever faced.

The Moscow declaration, published November 1, 1943, and signed by President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin, declares that "those German officers and men and members of the Nazi party" who are responsible for or who have taken a consenting part in "atrocities, evidence of which has been received from authoritative quarters in many countries," will be "tried, judged and punished" according to the laws of those countries.

This same declaration also declares in its final paragraph that "major criminals whose offenses have no particular geographical localization" will be tried and dealt with by "joint decision of the Governments of the Allies."

That is where the United States and the challenge of its legal profession comes in.

The body which will try these "big shots" is an international military tribunal, to be designated by an official title, probably by the time these lines are printed, and it is before this court that a member of the Supreme court of the United States, Associate Justice Robert H. Jackson, chosen as American chief of counsel, will appear as prosecutor. He will act jointly, it is presumed, with the counsels of the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Legal Body Without Precedent

Never in history has such a legal body been convened. Never has such a task as the one it has before it been of such potential significance to the social and political well-being of the peoples of the earth—never, at least, since the day of a certain Roman procurator of Judea in Palestine. Pontius Pilate was unable to face his responsibility, and finding "that he could prevail nothing, but rather that a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands. . . ."

The United States does not intend to wash its hands of the responsibility before it.

There seems to be a welter of confusion as to just what the function of this "military tribunal" is; as to just what, if any, policy has been established by the "Office of the Chief Counsel for the Prosecution of Axis Criminality," which is the title on the letterhead before me. The permanent address of this office is, at this writing, a little uncertain, but it can be reached care of the Pentagon in Washington. Soon it will establish foreign headquarters.

Despite the confusion, this institution has a definite policy and I shall interpret it informally hereunder:

(1) We shall avoid "the law's delay" which so annoyed Hamlet.

My reason for this assumption is the fact that Justice Jackson did not retire from the Supreme court. The fall term of the court begins in October. Already he has made one trip to Europe for the purpose of rounding up key witnesses and documents and is now beginning final preparation for the prosecution. His staff has been assembled for several weeks and he has coordinated the other government agencies interested in war crimes (war department, navy department, Office of Strategic Services, and others). Authority for this action is vested in Executive Order 9547 of May 2, 1945, which named Justice Jackson as American prosecutor.

Jackson himself said when he was appointed: "There will be no delay on the part of the United States, and we think undue delay is itself a failure."

(2) There is no confusion as to United States policy with respect to the type of offender to be tried. Many individual cases have already been prepared, though not yet announced. As I mentioned earlier, what the United States is concerned with is the big shots, that is Jackson's job—to try the men whose offenses are broader than those committed in and against members of any single community. To put it broadly, those charged with crimes against humanity as a whole.

This rules out the persons brought back to the scene of their crimes, the trials of spies and saboteurs which are coming up daily, offenses against American nationals or against Germans, or individual acts of persecution against Jews or others.

In other words, Jackson is after big game and he will not be content to fiddle with minor offenses even if committed by major criminals. His job will be to nail those leaders who are responsible for engineering the whole general criminality of the Nazi-Fascist program. The smaller fry will be taken care of by other legal authorities at the scene of the individual crimes or elsewhere.

Jackson Versed As Prosecutor

Justice Jackson's reputation and his record are a pretty good guarantee that he will not be stumped by any hurdles that international lawyers might try to put in his way. But that does not mean he will "railroad" the accused. He will not let the trials sink below a dignified judicial level. They must be, he says, "trials in fact, not merely trials in name, to ratify a predetermined result." On the other hand, he does not believe that "every step must be taken in accordance with technical common law rules of proof." His record shows that he is a "direct actionist"—he can be expected to pull no punches.

I said this was the greatest challenge the legal profession had ever faced. I said that because upon the manner in which these trials are conducted will depend just how clearly Naziism will be revealed to the people of the world in its true light. These criminals must convict themselves and their philosophies out of their own mouths. They must not be allowed to stand before the world with their testimony and that of their accusers as a background, as martyrs to what Jackson himself calls "farcical judicial trials" which rationalize previously settled opinions. This would destroy the confidence of the people in the whole case for democracy, he believes. Nor must the case against them be presented in such a manner as might give even the skeptical a false suggestion that the enemies of democracy have a vestige of right on their side.

The small but efficient staff which Justice Jackson has selected is worth looking over.

There is Maj. Gen. William Donovan, colorful World War I hero and successful lawyer, now head of the OSS; Sydney Alderman, a distinguished trial lawyer and general solicitor of the Southern Railway; Francis Shea, assistant attorney general and well versed in complicated litigations; Naval Lts. James Donovan and Gordon Dean. Donovan is general counsel of the OSS. Dean, a former assistant attorney general under Jackson when he was head of the department of justice, is a brilliant and successful lawyer who is being transferred from active duty by the navy for the job.

There are no hand-washing Pontius Pilates among them.

The rise in income payments to individuals in the United States from an annual figure of $66,168,000,000 in the prewar year of 1938 to a record high total of $156,794,000,000 in 1944 was extended during the first quarter of 1945, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. Income payments during the first three months amounted to $39,825,000,000 this year as against $37,726,000,000 last year, an increase of 5.6 per cent. Income from every source showed expansion. Salaries and wages rose from $27,357,000,000 to $28,628,000,000, an increase of 4.6 per cent, while dividends and interest rose from $2,454,000,000 to $2,770,000,000, an increase of 12.9 per cent.

Although spending by consumers was at a record high rate during the first quarter, it is evident from preliminary information that consumers' income exceeded spending by an amount sufficient not only to meet taxes but to add to consumers' wartime savings, thus increasing the threat of inflation when peace returns.

Parachutes, Jeeps, Halftracks, Flamethrowers, Will Be Used in Peacetime to Battle Forest Fires

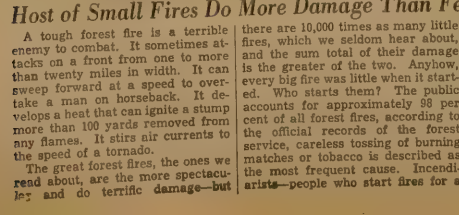
Methods Devised for War Are Being Adapted to Save Timber Resources

The swords of war become the plowshares of peace, and this time Mars has some weapons that are going to come in mighty handy in the never ending battle against forest fires. Some very logical questions are being asked today: Why not use fire-extinguishing bombs to drop on spreading forest fires? Why not use bombers, equipped with precision sights, to aim these bombs? Why not use fire-fighting parachute troops to drop behind "enemy" lines or to transport to fire regions difficult to negotiate by land?

The man who is expected to take charge of this program is David Godwin, a veteran of the forest service, who has been active in anti-fire experimental work for a number of years.

Godwin already has investigated the possibility of dive-bombing forest fires, using bombs which in reality were exploding fire extinguishers. That, however, was a number of years ago, and didn't meet with much success. It was difficult, the experimenters found, to hit the exact spot where the bomb-extinguishers would do the most good, and there was difficulty in covering a sufficiently large area.

Aviation enthusiasts, however, are counting upon effective bomb-sight and other precision instruments to change this situation. As an alternative, they believe there may be great possibilities in the use of helicopters. No doubt a fleet of bombing planes could be used to advantage in blasting a fire out of a forest, especially with ground support from a paratrooper battalion.



The use of parachute-dropped troops to fight forest fires was first tried a few years ago, and they have been seeing action in this capacity ever since. But there never has been enough of them to combat a really big fire. This number can be expanded greatly after the war, and the wartime training of paratroop combat units can bring about the organization of a formidable fire-fighting force.

'Jeep' Will Be Fire Engine.

When it comes to post-war techniques in forest fire fighting, however, it may be not only the use of waves of bombing planes, and parachute troops to augment the present forces. The ubiquitous "jeep"—accustomed to the jungle trails of New Guinea and the difficult terrain of Africa and Italy—is already recommended by professional foresters as highly suitable for service as a miniature fire engine. Likewise, the "walkie-talkie" radio unquestionably will be used by the thousands to keep in contact between fire chiefs, their crewmen, aviation spotters, pilots and paratroopers overhead.

"Half-tracks," which combine automobile speeds with tank and tractor ability to negotiate swamps and rugged land, can serve efficiently as big brother to the jeeps, and for use as bulldozers to scrape fire trail barriers to the progress of flames. Bulldozers already are essential fire-fighting equipment.

Even flame-throwers developed by the chemical warfare service may be called upon for building "back fires," burning out areas in the path of spreading flames. Accompanying them would be men with fire extinguishers, to guard against the back fires getting out of control.

After landing the "smoke jumper" unstraps his parachute and goes to work with his portable fire extinguisher. He carries other tools such as axes and spades. The heavier equipment can be dropped by parachute when necessary.

As soon as a forest ranger spots a fire he radios for the flying fire-fighters. Here a "smoke jumper" is making a "feather bed landing" in the tops of a young coniferous growth.

The paratrooper, however, will doubtless have a glory and a duty all his own. His greatest service will come from the fact that he can get there first. Once a watcher from a fire-tower or from a patrolling plane spots smoke, it need be only a few minutes until a paratrooper can land within 50 or 100 yards of the blaze, and by getting there while the fire is just starting, he will be able in many cases to extinguish it without additional help.

Paratroopers by Hundred.

But when long periods of dryness have rendered the forests highly inflammable and fires spread quickly, a radio summons from the spotters can bring reinforcements in a hurry. A single big plane may bring a score or more paratroopers; a dozen planes could bring them by the hundreds.

With their faces protected by plastic masks, heads covered with padded helmets, and bodies covered with non-ripping fabrics, to spare them injuries in case of tree-top landings; and with coils of rope handy for quick descent from the trees, the paratroopers can reach a fire many precious minutes sooner than men on trucks or horseback can generally arrive.

Portable fire-fighting devices that are strapped to a man's back are already standard forest equipment suitable for the paratroopers. Sometimes these are hand-pumps with a small tank of water. An alternative device uses water but builds the pressure behind it with carbon dioxide, either in its liquid form or in the form of "dry ice." Some portable extinguishers use carbon dioxide itself to play upon the fires. It snuffs them out by driving away the oxygen. Extinguishers of greater capacity and other supplies will be attached to parachutes and dropped from other planes.

Meantime, the jeeps and half-tracks, trucks and bulldozers will be moving up with other reinforcements and supplies. They may bring the flame throwers to build back fires, if necessary. They'll bring long lines of hose and high-pressure pumps, powered by motors which are twins to those used on rowboats. With the high pressure equipment, they'll be able to combat fires in "snags," dead trees which are an especial menace because they tend to carry ground fires upward to the tops of other trees.

Ground Reinforcements.

When a forest fire goes into the tree tops it is about as difficult to check as any fire can possibly be. In an old forest a crown fire may be as high above ground as the 15th story of a skyscraper—with no automatic sprinkler system to help combat it, and plenty of oxygen to make it burn freely.

Thus, if the original fire does get out of control of the first paratroopers to reach it, and proves too big for the first reinforcements also, it is almost certain that the third wave of paratroopers and ground forces will resort to building backfires and digging trenches as the maximum effort to check it. Bulldozers and plow-equipped half-tracks will mechanize a large part of the digging job. Men with flame-throwers and extinguishers will handle the backfires. Other men with gasoline-powered "chain-saws" will clear the path of the bulldozers and half-tracks of trees too big for them to bowl over.

America has a big stake in forest lands. Forest operators are seeing to it that our trees continue to grow, but they know that fire is the biggest menace to growth. They need weapons with which to fight fires, and they expect those that this war provides will help to keep a better control over this persistent enemy.

On Land or Sea, Navy P. O. Gets Mail Delivered

System of 5,000 Branches Reaches Remotest Islands

One of the most gigantic wartime tasks confronting postal men is delivering mail to mobile units of the fleet. The mounting tempo of operations in the last year means not only that greater distances must be spanned to effect delivery but that a greater number of men are involved in combat activities increasing all classes of mail to an unprecedented volume.

During March, 1945, 86,132,623 pieces of letter mail passed through Fleet Post Office, San Francisco to navy, marine and coast guard personnel in the Pacific. In March, 1944, there were 36,686,937 pieces of letter mail dispatched to the Pacific showing clearly that the mail volume increased well over 100 per cent in one year. It is expected that it will rise even farther.

The nerve center of the navy mail service is in the navy department, Washington, D. C. Here, ship and plane movements are traced and communicated daily to the fleet post offices by wire and airmail. Information on ship and plane movements come in from all over the world—by radio, letter and messenger.

Throughout the world, there are over 5,000 navy post offices, varying greatly in size and appearance—some within the United States but the vast majority are on board ship or at advanced bases or on captured and liberated islands. The large ones serving the mobile units are designated as fleet post offices.

What Navy Men Want.

Extensive surveys show that navy, coast guard and marine corps personnel overseas above all want letters—letters giving local news and telling of things done and things planned. Secondly, they want objects with a personal sentimental appeal such as photographs, snapshots, drawings made by their youngsters, and newspaper clippings that can be enclosed in these letters.

Such surveys also show that they positively know what they don't want. They don't want cakes, soft candies, cookies, cigarettes and fancy toilet kits. These foods do not survive the trip to the Pacific and arrive in a battered, moldy condition.

To make sure your package arrives in good condition, the following suggestions are outlined:

1. Use a strong container (special boxes are designed for this purpose).
2. Pack each article in shredded paper or some filler material to prevent movement inside the package.
3. Inside each package put a sheet of paper with a list of the contents and the full address of the person to whom it is sent plus your return address.
4. Tie the box with cord, then WRAP it in heavy paper and tie it with strong cord.
5. PRINT the address in ink directly on the wrapping; don't use gummed labels which fall off when they are subjected to moisture.

Experience has shown that a man overseas places a far higher value on a letter from home than a package of candy, or a long delayed newspaper. Because of the great morale factor, the navy delivers first class mail to the far Pacific as expeditiously as possible.

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

"FOOLISH NOTION," by Philip Barry, is a play that's right up Hollywood's alley, partly because it would make a delightful picture, partly also because of its cast. Talullah Bankhead returned to Broadway in it after she had "Lifeboat" and "A Royal Scandal" to add to her screen career; Donald Cook is known to movie goers, as is Aubrey Mather. And Maria Manton makes her stage debut—she's the daughter of Marlene Dietrich. She's a big girl, prettier than her mother was when she arrived in this country, with a peaches-and-cream voice and an obvious talent for seductive roles. "Foolish Notion" could step onto the screen with its Broadway cast, successfully.

Host of Small Fires Do More Damage Than Few Great Conflagrations

A tough forest fire is a terrible enemy to combat. It sometimes attacks on a front from one to more than twenty miles in width. It can sweep forward at a speed to overtake a man on horseback. It develops a heat that can ignite a stump more than 100 yards removed from any flames. It stirs air currents to the speed of a tornado.

The great forest fires, the ones we read about, are the more spectacular and do terrific damage—but there are 10,000 times as many little fires, which we seldom hear about, and the sum total of their damage is the greater of the two. Anyhow, every big fire was little when it started. Who starts them? The public accounts for approximately 98 per cent of all forest fires, according to the official records of the forest service, careless tossing of burning matches or tobacco is described as the most frequent cause. Incendiarists—people who start fires for a thrill or for malice—rank second.

Approximately 61,000 men are kept constantly subject to fire fighting duty today. Of these, some 52,500 are responsible to state foresters and administrators of privately owned timberlands, and about 9,000 are members of the federal land administrative agencies which include the forest service. In spite of their efforts, however, fire annually destroys as much as 800,000,000 cubic feet of timber.

When They Come Back

He was back from two years in the South Pacific. He had been in the Hollandia, Leyte and Luzon invasions. Buddies of his had been killed. He had learned to take death as a matter of course. He had gone through experiences that would prompt the expectation that he had become hardened.

Consequently, when he came back to Birmingham, his family looked to see what psychological changes had taken place in him. They found that his attitudes had changed, both toward life and death. Death is now [illegible] somewhat casually. [illegible] He had little more than a shrug [illegible]

No lamentations. Death to him, so it seemed, was just another one of those things.

But he was different toward the living. He was more tender toward children. He was more solicitous about the aged. He paid women a greater deference. Although he had cared little for pets before, now he liked to play with dogs and cats.

Toward death and the thought of death he seemed hardened. Toward the living he seemed softened. He had a new valuation, apparently, of the meaning of life.

Perhaps his case is not typical. But it may be more common than some of us suspect. Birmingham News.

Rail Traffic Will Be Heavy

Some idea of the strain [illegible] has been placed on the railroads [illegible] from the statement of President [illegible] that it is estimated that [illegible] passengers will be greatly reduced.

The President points out that, other than troop movements, one-third of the passengers on regular trains are men in uniform and that the number of military travellers will be greatly increased as the men come home from Europe to enjoy a short furlough before proceeding into the Pacific theatre of war.

The men and munitions en route to the Japanese theatre of action should have priority over all other transportation and, in our opinion, servicemen who are on furloughs, after battle experience abroad, should have the next priority. If there is any space left, it will be available to civilians.

Fourteen Million Killed

Preliminary estimates are that 14,000,000 persons were killed in battle or died from other causes in the great war that has come to an end in Europe. In addition, 5,500,000 persons were permanently incapacitated.

This total does not include civilian casualties, either from direct or indirect war causes. It does not count civilians killed by bombs or the number dead from starvation, malnutrition or war diseases.

In addition to those killed and permanently injured, it is estimated that 30,000,000 men were wounded but returned to duty and that some 10,000,000 were captured.

The figures given may prove to be too high when final estimates are available, but the total, when known, will indicate that the war in Europe has been one of the bloodiest in history.

"We'll do it!"

THEY tell us that the fat salvage problem has got to be licked in the small cities, the towns and on the farms.

Our country has to have one hundred million more pounds of used fats this year. And we're the people who must save it. We've rolled up our sleeves! We'll save every drop and bit possible... and keep doing it till the last Jap is licked.

HOW TO DO IT: Save all used fats in a tin can. Keep it handy to the stove. Scrape your broilers and roasting pans, skim soups and gravies. Keep meat trimmings and table scraps in a bowl. Melt them down when your oven's going, add the liquid fat to the salvage can. Take can to your butcher as soon as it's full. He will give you four cents and two red points for every pound. Your County Agent or Home Demonstration Agent can give you full particulars.

100,000,000 More Pounds of Used Fats Are Needed This Year!

Trading in Clanton is an exhibition of civic loyalty that every good citizen should attempt to make.

Advertising doesn't work miracles. It won't sell poor merchandise or please a customer who has been defrauded.

It is very foolish for folks to assume that war is inevitable between the United States and Russia; the two nations have few areas of possible clashing interests.

Do you ever go to the New Wadesonian in the evening before the show starts? It's very interesting to watch the patrons come in and seat themselves. Observation has shown us that about 90 percent of theatre goers sit in the same seat every time they attend. If "their" seat is taken, they get the nearest possible location to it.

An inebriated gentleman boarded one of those double-decker buses on Fifth Avenue which was crowded, but he finally found a seat by the driver.

He talked and talked, and the driver suggested that he go on the top deck. The drunk amiably clambered upstairs. But in a few minutes he was back.

"What's the matter? Didn't you like the fresh air, or the view?" asked the driver resignedly.

"Yep, nice view, nice air," answered the drunk. "But, t'aint safe there—no driver."

We have heard several complaints lately, and especially since the tomato crop started moving, about the terrible smoke coming from the shavings and sawdust that burns beside the tracks across from the L. & N. Depot. Looks like something could be done so that those living or working in the vicinity wouldn't have to contend with this nuisance. Either it should be placed somewhere else to burn or some sort of smokestack put up to take the smoke above the city.

K. A. Hardy's Cabinet Shop building being constructed out on Second Avenue in West End is nearing completion. He is going to have a modern building and he already has a first-class Cabinet Shop. We believe he is going to start making baskets when he moves to his new building too.

The saying about the automobile replacing the horse doesn't necessarily apply every time. This week we saw forty-six buses that had been replaced by horses. It all is due to the Horse Show held Wednesday night at the High School Athletic Field. In making room for the Show, the school buses were moved out on the school campus for the time being. In case you never thought of the transportation trouble go down and take a look at the number of buses operated and maintained by the county.

The flowers adorning the gravestones at the cemetery Sunday gave mute evidence of the respect in which the memory of fathers are held by most. It was "Father's Day" and dozens of beautiful sprays and vases of flowers were placed on the graves in their honor.

to prove to you he is working. The letter with the picture didn't explain how they managed to accomplish this feat, (we mean getting a picture of Buck working), but there just seems to be nothing the army can't and doesn't do. He says he is doing fine and the only trouble, like all the other boys in service, he isn't at home with his family and friends.

TO DADDY ON HIS SECOND FATHER'S DAY, FROM HIS LITTLE DAUGHTER

I'm sending love and kisses
In my little baby way,
To show you that I love you
On your second Father's Day.

I've grown a lot in just a year,
It's twenty-one I weigh,
And quite accomplished, too,
New things, I do, each day.

I beg to go-go-in your car-car,
So you take me for a ride,
My prattle and my antics,
Make you beam with pride.

I'm giving you my picture,
To keep on your office desk,
And to always be this precious,
I'll do my very best.

NERVE CENTER FOR A NETWORK OF STEEL. Panel of a CTC system showing track indication lights, switch and signal levers. Here movements and positions of all trains over a wide area are instantly revealed and completely controlled.

A huge locomotive and its train of cargo speeds onward at the command of a green light that signals—"all clear ahead!"

Seventy-five miles away, the dispatcher, seated before a control panel, literally watches this train proceed toward its destination. For the lights on his control board enable him to "see" every train in the district—and by merely pushing buttons, thus actuating signals and switches out on the line, he governs the movements of all rail traffic within a given area.

Centralized Traffic Control is one of the recent, important electrical devices in railroad operation.

Installed or under way on 530 miles of L&N main line, at a cost of $2,700,000, CTC is speeding up vital traffic with safety, increasing capacity and helping to hasten the day of total victory.

Can you connect it for me?

The answer is: a telephone on the premises does not mean we can furnish you service without delay.

The telephone and other facilities used by the former resident who ordered the service discontinued are made available to meet the essential war demands or the next applicant on the waiting list.

If a later applicant were to take over the telephone in the house where he is moving, he would be receiving service ahead of the many others who have been waiting for a long period of time.

The patience and understanding of those now waiting for service is appreciated and they can be sure that they will be connected in their proper turn as fast as conditions permit.

IN MEMORY

Last Tuesday about 2:30 o'clock, the death angel visited our home and took away with them one of our most loved and protected members of the family, our beloved father and husband, Mr. W. G. Robinson. He is gone to a better home than the one he had here on this earth.

He was dearly loved and watched after during the time God spared him with us, and our hearts are very sad and lonely, because there is no other who can take his place in our homes and hearts. We know that he is at peace and rest with God. Our dear dad suffered untold agony for the past year an our hearts feel glad that he made peace with God before he passed on.

Dear dad left the sweetest testimony any one could ever wish to hear in this world. He called for his loved ones at 11:30 o'clock in the night—June the seventh—and [illegible] he was [illegible] he was ready to go [illegible] this earth! [illegible]

[illegible] and heartsick we are today. Though we will try to carry on as our loving father would wish us to. The sweet memories we have of him will live with us in our sorrow and need. So we will still carry on because we know our dear dad is watching over us from that blessed Home Above. We don't say goodbye, dear daddy, but just say, so long, until we meet in the Sweet By and By.—Written by a Daughter. Mrs. Ola Mae Lockhart and Family.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Breaking a Soldier's Heart

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"My mother and sisters say they will not see me again if Marylin and I are reconciled. What shall I do? I feel like I have no home, no family and no friends."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

EVERY woman, in the next tremendous years of our country's history, is going to be either a taker or a giver. Every old, old woman, with the end of her labors and the quiet of death in sight, and every very young woman—ten, twelve, seventeen years old, must put herself into the class of the takers or that of the givers.

We have come of age in the last terrible years, we Americans. We begin to see the great future that opens before us, a future in which the nations of the world shall all be friends, shall be speaking, as it were, the same language, shall solve together the age-old problems of want and excess, bitter need and extravagance, inflated currency, depressed currency, overproduction, underproduction.

But this glorious future, that shall remake the whole history of man, will not be reached without acts of separate and individual heroism on your part and mine. It cannot be reached without our determination to achieve it. It is there—the glorious tomorrow, without fear, without poverty, without war. But the statesmen and diplomats and soldiers who are at the top of all our governments cannot accomplish it. It is only the people, ourselves, who can do that.

Hence it is needful for every woman in the world this summer morning to look her own circumstances, her own conduct, severely in the eye, and decide just where she falls short. Just how much is she helping her neighbors to become loyal and useful Americans? Just what sum of happiness, security, service is she rendering to her own people?

'Devil of a Mess.'

Here is a letter that gives the dark side of the picture, I quote it only in part.

"I've come home," writes Pvt. Bates McVayne, "to a devil of a mess. Maybe my nerves are still shaken from a pretty rotten time in the Pacific. Well, anyway, when I left two years ago our kid was three days old. It was like death to part with them, but the arrangement was that Marylin and the baby were to live with my mother and sisters, and everything was going to be swell.

"Marylin and the girls quarrelled, and Marylin took the baby and went and lived with a woman friend. Here the baby was so neglected that my mother went and got her one day and brought charges against my wife, in court. Marylin then went to live with a man she'd met and fallen in love with, and is still there, and the baby too. The baby seems happy, and doesn't know me, of course, and Marylin wants a divorce, but the man she is with wants me to pay for it as he thinks charges of complicity or alienation of affection could be brought against him if he pays for it. Marylin says she will come back to me if I say so, as she feels she treated me badly. My mother and sisters say they will not see me again if Marylin and I are reconciled. What shall I do? I feel like I have no home, no family and no friends."

Get hold of the little girl. . . .

BITTER HOMECOMING

Probably not many returning soldiers will find as unhappy a situation at home as Bates McVayne did, but there is a lot of heartbreak ahead for many poor fellows. His wife was wrong, of course, to live with another man while her husband was away fighting, but she is trying to make amends. It's his mother and sisters who are making a bad situation worse. They have told Bates that they will never speak to him again if he takes his wife back!

There is a little daughter in the picture, too. Bates would like to have her, in any case. She was only a few days old when he left, and does not remember her father, of course. Then there is the other man. He wants Bates to give Marilyn a divorce, and to pay for it too! This maddening mess is a soldier's homecoming "present." "I feel," Bates writes, "like I have no home, no family and no friends."

There is a warm welcome home for a tired soldier! I am advising Bates to wait; to get hold of his little girl and take her to his mother for a long visit, this without antagonizing Marylin or anyone else. Under the circumstances he will have no trouble in getting hold of the child. His sisters will probably be especially gracious with this arrangement, and time to cool off and view the situation dispassionately will be given everyone.

Such Women Are No Help.

But what takers these five women are, and how far from their conception of things is the idea of giving! Giving help, hospitality, friendship, giving service, cooperation, comfort. Their letters to Bates might have been family chronicles full of content, family gossip, cheering reports, hopeful plans. They might have made it impossible for him to forget that he is loved, needed, missed every hour. Instead they have regaled him on petty suspicions, quarrels, scandals, law suits. He has been tormented by anxieties for his child, regret for his mother's distress, resentment at the infidelity of his wife.

If America and the world are ever to emerge from today's terrible shadow of war, it will not be through women like these that they will be saved. We never can solve national and international problems while our own lives are a confusion of discontents, debts, doubts, idleness, indifference, selfishness. We need strong doses of the old-fashioned virtues of faith, hope and charity. Charity toward starving China, of course, stricken Europe, of course, the claims of the Red Cross, the War Chests, the homes and aides and drives and institutions, of course. But faith and hope and charity first of all for our own people—the people with whom we have breakfast, and for whom we set the dinner table at night. If each of us plants the three cardinal virtues in the home circle, the world will one day become one great home circle and very close to the Kingdom of God.

Berry Season Is Here

Blackberries and dewberries are in season now. Plump, full berries with a bright solid color are the choice ones. Since even good quality berries keep only a short time, the housewife should plan to can them or use them otherwise, very soon after the berries reach the home kitchen. Three-fourths cup of the berries is about equal to a medium sized apple in food value. The juice of the berries makes excellent summer beverages and is equally as good in winter.

News Behind the News

By Paul Mallon

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

HOW PRESIDENT MEETS HIS PROBLEMS

WASHINGTON. — Mr. Hannegan is taking nothing for granted. The political pal of the President actually sent skilled scouts out into various sections of the country to ascertain how the new moves from the White House are regarded. He did not trust polls, even his own, but wished detailed reports.

From all sections the answer was about the same. In effect, they amounted to an enthusiastic go-ahead sign on the line Mr. Truman is hewing with his cabinet changes, legislative suggestions and foreign policy.

Mr. Hannegan was told by his selected agents the nation had warmed up to methods of the executive, although the leftwing crowd, embodying the stereotyped New Dealers, was a little restless and inclined to indulge in a few carom shots. As a matter of observable fact the CIO, for a prime example, did not endorse the Schwellenbach appointment to labor, possibly because the new cabinet man is a northwest political associate of AFL boss Dave Beck. They did not like Mr. Biddle's invited exit as attorney general either. But Mr. Truman evened it up by presenting the unemployment pay maximum of $25 a week which CIO devised and lost at the last session of congress, further by asking the dictatorial government reorganization powers Mr. Roosevelt wanted and failed to get, by having his Mr. Vinson go out for the New Deal peace-planning program, by pushing successfully in the house for the Bretton Woods agreement, which the CIO and Mrs. Roosevelt have been promoting as if to put bankers in their place—and some other steps.

Indeed, there has been nothing for the radicals to complain about. Nothing upon which they could lay their Communist fingers by accusation, although a target may be provided shortly when the wage increases fail to measure up to their demands. In bulk, however, Mr. Truman's program is the one they devised. Indeed, while Frankfurter and Mrs. Roosevelt have lost their appointive influence, Mr. Truman has insisted upon keeping their best friends, Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and Judge Rosenman, domestically, while also holding on to Harry Hopkins and Mr. Stettinius internationally.

Different Spirit.

Mr. Truman has simply been doing the same things in a different spirit, following the same line but in a different way and evening things up a little. You can see it in the reorganization proposal. While Mr. T. demanded the power Mr. R. wanted, he did not want to write the bill himself but would leave it to congress. He has sent up no prepared bills on any important subject, but is respecting the position of congress.

The carom shots have so far developed from the Russian problem. The country shows signs of breaking into two schools of thought on this. Most people seem to feel Moscow has treated us obscurely, if not badly, on practically every late issue of the war and peace, except Argentina, the one point we have won—and they do not like that either. The radical journals in New York have generally become so one-sided that they defend every Russian interest and attack every American step, bitterly assailing the state department at every opportunity. This shows a rather thoughtless and purely political enthusiasm. Yet even on this problem, the President is being backed by a strong majority in the country as a whole.

Mr. Truman has thus managed to achieve popular unity, which the methods of the Roosevelt regime prevented. A heavy majority of people have been found willing to forget past differences and to close the ranks of this nation before the world in order to maintain its prestige and smash the Japanese.

The Anti-New Deal Democrats well know Mr. Truman is supporting Roosevelt policies and personages but are not criticizing him here or elsewhere, in their relief over the way he has been trying to even things up.

It is a remarkable job when you stop to think about the difficulties with which he was faced.

COMPLETE VICTORY

It was a hard war program which Mr. Truman put before congress. His primary point was that we must drive the Japs to unconditional surrender.

While recognizing the sincerity of those who oppose this 'tough" policy, I believe that any procedure except the Roosevelt-Truman policy of unconditional surrender is not only impractical but impossible—and the hope of many people to save lives by offering conditional surrender.

Serve Garden Suppers, Picnics for Real Joy During Hot Weather

Jellied vegetable salad is garnished prettily with potato chips and cucumbers, topped with lemon and olives to make a tempting main dish for a summer supper.

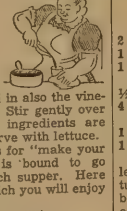
Porch supper, box lunches, picnics and buffet parties are an inseparable part of summer. There can be plenty of fun in the shade of the old apple or elm tree, and the family will enjoy getting closer to the great outdoors.

Sandwiches or early morning preparation will greatly simplify the work of meal preparation. Let salads and fruits rest in the cool of the refrigerator so they will be ready when time comes to eat. When chilled, they will be doubly good.

Here's an excellent meat loaf which may be served "as is" with mayonnaise or cucumber sour cream sauce or sliced for sandwiches. Make it easy for yourself by letting the family serve themselves:

Refrigerator Meat Loaf
(Serves 6)

2½ cups cold pork or veal
⅓ cup sweet mustard pickle
¾ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
4 tablespoons butter or substitute



Grind together meat and pickle. Add remaining ingredients, blending together carefully. Pack into a waxed paper lined pan and let stand overnight or several hours in refrigerator. Slice and garnish with greens, deviled eggs, sliced tomatoes, cheese and parsley.

Note: Two small cans of tuna fish may be used in place of the meat. Drain oil from fish, then flake and proceed according to recipe.

Hot Potato Salad With Frankfurters.
(Serves 6)

6 to 8 medium-sized potatoes, unpeeled
6 slices bacon
½ cup onion, chopped
5 to 6 frankfurters, thinly sliced
½ cup vinegar
2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
1½ to 2 teaspoons salt

Boil potatoes until tender. Dice and fry bacon until crisp. Remove bacon from skillet, then fry in fat the onions and sliced frankfurters. Peel cooked potatoes and dice. Add to frankfurter mixture, mixing well, then blend in also the vinegar, eggs and salt. Stir gently over low heat until all ingredients are heated through. Serve with lettuce.

A tray for fillings for "make your own sandwiches" is bound to go over big for a porch supper. Here are suggestions which you will enjoy using:

Mock Chicken Filling.
(Enough for 12 sandwiches)

1 cup cooked veal or pork
½ cup finely shredded cooked carrot
½ cup finely chopped celery
2 tablespoons pickle relish
3 tablespoons mayonnaise
Salt to taste

Combine and mix ingredients together thoroughly. Chill before serving.

Lynn Says:

Supper Thoughts: When you are having cold cuts and a substantial salad as main interest for supper, have something hot in the way of a quick bread just out of the oven. Good suggestions include these that bake quickly: corn bread, whole wheat biscuits, prune muffins and orange marmalade rolls.

A freezer of homemade ice cream is a welcome treat at outdoors suppers. Try some flavored with fresh berries or apricots, and be sure to have the cookie jar handy.

Doll up your garden party supper salads with plenty of relishes such as olives, pickles, radish roses and carrot sticks. They make for nice nibbling.

Bring out the checked cloths and paper napkins, old-fashioned jugs for flowers, and picnic utensils for under-the-trees eating. They go with the atmosphere.

*Recipe Given

Nippy Filling.
(Enough for 9 sandwiches)

1 tablespoon horseradish
1 tablespoon cold water
2 cups finely ground wieners
1 cup grated American cheese
3 tablespoons finely chopped green pepper
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
Mayonnaise to moisten

Mix horseradish and let stand 10 minutes. Add remaining ingredients, blending well. Spread between bread or rolls.

Tuna Snack.
(Makes 8 to 12 sandwiches)

7 ounce can of tuna fish, flaked
1 hard-cooked egg, chopped
⅓ cup sandwich spread
Tomato slices
Crisp, cooked bacon

Flake fish and add sandwich spread and chopped egg. Serve spread on rolls with tomato and bacon slices.

Salads carry out the prettiness of a porch or garden supper. Make a molded one in the morning and if you have fruits, chill them well before tossing them together the last minute:

Molded Cottage Cheese Salad.
(Serves 6)

1 package lime-flavored gelatin
1 cup hot water
1 cup water or fruit juice
½ cup chopped celery
½ cup chopped, unpeeled apple
1 cup cottage cheese
Thinned mayonnaise
Salt and pepper

Dissolve gelatin in hot water. Add cold water or fruit juice. Chill until firm. Combine celery, apple and cottage cheese with mayonnaise and season. Serve on top of gelatin in lettuce cups.

Porch or garden supper calls for a hearty casserole of rice and sausages with fresh salads and fruity desserts to make the meal complete and balanced.

Fruit Salad Platter.
(Serves 10 to 12)

2 to 3 large bananas, cut lengthwise
1 red apple, cut in thin wedges
1 cup large, dark sweet cherries, seeded
½ pint fresh berries
4 to 6 slices fresh or canned pineapple
1 large orange, sliced
1 grapefruit, sectioned

Sprinkle bananas and apple with lemon or pineapple juice to prevent turning dark. Line platter or salad bowl with salad greens. Arrange each of the fruits in separate groups, making a pleasing balance of color and shapes. Apple wedges, for example, may be used to separate grapefruit segments. Use honey french or plain french dressing.

Vegetable Salad Bowl.

Any or all of these various vegetables may be combined in a tossed salad or platter: tomato wedges, cucumber slices, green pepper rings, cauliflower flowerets, onion rings or scallions, green beans or peas cooked, grated raw carrots or cooked, slivered carrots and cooked shredded beets. French dressing served plain or blended with crumbled blue cheese is an excellent accompaniment. Garnish simply with parsley and ripe olives.

Cole Slaw
With Cottage Cream Dressing
(Serves 6)

1 teaspoon salt
1½ tablespoons vinegar
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
½ cup milk
½ to 1 cup cottage cheese
3 cups shredded cabbage

Mix salt, vinegar and mustard. Stir slowly into milk. Add cottage cheese and pour over cabbage. Toss before serving.

Grated raw carrot, chopped green pepper or finely diced raw apple combine well with shredded cabbage to make other decorative and taste-pleasing salads. Cottage cream dressing goes well with these combinations and a variety of other fruit and vegetable salads.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

THE NEW CHURCH IN THE PAGAN WORLD

LESSON TEXT—I Timothy 6:11-16; I Peter 4:12-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.—Matthew 6:33.

The church is world-wide in its ministry. Its first experiences of both advance and attack were in Jerusalem, but in due time the Lord pressed its members out into the Gentile world to preach the gospel.

These believers had to meet the challenge of a pagan world, rich, powerful, and steeped in age-old philosophies which ran counter to the teaching of Jesus Christ.

The story of how the church met that situation and came through victorious is one of the most thrilling and important sections of world history. We catch but a few glimpses of that time in the writings of Paul and Peter which make up our lesson today, but even these are full of instruction and inspiration. The church appears here as it went on:

I. Fighting the Good Fight of Faith (I Tim. 6:11-16).

In the letter to Timothy, the Holy Spirit used Paul to instruct the early church regarding its life in the midst of an unbelieving world. In the verses immediately preceding our lesson we find a solemn warning against the wrong attitude of heart toward worldly possessions. "Godliness with contentment" is declared to be great gain.

But there is more to Christianity than inward grace, for that must show itself in daily fighting "the good fight of faith." That is done in three ways:

1. By godly living (v. 11). Believers are to flee those things which hinder spiritual progress, and give themselves to the cultivation of graces of a true Christian life.

Space does not permit discussion of these fine virtues of the faithful follower of Christ, but note how tremendously effective they could be (yes, and are today) against paganism. It is so true that the best argument for Christianity is a Christian, but he must be a real one.

2. In holy warfare (v. 12). Living for Christ is not accomplished by sitting in a spiritual rocking chair while the enemy is on the attack. No indeed. There is a good fight to be waged, both personally and as a body of believers.

"The Son of God goes forth to war" against evil in our day. "Who follows in His train?" Thank God, there are those who are on the battle line for God, but they need reinforcements. Who will volunteer today?

3. With blessed expectation (vv. 13-16). The soldier is ready to bear the "blood, sweat, and tears" of deadly conflict because he looks for victory. The soldier of Christ has a sure hope, for he follows Jesus Christ, already victorious over death, and one day soon to appear again as King of kings and Lord of lords.

In view of that expectation, the Christian is to live a consistent, clean and irreproachable life. And why not? If we look for the glorious and blessed and only Potentate, should we not be ready?

II. Meeting the Fiery Trial of Persecution (I Pet. 4:12-16).

As Peter comforted the sorely tried believers in the early church, he urged them to meet their persecutions:

1. Without confusion (v. 12). We should expect trials in this world; yes, severe, fiery trials. Such things are common to all mankind, and the Christian should not expect to escape.

To them, such trials are real tests of their faith, an opportunity to show to the unbelieving world that God is able to deliver those who put their trust in Him!

To be forewarned is to be forearmed. "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial."

2. With exceeding joy (vv. 13-15). The believer is not to be ashamed of the troubles he bears for Christ's sake. A glory rests upon the one who is privileged to be a "partaker of Christ's suffering" (v. 14), as he stands with Him who was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" (Isa. 53:3).

Note that the believer is not to do anything which would justify others in making him suffer. It is a disgrace, a shame, which injures the cause of Christ, when a believer has to suffer because he has broken the law, or because he is "a busybody (R. V. "meddler") in other men's matters."

3. For the glory of God (v. 16). The entire life of the believer should be lived for God's glory. If, then, he is called to pass through trials or to be persecuted for his faith, that, too, is something to be so borne as to glorify God.

The follower of Christ does not hang his head in shame as the difficulties of life come upon him. He trusts God, and by his poise and grace in the midst of difficult circumstances, declares to all the world that God is able to deliver,

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nasis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the orders, to permit food and water to enter the city. The Major found out that the American generosity was responsible for a troublesome black market. To stop this condition he placed a ceiling on all prices. Mayor Nasta was placed in the prisoner of war cage. He swore that he would get even and that the Americans would suffer.

CHAPTER XVIII

Life in the p.w. cage was not very pleasant for Mayor Nasta. None of the men had blankets, and the nights were pretty cold, so they slept in close rows, keeping each other warm with their bodies. But no one would sleep next to the Fascist Pig. They said he had a peculiar smell. As a matter of fact, he did have a peculiar smell for several hours each morning; it came from being a mistake.

At last Mayor Nasta found a man who would talk with him. This was a German who spoke Italian.

Mayor Nasta told him that he was still Mayor of Adano, that he had been treacherously arrested by the Americans, that he was trying to do all he could to help the Germans win and that, in short, he was a pretty important person who ought to be helped. The Italian-speaking German told his friends all about Mayor Nasta, and they decided they ought to help him escape.

For a couple of days Mayor Nasta moved over and lived with the Germans. They made plans for the escape. There was nothing elaborate about the plans. They just decided to lift the Mayor up over the wall. They asked him if he had the courage to sit on barbed wire for a few minutes. He said yes, anything to escape. They asked him if he had the courage to jump down twelve feet on the other side. He said yes.

So in the middle of a dark, clouded night, the Germans made a pyramid of their bodies and let Mayor Nasta climb up it to the top of the wall. He sat on the barbed wire on top of the wall, quiet as a cat, until he was sure that the sentry outside had marched to the other end of his beat. Then he turned facing the wall, let himself down as far as he could, and let go. He hurt one knee a little; it hit the wall as he landed on the ground. But he was able to get up and run off silently.

The Top Sergeant at the p.w. cage called up Sergeant Borth at eighty-thirty the next morning and told him that Nasta had escaped.

Sergeant Borth borrowed Corporal Chuck Schultz and a jeep from the M.P.'s and went hunting. By this time Sergeant Borth had so many voluntary informers and informers-on-informers that the job of tracing Mayor Nasta was not too hard.

He soon found out that Mayor Nasta had been sheltered for a few hours in a house on Via Favemi. He had then left town by the Via Roma. He had stopped in at a farmer's house near the Casa Zambano to change into peasant dress. This was one of the easiest things to check, because the peasant turned up wearing Mayor Nasta's loud powder blue suit, which was dusty from several nights on the ground.

Mayor Nasta had then been seen at several points along the Vicinamare road. One farmer had given him a lift in his cart. Mayor Nasta had evidently had enough of the hills, and was trying now to get to Vicinamare, where friends would be able to hide him.

Sergeant Borth picked him up three miles short of Vicinamare, at about ten-thirty.

Jeeps had been passing Mayor Nasta all morning, so that he was not particularly alarmed when Sergeant Borth's jeep drove up alongside him, and even when it stopped, he waved crudely and shouted: "Good day, good day," in what he thought was a thick peasant accent.

Sergeant Borth mimicked the accent: "Good day, good day, farmer."

Mayor Nasta, who still did not recognize Borth, shouted again: "Good day."

Borth shouted: "Good day. You are the first farmer I have ever seen with pince-nez glasses on."

Then Mayor Nasta knew Borth. Mayor Nasta's spirit, which had been strained by the arrest and by the days in the cage and by the escape, suddenly broke. He turned and ran out across the fields, squealing crazily, just like a soldier who had broken under shellfire.

Sergeant Borth got out of the jeep and went out onto the fields. He did not hurry, because Mayor Nasta was running in circles, wishing to run away from himself more than anything else. By the time Sergeant Borth caught him, he was exhausted and limp, and his eyes were milky with fear.

As Borth half walked, half carried him to the jeep, Mayor Nasta jabbered and mouthed his fear. "If you are going to shoot me, tell me first. Don't shoot me in the back. Tell me if you are going to kill me. I want to know, I want to know . . ."

Sergeant Borth slapped him sharply in the face, and for a few seconds he was silent.

But when he was seated in the jeep, and the jeep began to move, Mayor Nasta began again. "Don't shoot me in the back. I will do anything to be shot from the front, where I can see the gun. I will tell you everything I know. I can give you names. Don't do it from behind."

Borth said: "How can I shoot you from behind when I am in the front seat and you are in the back seat?"

Since it was the noon hour, scores of people had drifted to the Doppo Lavoro clubs along the street near the Albergo dei Pescatori to listen to the radio and wait for lunch. When they saw Borth's jeep, with a man tied up in the back seat, they clustered around, and called for their friends. And when they saw that Borth's cargo was Mayor Nasta, and that after all these years the Mayor had a gag in his mouth, they cheered and laughed at the man.

These noises increased Mayor Nasta's terrors, and he kept twisting and trying to look behind him.

Borth went into the restaurant and found Major Joppolo and brought him out.

Major Joppolo held up his hand to silence the crowd. "I want to speak

He let himself down as far as he could and let go.

to Nasta," he said to Borth. "Can he hear me with that thing on his face?"

"Yeah," Borth said; "you've got the rare pleasure of being able to speak to Nasta and he can't talk back."

Major Joppolo said: "Nasta, you are a disgrace to your people. There is goodness in your people; but not in you, not a bit. The world has had enough of your kind of selfishness."

It was one of Major Joppolo's gratest attributes in his job that he could speak pompous sentences with a sincerity and passion so real that his Italian listeners were always moved by what he said. Now all the listeners except Nasta were moved by his words to shout: "Kill him! Kill him! Kill him!"

Here was one time when Major Joppolo's sincerity and passion bounced back on him, because the people's shouts frightened Mayor Nasta so badly that he fainted, and Major Joppolo was the first to see the ridiculousness of trying to spellbind an unconscious man.

There was nothing left to say except one sentence to Borth: "We'll have to send him to Africa."

And to the music of Adano's delighted cheers, Borth and his limp companion drove down the street.

There was no better index to the state of mind of Adano than the activities of the painter Lojacono. If one had made a graph of the spirits of the town and then put beside it a graph of the number of commissions Lojacono received, the two would have exactly corresponded. Whenever the town was optimistic, Lojacono worked. When the town was blue, Lojacono was idle.

Lojacono could paint anything. He could paint a house or he could paint a saint. He was the one who painted panels in the churches. He was the one who painted the fat and holy people on the fat Basile's two-wheeled cart.

The white-haired Lojacono suffered when he painted. First he suffered the pangs of creation, then he suffered when the people of Adano criticized his work. His work was beautiful and everyone in the town loved it, but for some reason they always criticized it first.

Major Joppolo had not been in Adano very long before Lojacono was busy. His first efforts were a little crude, because the town had been depressed, and his right hand idle, for so very long. But soon he warmed to the town's happiness, and he did things he had never been able to do in his life, which had not been short.

The same morning that the crowd stood around Borth's jeep in front of the Albergo dei Pescatori, another, smaller crowd stood on the Molo Ponente in the harbor and watched Lojacono work. He was painting new names and little figures on the bow surfaces of the fishing boats, and the crowd consisted of fishermen and their families.

Except for Lojacono's work, the boats were all ready to go. Their seams were caulked, and they were tight as wine-bottles. The barnacles and the whiskers were off, and the bottoms had been given a little lead paint. The rigging was smart, for Major Joppolo had persuaded the Navy to give the fishermen some bright cable and some unsoaked hemp rope.

The fishermen were impatient to have Lojacono finish.

Lojacono stopped working and looked at the fishermen standing there. He pointed at his work and said angrily: "Have you ever seen a porpoise less messy than that one?"

Agnello said: "The porpoise is not bad, but he will die of loneliness unless you hurry and give him some company. Porpoises like company, you know that, Lojacono. Have you ever seen a porpoise play alone?"

"He will have company," Lojacono said impatiently. "The Mister Major is going to be riding on his back. If you would be silent, I could get on with my work."

Merendino said: "Work then, old man, do not be so slow."

The old man went back to his work. Tomasino, sitting with his head in his hands on the afterdeck of his boat, which was moored next to Agnello's, said gloomily: "I cannot see the point of all this painting. It is frivolous. My boat has been named Tina since the girl was born. It will remain Tina. The leaves and the fruit which dangle fro , the name are good enough for me, even if they are not new."

Agnello shouted to Tomasino: "What is the matter with you, sour one, this morning? Cheer up, we are going fishing again."

"In the next century," said Tomasino glumly, "after all this painting is finished."

Lojacono stuck his head up over the side of Agnello's boat and shouted: "Be quiet, Tomasino, you know that the only reason you are so impatient is that you like what I did twenty years ago and you have no desire for anything new."

Tomasino said: "If I have to wait another day for the slow painter I will knock out the name Tina and the leaves and fruit with some lead paint I have, and I will go fishing alone in a nameless boat."

Lojacono started painting the Mister Major, and the little crowd came in closer to see the details. He resolved a difficult point by making the Major's hat rather big and by tilting it so that it covered most of his face. At least the hat was definitely American.

"His leg is too short. The leg of the Mister Major is longer," Agnello said.

"I was about to say that the leg is too long," Merendino said.

"In other words," Lojacono said, "the leg is precisely right."

"He does not have a hunch-back like that," said Sconzo, another of Agnello's helpers.

"He is bending forward because of the speed of the porpoise," Lojacono said.

"The color of his skin is too white," said the wife of Agnello. "His skin is more Italian-colored."

"You are dull," Lojacono said, "you do not see the symbolism of the white skin."

This is what the criticism was always like. And this shows the purpose of the criticism: it was not so much that the people did not like what Lojacono was doing, as they wanted to know exactly what was in his mind. In future, showing off his boat, Agnello would be able to say: "You can see how fast the porpoise is going by the way the Mister Major is leaning forward. And do you see how white his skin is? That is because of the symbolism in the Mister Major's skin."

In due course Lojacono finished his work, and everyone pronounced it quite good, although, one said, it would be hard for a porpoise to jump that high out of the water with a man on his back, and, another said, should not the name of the boat, which was now Americano, be a little lower? Lojacono attributed the former highness to good spirits and the latter highness to the way the name American had been raised in everyone's esteem by the Mister Major; and everyone went away satisfied.

The next morning the boats went out. Major Joppolo went down to the harbor to see them off, and the people in town were all excited at the prospect of eating fish.

The catch that day was excellent. When the boats were all in and the fish all weighed, it was estimated by Agnello that a total of three thousand two hundred pounds had been taken in. Better than that, the fish were mostly of good grades.

Famous Paintings Were Halved and Sold as Two

Unknown even to most artists, many of the world's famous oil paintings were long ago cut in two and sold as separate pictures, chiefly by greedy dealers, to collectors who had not seen the entire work, says Collier's.

One case came to light a short time ago when the two sections of The Finding of Moses by Tiepolo happened to be displayed side by side at an exhibition in London. Masterpieces of sculpture have likewise been separated, one of which is the Lemnian Athena whose head is at Bologna while her body is at Dresden.

AN ORDINANCE TO PROVIDE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF A MUNICIPAL PLANNING COMMISSION FOR THE CITY OF CLANTON, ALABAMA AND TO PRESCRIBE ITS POWERS AND AUTHORITY.

BE IT ORDAINED by the Mayor and City Council of the City of Clanton, Alabama, as follows:

SECTION 1. Pursuant to Act No. 534, H. 992, approved September 14, 1935 (General Acts 1935, p. 1126, Alabama Code of 1940, Section 786 et seq), there is hereby created a Planning Commission for the City of Clanton, Alabama, to consist of nine members, to be appointed for the terms and in the manner set forth in said Act.

SECTION 2. The said Commission is authorized and empowered to make and adopt a master plan for the physical development of the said City of Clanton, Alabama including any areas outside its boundaries which, in the Commission's judgment, bear relation to the planning of such municipality. Such plan, with the accompanying maps, plats, charts and descriptive matter, shall show the Commission's recommendations for the development of said territory, including among other things the general location, character, and extent of streets, viaducts, subways, bridges, waterways, waterfronts, boulevards, parkways playgrounds, squares, parks, aviation fields, and other public ways, grounds and open spaces, the general location of public buildings and other public property, and the general location and extent of public utilities and terminals, whether publicly or privately owned or operated, for water, light, sanitation, transportation, communication, power, and other purposes; also the removal, relocation, widening, narrowing, vacating, abandonment, change of use or extension of any of the foregoing ways, grounds, open spaces, buildings, property, utilities, or terminals; as well as a zoning plan for the control of the height, area, bulk, location and use of the buildings and premises. As the work of making the whole master plan progresses, said Commission may from time to time adopt and publish a part or parts thereof, any such part to cover one or more major sections or divisions of the municipality, or one or more of the aforesaid or other functional matters to be included in the said plan. The said Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise all powers and do all things authorized to such Commission by said Act 534 as it may deem necessary for its work. The said Commission is also authorized and empowered to exercise all powers and to do all things authorized to such Commission by the said Act, and to exercise such control as is authorized under the aforementioned Act No. 534 with reference to subdivision of unimproved property within five miles of the corporate limits of the City of Clanton, Alabama.

SECTION 3. The Mayor and City Council of Clanton are hereby authorized to make all appointments and exercise all authority as authorized by the said Act.

SECTION 4. This ordinance shall take effect from and after the date of its passage, but the same shall, nevertheless, be published as required by law.

Approved this 19th day of June, 1945.

F. LEO THOMPSON,
Mayor
H. G. HEFLIN, Member of Council.
A. REEDIE TAYLOR, Member of Council.
JOHN B. DERAMUS, Member of Council.
JAMES Q. WADE, Member of Council.

STATE FARMERS QUALIFY FOR $7,870,316.36 IN CONSERVATION PRACTICES

Alabama farmers did an outstanding job in carrying out conservation practices under the AAA program during 1944, reports T. H. Martin, State AAA administrative officer, in congratulating farmers on their efforts toward conserving and improving the fertility of their land.

In substantiating his statement, Mr. Martin released figures showing that 75,199 farms in Alabama qualified for $7, 870,316.36 in AAA payments during the past year.

Due to several thousand farmers carrying out more practices than permitted by their farm limits, they received a total of $6,513,411.00, which was $1,356,905.36 less than the total of practices carried out.

Mr. Martin pointed out that conservation practices were carried out on 45.98 per cent of the 163,543 farms operated in the state. He further revealed that these farms include 5,503,-870 acres, or 61.96 per cent of the cropland in the state.

Alabama farmers qualified for the AAA conservation payments by seeding 292,272 acres to pasture grasses and clovers, mowing 326,425 acres one or more times, clearing 2,131 acres of land for pastures, applying 190,675,620 pounds of phosphate on 542,818 acres, applying 243,166 tons of lime on 231,-669 acres, applying 89,815 tons of basic slag on 329,433 acres, turning under 583,995 acres of winter legumes and 47,881 acres of annual lespedeza, by seeding 14,757 acres of lespedeza sericea, setting kudzu on 13,706 acres planting crotalaria on 4,299 acres and constructing 44,820,931 feet of terraces on 94,435 acres, and draining 27,400 acres.

Unless Alabama farmers prepare their gardens in June and July for planting this fall, the chances are that they will not have a good fall garden. Land needs to be prepared in June and July so that it will be in good shape for planting vegetables in July and August.

FAR out from the nearest fire department . . . what will happen if fire breaks out in your home or barn? The best answer is to build with concrete. For concrete can't burn. It resists fire; retards it and helps keep it from spreading. Protects your family. Helps save from destruction the valuable herd and equipment on which your productive capacity depends.

Concrete farm buildings are attractive and comfortable, economical to build and to own. If you need help, get in touch with your concrete contractor or your building material dealer.

Concrete farm jobs require a minimum of critical materials.

Annual Singing To Be Held At Oak Grove

The first Sunday in July is the time for our annual all-day singing at Oak Grove Church, located 2 miles north of Jemison. This is an annual event, dating back several years. Heretofore we have had the cooperation of the leading singers of the County of which we are very grateful. In return we have always tried to cooperate 100 per cent with other annual events of the county by calling off our evening singings and help out as much as we could. We hope this spirit of unity continues in the County.

We are expecting all our neighboring Community singers to be with us this year. Also according to promise the DeVaughn Quartette of Sylacauga, The Sunny South Quartette of Birmingham and the Bailey family of Shelby County.

We will use the new Henson Books "Visions of Victory" and the Stamps Baxter books "Living Grace" and "Humble Hearts."

Singing will begin promptly at 10 o'clock. Lunch will be spread the old-fashioned way at the noon hour and then singing resumed again for the evening session.

All singers and lovers of music are invited to come bring their books and lunch and enjoy the day with us.—Sam Collins.

BASEBALL ON PROGRAM FOR FOURTH OF JULY

Yep, you will have somewhere to go next Wednesday afternoon to celebrate the Fourth. There will be a baseball game on the local diamond between Clanton and Sylacauga, Post No. 63, called at 3 p. m.

Dixie Cafe Being Remodeled

Luther Foshee, proprioter of the Dixie Cafe stated Tuesday that extensive remodeling was going on at the "Dixie."

Going into its 20th year of service to Chilton County and Alabama, the Dixie is more popular today than ever before.

John Morgan Foshee, son of the proprioter, will manage, and be in full charge of the business when it is opened again next Saturday morning. It is closed this week during the remodeling. New floors are being put in; new painting and decorating done; and entirely new lighting fixtures installed. John Morgan graduated this year at Chilton County High School and is popular with the businessmen as well as with the younger set of the Community.

WIFE OF L. F. GERALD DIED

Mrs. Ella Mae Mastin Gerald, age 54, died at Panama City, Fla., last Saturday afternoon, July 23rd. Services were held at the home in Clanton Monday morning at 11 o'clock, conducted by Dr. J. D. McPhail and Rev. R. E. Owens. Pallbearers were: W. H. Gillespie, Charlie Cox, Joe Graham, Jimmie Taylor, Joe Mullins and C. Fenn Jones. Martin was in charge of arrangements. Burial was in Clanton Cemetery.

Besides the husband, Lawrence F Gerald, Sr., of Clanton, surviving is one son, L. F. Gerald, Jr., and one daughter, Miss Celia Gerald of Clanton and Mobile; father, Dr. O. C. Mastin of Wedowee, Ala.; one sister, Mrs. Phillip W. Horn of Birmingham; three brothers—Frank and Walter Mastin of Thorsby, and Orville of Birmingham.

REV. R. W. STUCKEY TO PREACH SUNDAY AT TEMPLE CHURCH

Rev. R. W. Stuckey, pastor of the Concord Church, will preach at the Temple Church next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Rev. A. T. Hickmon, pastor of the Temple Church, invites the public to attend this service.

Y.W.A. Met With Mrs. Nell Powers

The Y. W. A met last Monday at 7:30 p. m. with Nell Rockett Powers.

The subject discussed was "Holding Hands With God." The program came as follows: Introduction to program by Marguirete Perry; "Is It Wise"? by Blanche Glenn; "How Will It Effect Other People"? by Laurella Owens; "How Would I Feel If My Doing The Thing In Question were To Be Known Publicly?" and "Would Some Certain Person Whom You Respect And Admire whom You Know To Be Seeking Always The Glory Of God in Her Life Do What You Are Considering?" by Frances Bean; "What Would Jesus Do?" by Warrene Wingard.

After the reports the dedication of the Y. W. A. was quoted by everyone which was: "In loyal devotion to Christ I dedicate myself: To pray and to study God's word. To study about God's work in His world and the advance of His Kingdom. To give thought, time and means to hasten the day when all men shall know Christ. To total abstinance personally and to interest others in the promotion of the great cause of total abstinence. To christian observance of Sunday. To consideration, gentleness and christian responsibility for the other young women with whom I come in contact in my home, my community and to the ends of the earth.

I will seek to maintain for myself and be an example to others of the highest standard of private and public integrity, and to make my personal appearance, speech and manner such as becomes the purity and beauty of the Christlike character, living a radiant and convincing life in all social relationships."

As our projects for the following quarter we are helping to keep the Cradle Roll Class at the First Baptist Church and visiting the sick and shut-ins.

Our next meeting will be announced in the Church bulliten later.—Alene Johnson, reporter.

Southern Bell Making Survey In Rural Areas

The Southern Bell Telephone Company is starting a survey of Chilton County to determine the requirements for telephone service in the rural areas, according to T. E. Harris, District Manager for the telephone company.

In announcing the start of the rural survey in Chilton County, Mr. Harris said that this was a resumption of the general rural telephone development program inaugurated by the Southern Bell Company throughout its territory in 1939 and suspended in 1942 because of the demands of war.

A crew of engineers is in the county plotting the location of farm homes and other prospective telephone users in rural areas.

"Information gained from these surveys will be translated into working plans for resuming a very active rural development program when needed equipment is available," according to Mr. Harris.

"Later, when the needed equipment is available, canvassers will interview residents in the rural areas to secure their applications for telephone service, after which actual work on the Southern Bell's farm telephone expansion program will be started," said Mr. Harris.

Canning Plant At High School Open To Public

The Chilton County Canning Plant, located at the High School in Clanton will be open to the public every Tuesday and Thursday for the rest of the canning season. The plant will be open other days only by appointment.

Every citizen in Chilton county is invited and urged to attend the canning plant and observe the process even though they do not plan to use it this year.

The plant will open at 8 a. m. and no produce will be accepted after 2:00 p. m. Remember that the patron does his own work, and that the small fee of 2c per can for vegetables and 4c per can for meats is only enough to pay the expenses of the plant. Tin cans may be obtained at the plant at low cost.

Bring your produce to the canning plant and take that dirty hot job out of your kitchen. You may can enough in one day at the cannery to last the entire year. The canning capacity at the plant is several thousand cans per day.

Remember the plant will be open every Tuesday and Thursday during the canning season.

PLEASANT HILL CHURCH

"The River," a sound motion picture, will be shown Sunday night in the Pleasant Hill Church. The people of Archers Chapel and other neighborhoods are invited to attend. It is necessary to have electric current to show the pictures.

A HAPPY PREACHER

I am happy because I am out of the Hospital and well on my way to complete recovery. I filled my pulpit last Sunday at both Services. It is true that I had to remain seated to preach, but my people said they could not tell the difference.

I am happy for all the kind remembrances of my friends. I appreciate every flower, every card, every letter, every dollar, every kind word and every prayer.

I am not only happy because I preached at Mulberry last Sunday but that I will be able to preach at Concord next Sunday. I have missed three appointments with these good people and they have been very considerate of me during my illness. I may have to preach to them from my chair, but we are expecting to be there. I hope you will honor my effort by being present and may it be a day of Salvation for our people.

Sincerely,

R. W. STUCKEY

We wish to express our sincere thanks for the many acts of kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our beloved husband and father, John Richard Roseberry.—The family.

POPLAR SPRINGS

We had about seventy in attendance for Sunday School and preaching Sunday. Bro. Cook delivered the morning message, but he was not with us Sunday night due to the fact that he preached at Concord.

Bro. Reins from Verbena taught the Sunday School lesson, and in the absence of Bro. Cook Sunday night, he delivered a very good message.

Bro. Cook will preach at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Devaughn on the second Sunday afternoon, July 8, about three o'clock. Ora is a shut-in and everyone that can, go and be in this service.

Baseball Picture To Be Shown At City Hall

M. C. "Jack" Hayes secured for the American Legion, from Mr. Lew Fonseca, director of promotion, of the American League of professional baseball clubs, two thirty minute each baseball pictures.

One picture covers the high-lights of the World Series of 1944 between the St. Louis Cardinals and the St. Louis Browns. The other picture of thirty minutes carries the title of the "Inside Baseball" and was written and directed by Mr. Lew Fonseca and the cast includes Bob Feller, Red Ruffin and Lefty Grove pitching; Ted Williams, Joe Dimaggio and Hank Greenberg on batting; Joe Gordon, Frank Crosetti and Joe Kuhel on infield play; Bill Dickey catching and George Case on base running.

The two pictures will be shown in the auditorium of the City Hall in Clanton, Alabama, beginning at 8:30 p. m. Wednesday night, July 4th. Everyone is invited, especially boys of all ages.

15 Chilton County Girls Enrolled At Alabama College

Fifteen Chilton County girls were entertained at a garden party at Alabama College Monday, June 11, at the home of President and Mrs Arthur Fort Harman. This was the first of a number of social activities planned for the Summer School students.

Chilton County students enrolled in the Summer School who attended the party were: Miss Lois Rockett, of Clanton; Miss Susie Nell Sexton, of Maplesville; Miss Jessie Erlene Powell, of Clanton; Miss Mavis Loraine Powell of Clanton; Miss Grace Marie Grant, of Verbena; Miss Dorothy Nell Blalock, of Clanton; Mrs. Eva Broadhead, of Clanton; Mrs. Gertrude Calloway, of Clanton; Miss Betty Ann Jones, of Thorsby; Miss Eleanor Apperson, of Clanton; Miss Nina Frances Jones, of Verbena; Miss Ruth Frances Primm, of Thorsby; Miss Effie Meroney, of Verbena; and Miss Peggy Lee Mizell, of Maplesville.

MRS. MAHALIE FRANCES JONES

Mrs. Mahalie Frances Jones, age 71, died June 23rd. Funeral services were held Sunday a 3:00 p.m. from Cane Creek Church, conducted by Rev. G. G. Williams; interment in adjoining cemetery.

2nd Quarterly Meeting Of Unity Association

The Second Quarterly meeting of the Unity Associational W.M.U. will be held at Pleasant Valley July 3rd, beginning at 10:00. The theme for the meeting is "Youth and the Centenniel," and on that day the Young People of the Association are urged to attend and hold one of their associational rallies at that time. Mrs. R. L. Bondurant, who is doing Mission work in Mud Creek Association, will be the guest speaker. Her message will be an inspiration to each one who hears it, as she like one of us who is busy with her household tasks, yet she finds the time to carry out Jesus's Command in Home Mission fields.

The program is as follows:

10:00—Hymn, "O Zion Haste." Devotional by Clanton Y.W.A.

10:30—Roll call

10:35—Our First Member of the Family, Billingsley Sunbeam Band.

11:00—Centenniel Hymn, "Forward Baptist Comrades." Another Member of the Family, Clanton Y.W.A

11:30—Message, "The Laying Upon My Heart," Mrs. R. L. Bondurant.

Prayer.

12:30—Lunch as guests of Pleasant Valley W.M.S.

1:30—Hymn, "The King's Business."

Payer. Our Family Continues to Grow, Maplesville R.A.

1:45—Will you add us to your Family, Clanton G.A.

2:00—Business, W.M.U.

2:30—Special meeting, Young People.

3:00—Adjourn. Prayer

LITTLE DONALD EASTERLING

Donald A. Easterling, the six months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Easterling of East Clanton, died at a Montgomery hospital Monday afternoon. Services were Tuesday afternoon at First Assembly of God Church, conducted by Rev. H. M. Sandlin assisted by Rev. C. H. Baker. Burial was in Clanton Cemetery; Martin directing. Pallbearers were: Elmer Powell and Johnnie Easterling. Flower girls were Lena Pearl Williams, Norma Mims, Barney Person and Verline Hendley.

The parents survive, and grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Easterling and Mr and Mrs. Elmer Powell, all of Clanton.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of expressing our sincere thanks to our many friends and relatives for their kindness shown us during the illness and death of our beloved baby boy.

May God's richest blessings be upon each of you. —Mr and Mrs S. E. Walker and family.

CARD OF THANKS

BOOCKHOLDT—We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to our many friends, neighbors and relatives for their every word of sympathy, act of kindness, deed of service and beautiful floral offerings received during the many weeks of illness and the great bereavement when the death angle came to call for our dear husband and father, John A. Boockholdt. Especially do we thank the Rev. C. D. Hughes and Rev. Bice. Also Mr. White of Spigener Funeral Home.—Mrs. J. A. Boockholdt and Children.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Shortening Sail at Your Home

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

If you are lucky to have a country retreat, where he can find peace and quiet, putter with farm machinery, raise chickens, milk cows, sell fruit, where he can take his loved wife, baby girls, books and forget the world for a while, thank God for it.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"HOW long must we put up with my husband's post-war disillusionment and discontent?" writes Mrs. Harry Kling of Chicago. "He came back four months ago, and after the first delight at having him home again, honorably discharged, it has been nothing but difficulty and gloom. He was always a well-balanced man, affectionate, steady and contented. He is now nervous, critical, or—worse than all darkly silent for hours. He has gone back into his old firm of claim adjusters, and is making good money, with good prospects ahead. But I can't stand this sort of home life much longer. No harmony, no conversation, no plans, no fun. He is 35, I am 32; our daughters are 5 and 3.

"Harry wants to give up our comfortable apartment, where I have a part-time maid, break up all our pleasant associations, upset the girls' schooling—they go to all-day nursery schools—and move to the country. He has his eye on a sprawling farm 35 miles out, house in bad repair, 52 acres partly cultivated, tenant house of three rooms—the farmhouse has about seven rooms, electric light fixtures and plumbing 40 years old, and everything imaginable in the way of refrigerator, telephone, gas stove, linoleums, curtaining, painting, yet to be done. Here he proposes we live for years—perhaps forever. I adore my husband, I have not loved any other man since I met him, at 20, but do you think it wise to pull up all our roots simply because he has been emotionally and nervously upset by the war? Won't he outgrow this in time? Wouldn't it be wiser to wait, for the girls' sake and for all our sakes?"

My answer to this is, my dear Mrs. Kling, don't make the mistake of thinking that this fearful war, some of whose phases have ended, is like any other war that ever was. After peace negotiations with the powers of savagery and lawlessness are signed, sealed and delivered, we still have a titanic job ahead of us—service folk and civilians alike. This postwar job will not only be to preserve world peace, it will be to preserve world sanity.

A Shattered World.

It will not be only to keep a few hundred thousand depressed and mentally affected men sane; it will be to keep us all sane. This war has bitten too deep into the equilibrium of humanity; too much that is unthinkable and unbearable has happened. Europe will be peopled by millions of folk who have known what it was — for weeks, months, years—to be homeless, hungry, desperate. The sacred thing that is a man's right to work, to love, to serve his family, to build his home—has been outraged and destroyed.

Barren wastes of ashes and ruins will be wearily searched and combed by vaguely wandering hordes — children whose first experience of life was fright, fear, hunger. Women who have looked upon death, death in the mass, heaped hundreds of innocent women and children slain, and lying unburied in what once were grassy parks and splendid streets.

His loved wife, his baby girls. . . .

Nothing like this ever has happened in the world before. Try to realize that we will not only be fighting, in these years to come, for those alien peoples overseas, we will be fighting with every humane and scientific weapon in our power for ourselves. That honor and charity and service may live on in the world, that homes and firesides, books and schools and tree-shaded towns may still exist, that our hearts and souls shall not be ravaged again by the fearful cruelties man may inflict upon his fellowman, will take all that we have of courage and vision and hard, humble labor.

A Country Retreat.

Your man has done his share. He has jeopardized his reason in these years when you and the babies waited for him, safe and snug in protected America. Now you three persons whom he loves must give him back those years.

If you are lucky enough to have a country retreat, where he can find peace and quiet, where he can putter with farm machinery, raise chickens, milk cows, sell fruit; where he can take his loved wife, his books, his baby girls, and forget the great world for awhile, thank God for it. Take it gratefully, and as he grows stronger and saner you'll see how he longs to share it, to let other wounded souls and bodies rest under his big trees, to let other bewildered soul-scarred men fish his stream, help harvest his corn, sleep deep in the country guest room shaded by the pear trees.

We are going to find some big words for what we have to do for our men now. Teaching, helping, cheering, healing. Begin with your own. Forget all the past, as Europe must. Think only of a better tomorrow, and do your share to make it come true.

MOVING TO THE COUNTRY

After returning from service Harry was able to return to his old position as a claim adjuster. He is earning a good salary and seemingly should be glad to get back into the old ways. His wife says she loves him as much as ever. They have two daughters, five and three, who are attending day nursery school.

Yet with all this, Harry is moody, unsociable and restless. He no longer is well balanced and light hearted. Something weighs him down. He wants to get away —from his job, the association of family and friends, the familiar scenes.

Lately he has fixed his mind on going into farming. He has found a 52-acre place somewhat run-down, and only partly cultivated at present. There are two houses on it, one of three rooms, the other seven. Both are in poor condition. It is here, 35 miles from town, that Harry wants to move his family. Harry's wife doesn't like the prospects.

Preventing Tooth Decay

Fluorine solutions, mouthwashes and fluorine in drinking water are under experimentation. A poisonous element not to be trifled with, fluorine in extremely small amounts has prevented dental decay. Citizens of Kingston, N. Y., a city on the Hudson river, will drink fluoride - containing water while their neighbors down the line in Newburgh will get ordinary water. After a few years, dental comparisons should reveal whether other cities should fortify their water too.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

WAR EXPERIENCE HAS DEFEATED SOCIALISM

WASHINGTON. — They say Mr. Churchill blundered when he claimed socialism would bring a gestapo to the British, rob the individual of his rights and make him a slave to the state—at least the political experts say it in chorus here and abroad. As they see it Churchill is "the man who won the war" and should have run for reelection on that platform. I wonder.

Churchill

The very day he spoke, a British-spirited province in Canada voted on socialism. In Ontario, a straight - out socialist movement, called the Cooperative Commonwealth federation, had won astonishing success last time, gaining 34 seats, more than a third of the provincial parliament. The program was government ownership of banks, insurance companies, railways and certain heavy industries. This was to be the new rising political movement of the postwar Canadian world — but it was nipped far below the bud, and, in fact, frost-killed, when the people of industrial Ontario (where labor is strong) cut its power to an insignificant 6 seats in a parliament of 90 votes.

All Canada is furnishing another test of socialism and you can check the results, but if CCF cannot win in the British labor center of Ontario it cannot hope for much anywhere outside the radical far west farming provinces.

In Britain the Labor party leader, Mr. Atlee, answered Churchill directly, defending the theory of socialism against the ideal of private enterprise for private profit. While Churchill may have taken political license with the gestapo deduction, he did not exaggerate the basic issue, which has been laid; "Do you want socialism or free enterprise?"

Atlee

The war experience of people has not been favorable to socialism. The lack of competition among sellers has destroyed the interests of the consumers today, and government management has nowhere been satisfactory to the people. Unless a buyer can walk out of a store and go to another to purchase what he wants, he can never be protected as to the quality of merchandise he buys or as to price, no matter how much the government regulates it. Every man and woman has found that out to his great discomfort during this war, not from books or propaganda, but out of his own daily experience in living.

Competition is the only thing which protects the consumers, who are all the people. Government ownership and operation is as noncompetitive as a trust, a cartel or a business monopoly. Once any single force gets the power of exclusive operation, the buyer must accept the terms. Where competition is most active, the buyer is best protected. Consider the service the public gets on those western railroads where some are bemoaning the parallel lines. It is much better than upon eastern roads which control a monopoly of travel. This is true of the buying of all goods or services. It is true of hotel accommodations, of buying cigarettes, of renting a house or buying a dress. If one power (government or private) owns all the business, or is in control of the operation for any reason, the public interests are not well served. Of course, they attribute our experiences to a shortage of goods or help. That is true, but the economic effect has been the destruction of competition. The consumer could be told what to buy and at how much. He could not get it across the street, cheaper or better.

In my opinion, government ownership is in the public interest only when it is in itself competitive—competing with private interests to serve the public better. Consider the two Canadian railroads, one private and one government owned. The public gets much better service than if the government owned both and railroading became a business of government bureaucracy, having political directors decide policies.

Economically, socialism cannot generate business-like competition. In a competitive economy, a great portion of business develops from the necessity of one concern to get ahead of another. This stimulates interest in products and sells more of them. The very incentive of competition adds to national income.

I suspect Churchill (who was never much of a politician) may have seized upon the most popular valid issue he could present. The labor leaders who took up a proposal to go "halfway to communism" have certainly not chosen the best time.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

by Lynn Chambers

Frosty Thirst-Quenchers Are Party Fare
(See Recipes Below)

Light Refreshments

Looking for an easy way to return your social obligations? This is the season for it, because entertaining can be cool, simple and still lovely.

All food can be point easy and fun to fix because it does not require standing over a hot stove to have it ready. For the simpler type of party, rely heavily on cooling thirst quenchers with perhaps a few cookies or small cakes arranged attractively on a platter. If the party takes the place of dinner, you might have several substantial salads. Try serving on the lawn or garden, buffet style, and save strain on housekeeping.

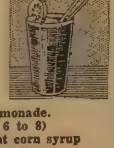
You will want to suggest coolness in your table settings. Blues and greens are very comfortable and you can relieve the monotony by having flowers in whites, pink or yellow, whichever goes best with what you have.

I've picked out some especially good beverages for this season. Don't use your supplies of canning sugar for such things as this. If you can manage to purchase ice cream and sherbet for the drinks, do so and save the sugar where it's most needed.

Orange Cream.
(Serves 6)

4 egg yolks
4½ cups orange juice
1½ cups cream or rich milk
Sugar, if desired

Beat egg yolks until light, add orange juice and blend thoroughly. Pour into glasses and stir in cream. Sweeten to taste, if sugar is needed. Serve at once.



Party Punch.
(Serves 8 to 10)

1 cup freshly made tea
1 cup sugar
2 cups water
1 cup orange juice
1 cup sliced, sweetened strawberries
⅓ cup lemon juice
1 pint carbonated water

Pour hot tea over sugar, add water. Cool. Add orange and lemon juice and strawberries. Just before serving, add carbonated water. If served in punch bowl, add thin slices of orange.

Orange Punch.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1 pint orange ice
4 pints dry ginger ale
Crushed ice
Maraschino cherries

Beat orange ice and ginger ale together. Serve in glasses with crushed ice and cherries.

Fruit Lemonade.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1½ cups light corn syrup
(Serves 6)
½ cup water
Juice of 2 lemons
Juice of 2 oranges
⅔ cup pineapple juice
4 tablespoons cracked ice
4 cherries
Few slices of banana
1½ cups ginger ale

Boil together syrup and water for 2 minutes. Set aside and cool. Pour one-half cup of the cooled syrup into shaker or large jar, add fruit juices and ice and shake. Fill glasses about half full of the mixture and complete with ginger ale, remaining syrup, slivered cherries and banana.

Cookies to go with the cool drinks should be tasty but sugar-saving. You'll like both of these suggestions:

Fudgies.
(Makes 4 dozen 2-inch cookies)

¼ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
½ cup dark corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 egg
2 squares chocolate
2 cups flour
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
¼ cup buttermilk or sour milk
¾ cup nuts

Cream together sugar and shortening. Add syrup gradually, beating after each addition. Blend in vanilla. Add egg and beat until light. Add melted chocolate. Sift together all dry ingredients, then add to creamed mixture alternately with buttermilk, beating until smooth after each addition. Blend in nuts. Drop by spoonfuls on greased baking sheet. Bake in a moderate, (350-degree) oven. (One-half cup cocoa may be used in place of chocolate. Sift with flour, soda and salt.)

Almond Jam Bars.
(Makes 2½ dozen medium-sized bars)

½ cup shortening
½ teaspoon almond extract
½ teaspoon vanilla
½ cup corn syrup or honey
1½ cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon cloves
1 egg
¾ cup jam

Mix together shortening and extracts. Add syrup, mixing well. Sift together flour, baking powder, salt, cinnamon and cloves. Add to shortening and mix until crumbly. Beat in egg, mixing well. Spread half of batter on greased, shallow pan. Spread jam over batter. Cover jam with remaining batter. Bake in a moderately hot (400-degree) oven 25-30 minutes. Cut in bars.

Here's a light layer cake that's lovely for more elaborate parties. Spread marshmallow filling in between and on top, then sprinkle with shaved nuts and candied cherries:

Swedish Layer Cake.

5 whites of eggs
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
1 cup sugar
¼ cup cocoa
½ cup flour
½ teaspoon vanilla

Beat eggs until foamy, add cream of tartar, sugar and cocoa and beat well very stiff. Add vanilla, fold in sifted flour and place in 2 shallow, buttered pans. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven about 20 minutes.

A good cookie type of sweet for summertime is this one that is sugar-saving, too. Melt about 2½ cups of semi-sweet chocolate chips in the top part of a double boiler and then mix in 3½ cups wheat flakes. Drop by spoonfuls onto waxed paper and allow to cool. Or, spread in a greased, shallow pan and cut into squares.

Lynn Says

Easy Sips: Next time you have iced tea, flavor with honey instead of sugar and serve with lemon and orange wedges. It's delightful.

If you have leftover fruit juices, coffee or tea, make ice cubes with them. Then frosty drinks will not have that watery flavor. Bits of fruit, berries or mint sprigs may also be frozen in ice cubes to make them attractive.

For a good afternoon pickup, try chilled tomato juice with ginger ale or, use apricot nectar with a dash of lemon juice.

Iced coffee takes on a party touch when topped with meringue and sprinkled with cinnamon.

GOD'S JOY IN CREATION

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 1:1-5, 10-12, 16-18, 26, 27, 31.

GOLDEN TEXT—God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good.—Genesis 1:31.

The destiny of this world seems to be in the balances in our day with wicked men ruthlessly trying to destroy that which is good and upright. We are deeply concerned in our hearts that the right should triumph and that a just and righteous peace should come.

In such a day it is good to remind ourselves, as we will in our three-month series of studies in Genesis, that man did not make this world, nor is it the product of natural forces. God made it.

God, who is eternal, infinite, and knows all from the beginning, is not moved by the impulses of the moment nor staggered by the catastrophes of a day.

He made the world. He made man. He had a plan for them, and still has a plan which He will in due season work out for His own glory.

I. God Made Heaven and Earth (vv. 1-5, 10-12, 16-18).

The biblical account of creation—"In the beginning God" — stands as a dignified, satisfactory, intelligent explanation of the origin of things, and in bold contrast to the confusing and almost unbelievable theories of men.

The best of scientists admit that they know nothing of the origin of things, and some say that they never will know. The answer to this query, with which every human philosophy opens, is the affirmation with which the divine account in Genesis opens —"In the beginning God."

Space forbids full discussion of the account of creation, but a study of it will reveal its beautiful order, symmetry, and completeness.

Compare that orderly account with the absurdities of the ancient human cosmogonies, and you have a new regard for Scripture.

II. God Made Man in His Own Image (vv. 26, 27):

Although man has often so debased himself by sin and disobedience to God that it seems almost unbelievable, it is nevertheless true that he was made in the likeness and image of God. Because that is true, we never give up hope for him. Because of that image, no matter how deeply defaced by sin, man still may be touched by redeeming grace and restored to fellowship with God.

The likeness and image of God in man refers to a moral and spiritual likeness. Man is a living soul with intelligence, feeling and will. He is a moral being, knowing the difference between right and wrong. He is a self-conscious, personal being.

To man God gave dominion over the earth and all its potential powers. Sometimes one has been hopeful that man was making good progress in the development of the earth's resources for his own good and the glory of God. But one is sad to see how he has used this great God-given opportunity for destruction and death. Only a revival of real Christianity can bring him back to his senses. Let us pray and work for it.

Observe that the family was established as the center of man's life on earth, as God gave him a "help meet unto him." Woman was taken "not out of man's head that she should rule over him; nor out of his feet to be trampled upon; but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected by him, and near his heart to be loved by him" (Matthew Henry).

The decay of family life and the modern substitution of social and civic units as the basis of life have led to disastrous results, one of which is juvenile delinquency. Not only do we need a revival of religion, we also need a revival of the home life of the nation.

III. God Made All Things Well (v. 31).

When men do recognize the hand of God in creation, they often seem to feel that what He made was rather limited and defective. It would almost seem that God should be clever about perfecting His work, developing it and making it useful.

As a matter of fact, God, who had all knowledge and whose standards are higher than man's standards could possibly be, looked over His creation and "behold, it was very good" (v. 31). It was a "finished" job (2:1).

Man has destroyed much of creation's beauty. Sin came in and marred it. What man's inventive cleverness has developed of the possibilities of this world is only a minute fraction of what is yet available. Instead of boasting, man might well be distressed at the pathetic slowness with which he has "thought God's thoughts after Him."

Instead of fighting and destroying, he ought to give his energies to building, developing, and above all, to loving God with all his heart and his neighbor as himself (Matt. 22:37-40).

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the orders, to permit food and water to enter the city. The Major placed a ceiling on all prices to stop a black market caused by the generosity of the Americans. Mayor Nasta, who had been placed in the prisoner of war cage, escaped, but was soon retaken. German prisoners, who believed him still a power, had aided his escape.

CHAPTER XIX

On the evening of their third day, some of them went to Tomasino, and Agnello said: "Tomasino, don't you think you ought to go to the Mister Major and thank him for making it possible for us to go fishing?"

Tomasino was as happy as he could ever be, but that did not mean that he smiled, or that he would answer happily. "I have been to the Palazzo once to see him, because my wife Rosa forced me to. Never again. I hate that place."

The young man named Sconzo said: "Then don't you think we should send Agnello? We think that we owe our thanks to the Mister Major. We were talking about it while we were out today."

Tomasino was not pleased with the suggestion that Agnello should go in his place. "Is Agnello the head of the fishermen?" he said.

"No," Sconzo said, "but if you do not wish to go . . ."

"The best fishing boat in this harbor is named Tina," Tomasino said, and though he spoke gloomily, there was a kind of gaiety in his idea. "Therefore the one for whom that boat is named ought to be the one to go and thank the Mister Major."

The other fishermen thought that that was a fine idea, but Agnello said: "We would all like to be present when you give instructions to your daughter as to what she is to say to the Mister Major." He was afraid the grim old Tomasino would tell her to say something begrudging.

So all the fishermen went up to Tomasino's house and found Tina, and Tomasino said: "Tina, we have an errand for you. The fishermen of Adano want you to go to see the Mister Major for them. . . ."

Tina surprised everyone by blushing and refusing to go.

"But why not?" Agnello asked. "We thought it would be nice if a beautiful girl took our message to the Mister Major instead of a man who stinks of fish."

Tomasino did not like that remark and he said angrily: "Tomasino does not stink of fish any worse than certain other fishermen he knows."

Agnello said: "I did not have any particular fisherman in mind. Do not forget that it was suggested that I should go. I stink too."

"That is true," Tomasino said with a puckered face.

Tina said: "I just do not wish to go."

Tomasino turned on her: "Girl, by the same reasoning which made your mother force me to go to the Mister Major against my will, I now order you to go to him also."

Tina lowered her head and said: "Well, if you order me . . ." Agnello said afterwards that he thought by the way she said this, she really wanted to go all along.

Tomasino said: "I want you to tell him that we are glad to be able to go fishing . . ."

"And that we are thankful to him for making it possible," Agnello said.

"And that we are very grateful for the new rigging," Merendino said.

"Also if he has had anything to do with sending so many fish into our nets, we thank him," Sconzo said.

Tomasino said: "Tell him those things but don't make a fool of yourself, daughter."

She said with more vehemence than was necessary: "Don't worry, I won't."

Tina went to see the Mister Major at eight o'clock the next morning. When Zito led her to Major Joppolo's desk, she said defiantly: "You said that if I had business with you, I should come to your office. I have come."

Major Joppolo had the discretion to wave Zito out of the room before he said: "I am sorry I said that. I have been miserable about it ever since."

Tina said: "Have you?" That much she said softly, then she added harshly: "You ought to have been. You were very rude."

The Major said: "I know I was. I'm really very sorry. I have been trying to find out the thing you wanted to know."

Tina was all softness now: "Do you mean about my Giorgio? Have you found out? Is he a prisoner?"

"I don't know yet. But I may have some word for you on all the prisoners in a few days."

"You may? Good word, Mister Major?"

"Good word, Tina."

"Oh, Mister Major, I thank you, I thank you and I kiss your hand."

Major Joppolo hardly had time to think vaguely that he wouldn't mind kissing Tina's hand before she had run out.

She ran all the way home and when Tomasino asked her if she had said what the fishermen had told her, she said that she had, oh yes, she had, and she threw her arms around her father's neck and kissed him on both cheeks, and he put his arms around her and pressed her a little and said glumly: "My little Tina, I think you are crazy."

The trouble with Errante Gaetano was that he couldn't keep his mind on anything. Or to put it the other way around: whatever had his mind at the moment seized it so wholly that he couldn't think about anything else. It made no difference what his mind ought to be on; whatever it was on, it was really on.

After General Marvin ordered his good mule shot, Errante got another. This one was not as amiable as the first, and was more stubborn in its mind. But it was a mule, and it gave Errante both pleasure and work.

One afternoon Errante was driving this new mule through the town. It was late in the afternoon, the hour when most of the children of the town got out on the Via Umberto the First and shouted for caramels. American military traffic seemed to be particularly heavy at that hour each evening.

As he thought back on it later (and he had plenty of time to think it over in jail), it seemed to Errante that a great number of things happened very quickly. Actually it was just that quite a few things flashed across his mind in fairly rapid succession, giving him an illusion of great activity.

"My little Tina, I think you are crazy."

First he looked ahead down the Via Umberto the First and he saw the bridge over the Rosso River, and he shied, like a sensitive horse seeing a place where it has hurt itself once before. Errante shuddered every time he saw that bridge, because it made him think of the rude awakening he had had there and of the shooting of his mule.

Next he saw a row of amphibious trucks come toward him across the bridge. These amphibious trucks fascinated Errante. He had recently spent one entire day sitting on a knoll near the beach about five miles west of Adano watching these fat creatures waddle out across the sand, let themselves gingerly down into the water and then churn off to the cargo ships lying offshore; and then churn back again, and climb up out of the sea, like any amphibious animal looking heavier and clumsier on land than in the water. Errante loved them and called them Swimming War. "Here comes Swimming War," he thought to himself when he saw the amphibious trucks crossing the bridge.

After the trucks, his mind focused for a few moments on the figure of Gargano, Chief of the Carabinieri, who was directing traffic about half way down the Via Umberto the First. Errante said to himself: "Even if Gargano can talk three times as fast as anyone else—once with his mouth, once with his left hand, and once with his right—I do not like him."

Errante's mind did not dwell on the distasteful subject of Gargano for long, because Errante's ear transmitted to Errante's mind the sound of many children shouting: "Caramelle! Caramelle!" Errante liked children even more than he liked Swimming War.

Errante's slow mind swung his eyes around to the direction of the sound. He saw the children on the sidewalk, and his mind concentrated on the pleasing sight.

His mind noted that there were approximately fifty children running up and down the sidewalk, that about six or seven leaders, somewhat older and taller than the average, were always out in front, that the others tagged willingly behind, and that all of them, from the rich little great-grandson of old Cacopardo all bright in blue, to the numerous beggar children in brown tatters—all of them laughed with a tinkling laughter and shouted for caramels as if they really expected to be rolling them on their tongues in no time at all.

What the mind of Errante did not note was that his new mule, either following an accidental whim or fascinated, like its master, by the children, had turned at right angles to the street and had stopped walking.

Swimming War was coming up the street. Gargano the Two-Hands had a vigilant eye out for traffic on the street. The new mule of Errante stood stock-still right across the road. And Errante stared at the children, thinking only of them and not noticing that anything was wrong.

"How nice it would be to be a child!" Errante's one-track mind thought. "Look at the fat little son of the fat Craxi! Look at the thin son of stupid Erba! See how Erba's ragged child holds the hand of the rich little sulphur boy in blue! Noisy old Afronti was shouting to me the other day about democracy. He said my mind was slow. He said I would never understand. I wish he were here now. Here are the true democrats of the world. Childhood is the real democracy!"

All of a sudden a terrible confusion burst in on his thoughts.

Errante's slow eyes saw only a flash of uniform. The uniform hurled itself at the head of his mule, wrenching the head to one side. The mule reared and screamed.

That scream did something to Errante's mind. He saw a vision of his other, beloved mule dead beside the road. That awful thing would not happen again while Errante survived to prevent it.

He leaped from his cart. He saw the blur of a uniform running at his mule's head again. He charged at the uniform. Where a head should be at the top of the blur he struck with the heel of his hand. He hit something and heard an angry roar.

The roar, he realized in a few moments, came from Gargano the Two-Hands. It said: "Imbecile! Get out of the road, can't you see the trucks coming? Don't you know that blocking traffic is sabotage? Don't you know that you can be shot for blocking traffic?"

Errante's one-track mind played him a funny trick now. It stopped in the middle of its fury to think: "Look at Two-Hands! Trying to talk and catch a mule at the same time. He has to use his hands to catch my mule, and he has to use his hands to talk. He cannot do either."

But when Gargano gave off trying to talk and concentrated on the mule, Errante's mind went back to its business. He threw himself at Gargano again. He struck another blow with the heel of his hand that was to decorate Two-Hands with a purple spot under the left eye for several days.

Two-Hands roared again with pain and anger. But he did not try to argue now. He grabbed the mule's reins near the bit and tried to pull him to one side. The mule, however, had decided not to move until this hullabaloo was over. Two-Hands could not budge it, so he kicked the flank of the mule.

Errante decided to retaliate in kind. He kicked the flank of Two-Hands.

Gargano roared again, and beat the mule in the head.

Errante beat Gargano the Two-Hands in the head.

Errante grabbed Two-Hands by the ears, even though Two-Hands' ears were not as handy to grab as the mule's, and he pulled.

Gargano the Two-Hands would have lost this battle, for he was fighting against two beasts, but at this moment some American soldiers from the amphibious trucks came running up.

One of the soldiers pulled Gargano the Two-Hands aside. Three of the soldiers went to work on the mule, and succeeded in making it get off to one side of the street. It took four soldiers to put Errante off the street.

When these things were accomplished, the American soldiers went back to their amphibious trucks. All they wanted was to pass.

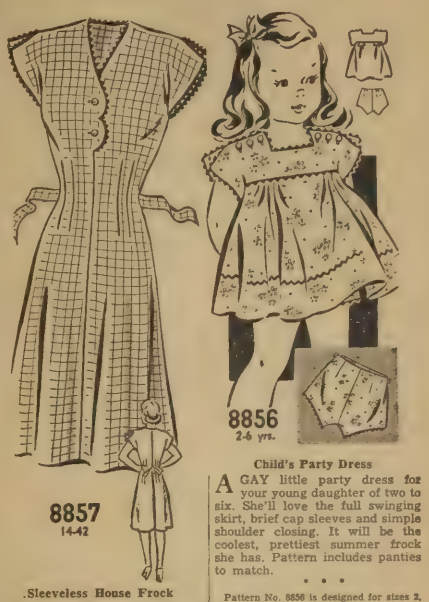
Major Joppolo enjoyed his afternoons as judge, partly because he liked to see the happy effect of real justice on the people of Adano, and partly because Gargano, the Chief of Carabinieri, acted out every crime as if it were a crime against himself.

Major Joppolo's trials were impressive, because he managed, by trickery, by moral pressure and by persuasion, to make the truth seem something really beautiful and necessary.

Gargano brought in the first culprit, one Monday afternoon, and as he led him in, he said: "We will take the light cases first."

"You have some serious cases, then?" Major Joppolo asked.

Gargano held up his forefinger, and said angrily: "One."



"Then maybe our fines will be high this week," the Major said. He thought he was joking, but he had become almost miserly on behalf of Adano, and each Monday afternoon he used to try to see how much he could net in fines.

"I hope so," said Gargano, vehemently. Then he said: "First case."

Relic of Ancient Battle of Wits Instead of Weapons

One competition held during the annual literary congress in Wales is believed to be the last relic of those ancient contests in which heroes fought with their wits instead of weapons, says Collier's.

A poet attempts to sing a pennil or improvised verse, to a tune played by a harpist, who introduces unique variations to confuse the singer and also frequently ends the music unexpectedly to catch him in the middle of a sentence.

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

Be Alive On The Fifth

Planning on having yourself a time over the Fourth of July with more gas, V-E day and all?

Don't do it, instead stay close to home, take it easy, and help prevent an avalanche of holiday accidents that would delay the knockout blow to the Japs.

With an appeal to "put victory first on the Fourth" the National Safety Council is asking every citizen to become part of a nationwide campaign to avert the usual huge holiday toll that this year would waste manpower, material and time needed to speed final victory.

There are indications that a lot of people are going to find it hard to resist the combination of a little more gas in the tank and the feeling that "it wont be long now."

Please remember that the Japs couldn't ask for anything better than this. A fourth of July holiday that would pile up a big accident toll and thus slow down our war effort would be a better holiday for them than for us.

Our boys out there in the Pacific will be fighting on Independence Day this year to preserve that independence. The least we can do on the home front is not to use the holiday to hurt their efforts.

Let's take it easy, put victory first on the Fourth and be back on the job on the Fifth.

Food Shortage Ahead

Believing that the food shortage will [illegible] "genuine crisis" in Northeastern States within sixty days, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, joined with Gov. Raymond B. Baldwin, of Connecticut, to call a conference of thirteen governors to discuss the situation particularly the shortage of meat, poultry and eggs.

This should emphasize the warning, broadcast by responsible Federal officials, that the nation faces its tightest food situation in the coming six months. It should encourage individuals to plant gardens and take definite steps to insure a certain supply of food as far as possible.

Far luckier than many other communities, Chilton County has a modern quick-freeze plant for the use of farmers and house-wives. It is ably managed by Hollis Jackson and definitely an asset to our county, especially at this time.

Cattail Fluff

It may surprize those who are familiar with the familiar spikes of cattails to hear that more than 100,000 pounds of cattail fluff is being processed for government needs each month.

According to the Chemurgic Digest, there is a possible post-war business for typha, the trade name for the fluff, which is now being used in the production of life preserver equipment. It can also be used as stuffing and filling for upholstery and light weight insulation for children's snow suits.

Since the cattails are a natural growth the main expense is the cost of harvesting the fluff. One company estimates that as much as 340,000,000 pounds may be gathered per year and that experiments will increase the size of the spikes and the quality of the fluff.

Outstanding Production

The production achieved by American farmers, under the impetus of wartime necessity, is an outstanding performance which is not appreciated by most Americans.

For the two war years, 1942 and 1943 farm production was almost fifty per cent greater than in 1917 and 1918. The same acreage was involved in the agricultural operations of the nation but 4,000,000 fewer persons lived on the farms.

One of the outstanding gains was scored in the production of corn. The nation's corn belt in 1943 equalled its all-time production record but with 6,500,000 fewer acres planted. This was largely due to hybrid corn, developed by the personal research of Henry A. Wallace before he became a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet.

The increased production of American farms, despite fewer persons working, reflects the gradual mechanization of agriculture. The process will continue and, in fact, is only now getting under way in regard to cotton.

Horde Of Surplus Goods

"A fantastic conglomeration of material and land scattered all over the globe," and which cost the Government $100,000,000,000 will comprise the enormous surplus of war goods and property which must be disposed of by the Government when warfare ends.

Alfred G. Howse, Administrator of the Surplus Property Board, says that the estimate of the surplus property to be left over, places its cost "as equal to a third of the value of every man-made article—from the smallest pin to Boulder Dam—which this country contained less than ten years ago."

The Administrator thinks that consumer goods should be disposed of speedily while an active market exists and that this policy will get the best price for the Government and clear the way for expanded civilian production. In the case of plants and capital equipment, he believes, there must be greater caution to avoid inequitable distribution, to guard against monopoly, to safeguard employment and to protect a war reserve.

The problem of disposing of surplus goods is complicated by "preferential rights" given to 285,000 Federal, State and local governments and to countless veterans and small businesses, and by legislation which provides for "ample distribution" to rural areas which might otherwise be neglected.

Two - Thirds American

Of the ninety-one divisions in the Allied Expeditionary Forces, operating in Western Europe, sixty were American, fourteen British, five Canadian, seven French and one Polish.

These figures reveal that American troops made up almost two-thirds of the army which tumbled the Nazis. Similar figures for the aerial forces engaged are not available, and it is not yet possible to assess the naval contribution made by the various powers.

It was entirely logical that an American officer should have supreme command of this force. In the selection of General Eisenhower the United States presented the world with a General whose capacity, as a military leader and a diplomat, is not yet thoroughly appreciated, even in his own country.

MT. CARMEL

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Seems popular for columnist to have guest writers in the summertime so why not let some contributor take care of ours this week. First though, let us put in a word for I. S. Levine and his crippled childrens fund. He is still short $50.23 and would like to reach his quota this week. He says the goal is so close, and yet so far. If someone doesn't hurry and turn in the required amount, we are afraid that Dock will get mad and raise it himself. Seriously speaking, if no one has asked you for a donation to this most worthy cause, don't hesitate to look Dock or another member of the Committee up and make your contribution. It is needed and it would really be a shame for Chilton County to miss reaching the goal when such a small amount is necessary.

One of our readers sent in this little rhyme last week and we will pass it on to you. You have probably had just such an experience with your garbage can.

MY GARBAGE CAN

I had a garbage can,
All bright and new and gay,
It stood up in the corner
Out of everybody's way.

To keep it clean and nice.
I tried with all my might,
It was so tall and straight
With lid on very tight.

One day the City Truck
Came thundering up the drive,
The man emptied it,
And threw it on it's side.

It left an awful dent,
And badly crushed in rim,
But after all, the can
Did not belong to him.

Then another day,
Hastily the man,
Drove the truck right over
The lid to this poor can.

Now it can't be fastened,
So flies swarm around
And prowling dogs at night,
Strow the contents 'round.

It cannot do it's duty,
For it's scarred and badly bent,
So won't you garbage men,
Please take this gentle hint?

CANE CREEK

Our Sunday School attendance last Sunday was good. Some were absent. We have the new books for the next quarter. It will be an interesting quarter from the book of Genisis. We will find what happened in the beginning, what God created, etc.

One of our members was called away from us again Saturday morning. Mrs Hart Jones, and was buried here Sunday afternoon. She was a good faithful member and no sweeter and more truthful words could be spoken of no one than Bro. Williams spoke of her. Her life was a testamony for us to judge by. We are sorry and sad to give her up but God knew best His will, not ours, be done. Our hearts go out to the children and relatives in sympathy. Weep not as those who have no hope for our loss is Heavens gain. She is resting in the arms of Jesus, waiting for us to come to her.

We have good news from several of our boys in the service here. Pvt. Jack Robinson is on his way home. He was missing and was a prisoner of Germany. A telegram from the War Department states he is O. K. and coming home. His brother Pfc. Buck Robinson is O.K. in Germany, says he is having a good time, wants to come home but don't know if he can or not.

Pvt. Wilburn C. Sanders wrote to his grandparents, Mr and Mrs P. C. Weldon and said he was alright. Living in a civilian home and they are furnished good and the Germans farm different to us, just in small patches.

Pvt. Winston Coggins is on his way home. His wife, Edna Giles Coggins and baby lives here.

Pvt. Charles N. Williamson is in Camp Wheeler, Ga., expecting to get home on furlough by the Fourth.

Petty Officer, First Class, Kermit L. Connell is somewhere in the South west Pacific, he is o. k.

A letter from Wallace Jones says he is alright in Germany and gets the News from Clanton and mentioned how he enjoyed Cane Creek News. We are always thinking of our boys and praying for them. His brother, Pfc. Howard Jones is in a hospital in France and has been for the last two months but is better.

Another one, Hershel Littlefield writes he is o. k. and was going to visit Howard in the hospital.

Mrs. Hershel Giles and two sons have been visiting for the last two weeks in Pittsburg, with her husband Pvt. Hershel Giles.

Mrs Catherine Kelly is visiting her mother, Mrs. Essie Killgore.

Mrs Hilton Robinson and children are visiting relatives here this week.

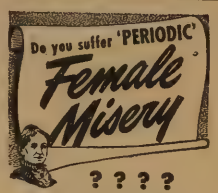
Grandpa Ingram and Miss Dot Dennis are visiting in Bessemer this week.

Mrs Amer Dennis and Uncle Chat Ingram visited relatives in Sylacauga last week.

Service for next Sunday: Sunday School at 10 o'clock. Preaching following and singing in the afternoon. Come to Cane Creek and feel welcome here.

MEMORIAL SERVICES HELD

Memorial services were held April 22, 1945, for S-Sgt. James Thomas Wellman, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. James Franklin Wellman of Winter Park, Fla. Sergeant Wellman, thirty-one years of age, was reported missing from his base in Assam, India, while on a mission over the HUMP into Burma on the ninth of December. Later his death was confirmed by the War Department.



He enlisted in the Air Corps in June, 1941, and had been overseas seven months when killed. He was a radio operator with the Air Transport Command. After having completed four hundred operational hours flying supplies over the HUMP, he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal. He was awarded the Purple Heart posthumously.

Sergeant Wellman was married two years ago to Miss Myrtle Holley of Clanton, Ala., and was stationed at Maxwell Field, Ala., before going to India.

A native of Winter Park, Fla., he graduated from High School there where he was active in school activities and was manager of the football team.

He has three brothers overseas, two in the European Area and one in the South Pacific.

WITH CONCRETE

While you're improving your farm for greater "war food" production, do the job for keeps, with concrete! Here's a "how to do it" book that will help you build such essential structures as:

Barn Floors
Feeding Floors
Walks, Runways
Foundations
Concrete Masonry Construction
Cisterns
Watering Tanks
Septic Tanks
Home Improvements
Manure Pits
Trench Silos
Hog Wallows
Soil-Saving Dams

Remember, concrete is firesafe, termite-proof, easy to work with, low in first cost, needs little upkeep, endures for generations—and it requires a minimum of critical war materials.

We were all glad to have Bro. Stuckey back with us Sunday and Sunday night. He brought us two very inspiring messages.

The Doreen Owens G. A. met at the Church Saturday afternoon with 8 present. The program was given from the World Comrades.

Plans are being made by Mulberry W. M. U. to have the quarterly meeting of Chilton Association at the Church on Wednesday July 11th all day.

Mrs Eleanor Latham and son from Birmingham is visiting her mother, Mrs. Maggie Sumners here.

Mrs H. R. Oden and Miss Annie Joyce Oden of Foley, Ala., visited friends and relatives here recently.

Miss Sallie Fay Clinner is getting along fine after undergoing an operation in a hospital in Montgomery recently and she came home Sunday.

Mrs. Carrie Lecroy who recently underwent an operation in a hospital in Birmingham is at home now and is doing nicely.

Miss Annie Laura Oden of Robertsdale, Ala., is visiting Mariam Wells and other friends and relatives here.

Mr. Johnie Conway confimes ill at his home here.

Mrs. Gladys Calfee and children of Evergreen are visiting her parents Mr and Mrs Presley Turner here.

Mr and Mrs Vernon Cumming and family of near Thorsby spent the day with Mr and Mrs Denson Conway recently.

No Security But A Cow And A Pig

How would you like for your grocery bill to be ten dollars or less each month? Food rationing holds no problem for Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Davis and their five children. Mr. Davis rents a farm on Route 2, Clanton, and has every cultivatable acre planted in food, feed and cash crops. The Davis's are proud they have the opportunity to raise their food, and they buy only those items which they cannot grow.

Mrs. Davis was enthusiastic about their garden and truck crops. Although damaged by the hail, heavy rains and the dry weather which followed, she said, "We will continue planting, using low places about on the farm for late summer and fall vegetable crops. We canned 500 quarts of fruits and vegetables last year and plan to do more this year. We also plan to save both fruits and vegetables by drying. Last year, we borrowed money from the Farm Security Administration to operate on and that's the first time we have ever had enough money for a pressure cooker. We wonder now how we ever made out without it. With it's use, we increased our canning by half."

Mrs. Davis went on to tell a little of their past and why they felt good about their prospects for the future. "We married fourteen years ago," she said, "and up until last year, we farmed on halves. That's a hard way for a family to get along, and they never have anything of their own. Our children are growing up, the oldest being thirteen, and we want to do better than rent on halves. We want to own our own home. We knew the Farm Security Administration helped low-income farmers buy livestock and equipment and would loan a man money at a low rate of interest to operate on. In October of 1943, we made application for a loan and received it to make our crop in 1944. When we made application, we had one cow, one hog and a few hens; not much security, but we were willing to work and needed money to make the change from renting on halves. The Farm Security Administration made us a loan to buy a mule and some equipment plus money for seed, feed, fertilizer and groceries. Last Fall, we were in good shape. We paid our maturities due FSA and had fifty dollars to pay on a wagon besides depositing $200 in the bank to make this crop. We are making our first crop on this place and have planted seven acres of cotton, 12 acres corn, 5 acres truck crops and hay besides food patches for home use. If our crop turns out well this Fall, we will pay all we owe and buy another mule. We need more land because next year one of our boys will make a regular hand. We are looking forward and planning ahead to own our home some day."

"The Farm Security Administration has been a great help to us," she continued. "It's hard for a man renting on halves to save enough to 'set up' his own operations. It's not so hard to make the start with financial backing and some one to advise you. We feel well repaid for our efforts and we know our whole family is much better off than ever before. A farmer never knows a better way of living or doing things if he isn't willing to try to improve his own condition."

Conway-Sorrell Wedding

The marriage of Miss Tommie Ellen Conway, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. A. Conway, of Jemison, to Sgt John Wesley Sorrell of Birmingham was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Wednesday, June 20 at eight o'clock. The vows were read by the Rev. Howard Foshee of Montgomery, before an improvized altar composed of white standards holding yellow gladiolas white snapdragons and fern, and tapers burning in brass candelabra.

The music was in charge of Mrs. Cecil Martin and Miss Melba Patton. Mrs. Martin played, "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," and Grieg's "I Love Thee," while the tapers were lighted and the traditional wedding marches Miss Patton sang, "Because" and "I Love You Truly."

The brides were sighted by Miss Hattie Hall Sowell of Cordova, cousin of the bride and Miss Ann Turner who were maids respectively in corsages of yellow daisies and gypsophlia and carried white tapers.

Mrs. W. H. DuBose attended her sister as matron of honor and W. H. DuBose was best man to Sgt. Sorrell. Mrs. DuBose wore navey and white printed chiffon and her corsage was of red rose buds.

The bride was lovely in a blue crepe [illegible] trimmed with sparkling [illegible] at the neck and a draped waistline [illegible] tied self material loops. She carried a white satin [illegible] centered with a white orchid showered with [illegible] tied into white satin ribbons.

A reception followed the ceremony. Guests were received by the bride's mother wearing pink seersucker organdy. Her corsage was of white rosebuds. Out-of-town guests for the wedding included from Birmingham Miss Mae Pearl Sorrell, sister of the groom, Miss Betty Franke, Mr. and Mrs. William Watts, Mrs. H. V. Shaw, aunt of the bride; from Jasper, Miss Hazel Snow; from Montgomery, Mrs. Howard Foshee, Miss Martha Foshee and Miss Dorothy Nell Blalock of Alabama College.

The bridal couple will be at home at 614-10th Ave. Tuscaloosa where Sgt. Sorrell is stationed. For traveling the bride wore a brown gabardine suit with a lime blouse and orchid corsage. Her accessories were white and luggage tan.

The bride was a Junior at Alabama College, where she was majoring in art.

Sgt. Sorrell recently returned from combat with the 15th Air Force in Italy.

Lt. James Littlejohn is spending a furlough with his mother, Mrs. Dezzie Littlejohn, before beginning his internship.

The following recently enjoyed a theatre party: Misses Frakie [illegible] Langston, Melba Patton, Mary James Patton, Bernice Given, Annette Reaverly, Mary Edna Reynolds, Mary Catherine McNeil, Jean Guy Blanchee Henson and Mrs. Cecil Martin.

A revival meeting will be held at the Methodist Church, beginning Sunday, July 1st. A cordial invitation is extended to the services to all who will wish to attend.

GRADUATES AT U. OF P.

James T. Littlejohn, son of Mrs. Dezzie A. Littlejohn of Jemison, and the late T. Elton Littlejohn graduated from the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia with the degree of Doctor of Medicine at a Convocation of the University Council in the [illegible] Auditorium of the campus on June 18, 1945. He attended the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine as a member of the Army Specialized Training Corps and was commissioned a first Lt., in the Army Medical Corps in the graduation exercises.

Dr. Littlejohn will interne at T.C.I. Employees Hospital, Fairfield, Ala., beginning July 1st, for a period of 9 months following which he will be assigned to active duty in the Medical Corps of the Army.

COTTON CLASSING IS FREE UNDER S-D ACT

Free cotton classing by Government classers under the terms of the Smith-Doxey Act is available to Alabama farmers again this year but the one-variety groups must make application for this service, says J. T. Belue, extension specialist in cotton improvement.

Eighteen times as much cotton was officially classed last year, as in 1939 because the classing card with the grade and staple of the cotton and also its loan value greatly helped growers in marketing their cotton or in obtaining loans, according to Belue.

In 1939, only 15,000 bales were classed but in 1944 there were 272,801 bales classed.

Belue suggests that where growers are interested in securing the free classing service they should contact their county agent relative to setting up a one-variety community organization and then making application for free classing service. The classing card on the cotton will be acceptable on any Government loan or purchase program.

This year the ginner must submit cut samples from both sides of the bale, as box samples are not being accepted. Each ginner must also be bonded.

It is recommended that applications be filed with the Birmingham office by July 15th. This will give time for all the supplies to be mailed out or delivered before the actual ginning begins.

ALABAMA HARVESTS TIMBER, PULPWOOD

Alabama farms furnished about 45 per cent of the 1,841,397 board feet of saw timber cut in the state during 1944, also approximately 400,000 cords of pulpwood, as part of their effort to supply war material.

Too, in spite of labor shortage, Alabama farmers planted a total of 921,000 forest trees to prevent soil erosion, reclaim land, and produce a future timber crop.

As a direct aid to farmers in supplying forest products for the war effort, the Extension Service, through the Farm Woodland Marketing Project in 32 counties, gave advice to 840 farmers on 186,337 acres of farm woodland.

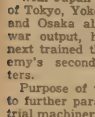
Superforts Rip New Jap Targets; Big Five Key to United Nations' Postwar Security Organization

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Pressing stretcher into service to move effects of command post, marines slog through stream inundating road on Okinawa.



PACIFIC:
New Attacks

With Japan's key industrial cities of Tokyo, Yokohama, Nagoya, Kobe and Osaka all but knocked out of war output, heavy U. S. bombers next trained their sights on the enemy's secondary production centers.

Purpose of the newest raids was to further paralyze the Japs' industrial machinery by pulverizing cities like Kagoshima, Omuta, Hamatsu and Yokkaichi, which embrace scores of smaller but vital factories and thousands of home shops.

While the B-29s launched their latest aerial offensive, army and marine forces cleaned up the remnants of opposition on Okinawa, 325 miles from Tokyo.

Elation over the triumph, however, was sobered by the death of 10th army commander, Lt. Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner Jr., who died after being struck by a shell fragment at the front on the eve of victory. Fifty-eight years old, General Buckner led the U. S. ground forces on Okinawa after having spent many months planning the campaign in 1944.

Gen. Buckner

As the Yanks rolled the enemy into the sea on the southern end of Okinawa after having smashed through the cave-studded Shuri line in earlier fighting, Admiral Nimitz estimated 80,459 Jap troops had been killed in 77 days of fighting, with only 1,680 taken prisoners. During that time, U. S. ground losses totaled 5,332 killed and 21,348 wounded.

TRUCK STRIKE:
Army Takes Over

"The army will break the strike. You can't beat the United States army."

Thus spoke Ellis T. Longenecker, Office of Defense Transportation official called in to manage private struck-bound truck lines in Chicago, as Yanks piled into carriers or provided escorts for non-striking drivers so as to deliver vital war material and civilian supplies.

Remaining idle were an estimated 10,000 of 14,000 members of the independent Chicago Truck Drivers union and Local 705 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. They walked out in protest of a War Labor board award of a $4.08 weekly raise for a 51-hour week after demanding a $5 boost for a 48-hour week.

Though 400 uniformed Yanks joined the estimated 4,000 non-striking drivers in the early days of the walkout, operations were far below normal, and the railroads placed an embargo on incoming freight to prevent pile-ups at terminals.

MOSCOW:
Try Poles

Reminiscent of the celebrated purge trials of 1937, the majority of Polish underground leaders on trial in Moscow for plotting against Russia apparently sealed their own doom by pleading guilty to all charges, while others admitted partial guilt. Only one pleaded innocent.

Appearing before the military division of the Russian supreme court, the 16 Poles were accused of committing sabotage behind the Red army lines, with the leaders also charged with conspiring to build up an organization to participate in a future war against the Soviets as part of a bloc of states headed by Germany.

Meanwhile, in Moscow, Polish leaders strove to organize a representative government which would strike some kind of balance between the Russian-sponsored Warsaw provisional regime and the non-communist elements. Though the Reds have insisted that the provisional regime must serve as the backbone for any government, the U. S. and Britain have sought to temper it with more conservative membership.

UNITED NATIONS:
Chart Security

With Pres. Harry S. Truman having flown to the west coast to be on hand for the closing session to crown the delegates' work, the United Nations put the finishing touches to the postwar security organization designed to keep peace in the future.

As the organization took final shape, major responsibility for maintaining the stability of the postwar world lay in the hands of the security council, bulwarked by the Big Five — the U. S., Britain, Russia, France and China—with authority vested in them to apply political or economic pressure to remove threats or call up the international peace force to curb hostilities.

Though the United Nations' organization also provides for a general assembly in which all member countries would be represented, work of this body would be restricted to discussion, resolution or recommendation. In the words of Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, it would be the "Town Hall of the World" and would serve to influence public opinion.

Although the final disposition of boundaries must await the peace conferences, the organization does provide for international trusteeships of conquered territory or subject people, with the U. S. being allowed to keep all Pacific islands important to defense. Under the final charter, so called "dependent" or "subject" people would be afforded opportunity to achieve self-rule or independence.

To be under a general United Nations' military staff, the first international army, navy and air force was established, with member nations required to allow free passage through their territories in case of hostilities. According to U. S. military authorities, this country might furnish about one-third of its present armed might.

TRACTORS:
For Overseas

To enable cultivation of 2,900,000 acres capable of producing 1,500,000 tons of cereals, 14,500 tractors will be sent to 11 European countries by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration to help them raise their own foodstuffs and thus ease the serious food situation imperilling the continent.

With 13,000 of the tractors to be built in this country and the other 1,500 in Britain, the machines will be distributed among paying and non-paying countries alike.

For the paying countries, France will receive 3,798; Italy, 810; Netherlands, 530; Norway, 330; Belgium, 150; and Denmark, 70. Of the non-paying nations, Poland will obtain 3,526; Yugoslavia, 2,500; Czechoslovakia, 1,500; Greece, 1,261; and Albania, 25.

Mould Jap Youth for Suicide Attacks

The Japanese military command will have no difficulty in transforming its entire air force into suicide pilots, Dr. John W. Stanton, visiting associate professor of political science at Northwestern university, now teaching Japanese area characteristics to army officers, declared. This apparent willingness to die in battle is the result chiefly of a traditional obedience to authority and a militaristic indoctrination that begins in boyhood, he said.

"Throughout grade school and high school the Japanese is given six to ten hours a week of study in a course on 'morals' which teaches him that the Jap soldier must never flee in battle and that his greatest duty is self-sacrifice," he said. "In the course, which is inspired by the militarists, he learns discipline and loyalty to the emperor and to the destiny' or expansion of Japan."

EUROPE:
Share Secrets

Fully exploiting the Allied victory over Germany, U. S. and British technicians have undertaken an intensive study of secret German devices and processes discovered in the wake of the Reich's collapse.

Originally, special technical teams followed fast moving Allied spearheads in the combat zones to examine enemy scientific and industrial installations following their capture before they could be destroyed.

Though German processes are first to be shipped to Britain, Allied authorities stated that American representatives would be on hand to assist in exploiting the material. Further, it was said, the U. S. had access to samples shipped to Britain. In all, the Allied agency charged with revealing the results of research has been 99 per cent effective in achieving impartiality toward the U. S. and Britain, it was said.

CORN:
Conserve Supplies

With farmers holding back large stocks of corn and the feed situation acute in many sections of the country, the War Food administration sought to channel incoming supplies of the grain to feed mixers and processors by prohibiting its use for industrial and beverage alcohol and export.

At the same time, officials expected that farmers would increase marketings now that corn could not be held back for higher prices following OPA refusal to boost ceilings. Even with the improvement in the flow of corn to feed mixers, however, considerable amounts of substitute materials might have to be used to meet the heightened demand from chicken producing areas. The May Hatch report showed the number of chicks was up 30 per cent from last year and 33 per cent over the 1939-'43 average.

In the face of the tight corn situation, there has been a big export demand for the grain for both purchase and lend-lease. Because many of the nations bidding for corn normally buy it in Argentina, this country felt further justified in clamping down on shipments, WFA said.

Big Hand for 'Ike'

Riding in an army reconnaissance car with a broad grin, and waving a continual salute, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower returned to the nation's capital to receive a hero's welcome from the 800,000 people lining flag-bedecked avenues.

Though Grant, Sherman and Pershing had ridden up Pennsylvania avenue before as conquering heroes, none received the hand accorded General Eisenhower as head of the U. S. and British armies which smashed Germany. "Ike! Ike! Ike" the crowd roared as the motorcade crept up Washington's streets and army bombers circled overhead.

Speaking to an at once hilarious and respectful congress, General Eisenhower had nothing but praise for the soldier who carried the Star Spangled Banner to victory in Europe. Said he: "Willingly, he has suffered hardships; without a whimper he has made heavy sacrifices. He has endured much but he has never faltered. His aggressiveness, his willingness to close with the enemy, has become a byword in the embattled armies of Europe."

HARD COAL:
Boost Prices

Because of increased labor costs of 60.7 cents a ton, and decline in operators' margins below the 1942 level, the government approved higher hard coal prices amounting to $1 a ton for domestic sizes and 25 to 50 cents a ton for industrial types.

Announcement of the higher prices followed the Office of Economic Stabilization's o.k. of a $1.37½ wage boost for 68,000 mine workers, and slightly smaller increases for 4,000 more. Major portion of the boost results from payment for travel time to and from the pits, with other adjustments of $75 vacation allowance; 4 and 6 cents hourly premiums for second and third shifts, and time and a half for work beyond 35 hours.

At the same time, the OES said operators would be permitted to realize the 1942 level of 19.9 cents per ton over the present rate of 14.7 cents. They also would be allowed to make up the difference of 9.2 cents per ton below the accepted margin incurred during the first five months of 1945.

BANKS

National banks of the United States served the credit needs of more people at less cost during 1944 and ended the year with a stronger capital structure and a slight increase in earned profits, according to the American Bankers association.

Total assets of national banks in 1944 were $76,949,859,000 reported by the Comptroller of the Currency as of December 30 in comparison with $64,531,917,000 in the previous year. Loans and discounts were up 13 per cent and investments 26 per cent.

Reconversion No Great Obstacle to Industry

Many Factories Making Consumers Goods for Services; Numerous Others to Require Only Minor Changes.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Reconversion has begun and it looks as if one prediction, made back when conversion had been accomplished with many an ache and groan, would come true. Then the experts predicted that reconversion would be easier than conversion.

Eighty per cent of the factories, we are now told by officials of the department of commerce, will not have to do a major reconversion job. This is largely because many industries now furnishing supplies to the military will continue to manufacture the same supplies for civilians—clothing, food, printing, electrical appliances—you can think of a whole lot of others yourself. It will be no great problem for the makers of such products to shift from one market to another—from Uncle Sam to John Q. Consumer.

Some industries whose present final product differs considerably from the civilian goods they make won't have such major difficulties either. It will please the ladies to learn that even the folks who have been making parachutes will have little or no trouble changing back to stockings. The nylon people simply have to change spools.

There are a number of other predictions concerning the future of businesses, big and little, and one of them is that 40 per cent of the industries, although they won't do the business they are doing today with Uncle Sam as a customer, will have a bigger demand to meet than they had in the boom year of 1929. And this condition will continue, say the prophets of profits, for two or three years on the impetus of the present pent-up buying power of the nation. If we keep our heads meanwhile, there is no reason why the period of prosperity cannot be extended.

But what about the other types of business which were expanded by war demands for products which won't have any civilian market? Well, our American business ingenuity and our native mechanical inventive genius, they tell us, are going to step into the picture again. Then there will be the natural evolution which will eliminate the below-average business man and establish a survival of the fittest.

Yankee Ingenuity To the Fore

What started me off on this topic was a typical example of how this inventive genius, stimulated by war demands, has laid the foundation for turning what started as a little two-room factory into a big, small-town business. The man with the inventive genius is a frequent Washington visitor these days. His name is Burl E. Sherrill. The name of the town is Peru, Ind., population 13,000. Sherrill is a modest Hoosier genius in his forties who managed to make a living from tinkering and selling the patents on the gadgets he invented. Then one day he made something he liked so well he didn't want to part with the idea behind it, so he decided to manufacture it himself. It was a popular-priced magnetic compass for use in steel-bodied automobiles and trucks.

Sherrill rented three offices right on the public square of Peru, turned them into his factory and started out. Soon he began to expand, pushing lawyers, doctors, real estate men out of the way. But I am getting ahead of my story.

Sherrill was a born inventor, although he didn't realize it and started off to study law. After two years at the University of Chicago he found that his hunger for the law was appeased, his hunger for three meals a day was not. He went to work managing a little neighborhood shoe store in Chicago. This gave him a chance to tinker in the kitchen-laboratory in his flat. Then he got a chance at a job back in Indiana—repairing radios in Peru. This gave him lots of opportunity to tinker and he patented inventions and sold them, which bolstered his income considerably. Finally he evolved the compass which he wouldn't part with. He was able to hire a small staff of workers—then came the war and no more civilian autos.

But there were lots of military vehicles and after our blind tanks had lost themselves in the African deserts, Washington found out about Sherrill and gave him the challenge of making a compass for use in motorized equipment of various kinds. Sherrill went to work and produced his models. The Carnegie Institute, the army engineers and the war college looked them over and put their okeh on them. The inventor moved downstairs and took the whole first floor of the building on Peru's public square. The 20 men who had assembled the auto compasses were increased to 125 working at a regular assembly line.

Next came a call from the Maritime commission. A compass for steel lifeboats was needed. Like the tanks, too many had been left to wander on the high seas blind. Further inventive genius was required for this job for a steel lifeboat passes much of its life on the steel deck of a ship. A few months ago the new compass was approved and production is now under way.

Some day, of course, the last war order will arrive at the factory in Peru, but because of the war-stimulated ingenuity of one man, a product has been created, the demand for which will continue for such war machines as are still needed plus a demand for civilian use which will return the moment restrictions on motor travel and transportation are over. In addition, I understand from Sherrill, a new hearing-aid is in the making.

War a Spur to Many Entrepreneurs

To reconvert to the manufacture of civilian products, no change of machinery or assembly line nor any retooling will be necessary at the Sherrill factory. Nor will the number of employees have to be reduced.

Of course, not many inventors are endowed with enough business sense to run plants of their own. Sherrill appears to be an exception. When he got his first army order, he was asked when he could deliver how many compasses. He named the figure and the day and what is more he lived up to his promise, which was more than many manufacturers with less foresight and more unforeseen hurdles have been able to do.

There are other inventors and other business men who, like Sherrill, have received from war demands the stimulation which will push them ahead and carry them through the breakers of reconversion. Sherrill himself has no technical education. He calls himself a graduate from a junkpile. But he can talk with the scientists and the experts and, what is more, he makes the pictures he draws on his drawing board, sometimes in the small hours in pajamas and slippers, work.

He has the typical American ingenuity shared by thousands of others who helped win the war for us and who will keep us from losing the peace.

Recently a listener wrote in with a suggestion that a fitting memorial for the late President Roosevelt could be provided in a manner which would aid the bond drive. She suggested that "if bonds were contributed for a memorial commensurate with our sorrow and regret, by the time these bonds matured we would be able to buy the most magnificent memorial in the world in honor of our greatest President."

Then she concludes: "I am one of the many 'little people' who would gladly contribute a small bond now, but may not be able to give anything later."

The psychology of that suggestion is interesting. Regardless of what the purpose of a fund might be, what a splendid way of raising it and thus achieving exactly what the government wishes to achieve by the sale of bonds: the double purpose of securing cash to defray war expenses and also reducing the amount of inflationary pocket-money.

It struck me as such a good idea that I sent it along to Ted Gamble who is in charge of such matters in connection with the Seventh War loan. Next to making suggestions for selling bonds I suppose one of the best things one can do is buy them. Of course if everybody followed that horse-sense plan and bought, simply for the security of their own future, the treasury wouldn't need any suggestions.

Homesteading Opportunities In Alaska Interest Veterans

Last Frontier Land Has Much to Offer to Hardy Young People

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Veterans of World War II dream as avidly of establishing homes on the land as did the soldiers of the Continental army, Grant's blue-clad veterans, or Pershing's doughboys in 1918, it is pointed out by the United States department of the interior. Requests for information on available public lands, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes points out, have literally inundated the department's offices. The average number of requests for information on homesteads alone in the general land office runs higher than 3,000 monthly and the number is increasing.

Exservicemen who desire to settle on public land, either in the continental United States or Alaska, will avoid many heartbreaking disappointments if they first fully inform themselves concerning all of the possible pitfalls.

One of the prime requisites, for instance, in obtaining title to public land is three years' actual residence beginning within six months after permission to enter has been granted. There are numerous other requirements concerning such subjects as the building of a habitable dwelling, the cultivation of the land and other details, about which prospective settlers would do well to inform themselves before filing an application.

The principal advantage that veterans have over other citizens is that service in the armed forces, up to a maximum of two years, is credited toward the three-year residence requirement. This applies generally to all citizens over 21 years of age who have served at least 90 days in the armed forces and who have been honorably discharged therefrom. Veterans also enjoy a 90-day priority in filing applications for settlement on public land classified for that purpose. Any veteran of World War II under 21 is entitled to the same rights under the homestead laws as those over 21 who may be veterans of this or other conflicts. Residence requirements of such minors will be suspended until six months after their discharge from the service.

Moreover, homestead claims of veterans of World War II, initiated prior to their entrance into the service, are protected against forfeiture during the period of their service and for six months thereafter. Such veterans who are honorably discharged and because of physical incapacity due to their service are unable to return to the land, may make proof without further residence, improvements and cultivation.

Go North, Young Man.

By far the greatest opportunities for obtaining title to and establishing homesteads on public lands lie in Alaska. This territory covers an area of 586,400 square miles, roughly equal to one-fifth of that of the United States. More than 90 per cent of the territory is under the jurisdiction of the department of the interior. The major portion is still open to settlement under the homestead laws.

But, while the chances in Alaska are undoubtedly vast, there are many difficulties to be overcome. Considerable progress has been made in developing the territory on a stable basis, but it is still no place for the fainthearted. Those with sufficient financial backing and with courage and tenacity may reasonably count upon success in the long run, but without these essentials veterans and others would be wise to look twice before they leap. Much also depends upon the wise selection of land, as to quality and accessibility.

Many misconceptions about Alaska have been dissipated as a result of the war. Many who have seen service there have been fascinated by its picturesqueness, and impressed by its obvious possibilities. The territory has largely lived down its old and undeserved reputation as "Seward's icebox" — a reputation that was pinned on it by the critics of Secretary of State Seward who negotiated the territory's purchase from Russia in 1867.

To speak of the climate of Alaska is as misleading as to speak of the climate of Europe, or of Asia. The climate varies widely from that of southeastern Alaska, where it is virtually as mild as, but much wetter than, that of Virginia, to that of the frozen wastes of the Arctic circle and the fogs and williwaws of the Aleutian isiands.

Veterans have the same preference accorded to them by the homestead laws of the United States. In addition, where lands are newly opened or restored to homestead entry veterans will be granted a preference right of application for a period of 90 days before the lands become subject to application by the general public.

In addition to homesteading in Alaska, on sites limited to 160 acres, any adult citizen of the United States, whose employer is engaged in trade, manufacturing, or other productive industry in Alaska, or who is himself engaged in such business, may purchase one claim, not exceeding 5 acres, of nonmineral land at $2.50 an acre, but for not less than a minimum of $10. An applicant for such a tract is required to pay the cost of the survey.

Any citizen of the United States after occupying land in Alaska as a homestead or headquarters in a habitable house not less than five months each year for three years may purchase such tract, not exceeding five acres, if nonmineral in character, at $2.50 an acre, but for not less than a minimum of $10. Such an applicant is not required to pay the cost of the survey.

Fur Farming and Mining.

Fur farming has been carried on in the territory for a sufficiently long period to demonstrate that the raising of such fur animals as minks and blue foxes is profitable. This is especially true in southeastern Alaska and along the general coast line where fish, a basic fur animal food, may be procured cheaply.

Certain areas of Alaska are admirably adapted to the production of fur of good quality, and there is plenty of room for expanding this industry. There are hundreds of licensed fur farmers in Alaska, the majority of whom are raising minks and blue foxes, although some silver foxes are raised in captivity.

Mineral resources are known to be large and varied, and there are undoubtedly large and rich mineral areas still unexplored. Notable evidence of this has been disclosed by extensive searches for war-needed metals and minerals by the geological survey and the bureau of mines.

A large part of the territory's natural mineral wealth consists of gold, silver, mercury, antimony, tin, coal, copper, iron, lead and platinum. There also may be considerable oil reserves in some parts of the country, but to what extent remains largely to be seen. Transportation is, of course, a problem.

Since Alaska, a natural scenic wonderland and sport fisherman's paradise, is expected to grow in importance as a vacation land and as a goal for tourists, there will undoubtedly be great opportunities for veterans and others who desire to go into businesses catering to the tourist trade. Tourist facilities are comparatively meager, especially in many picturesque localities off of the beaten path.

However, here again, those contemplating the establishment of such businesses should do so with their eyes open. It must be remembered that in many places in Alaska the tourist season is short, and that the permanent population of the territory is normally less than 100,000 persons, or about one-eighth of the number of persons living in Washington, D. C.

As a general rule, it may be said that settlement on public land in Alaska is encouraged but not urged. Those who choose Alaska as their future homes should do so with caution. There is little doubt that ultimately Alaska is destined to become an important crossroads at the top of the world. It is a natural way station on air lines to Asia and eastern Europe.

But Alaska itself, as well as those who settle there, will be better off if it has an orderly and stable development. It is hoped, for the benefit of all concerned, that sudden rushes of hordes of people with get-rich-quick ideas but with no sustained interest in healthy growth, may be avoided.

Servicemen and women get pointers on Alaska land settlement from Commissioner Fred W. Johnson, general land office. Left to right: Pfc. Richard Bean, U. S. army, (Newport, N. H.), Chief Warrant Officer Joseph D. Joiner, U. S. navy (Atlanta, Ga.), and Yeoman 1/c Mildred H. Dietrich of the WAVES (St. Nazianz, Wisc.), learn of chances for future on public lands administered by the interior department.

As of June 30, 1944, the remaining public lands — exclusive of areas acquired through purchase by the government for resettlement, submarginal land administration, military, or other purposes—consisted of 37,567,096 acres outside of grazing districts, 130,668,351 acres within grazing districts, or a total of 168,236,447 acres. Some portions of the west, in fact, have not yet even been surveyed by the government, as indicated by this diagram showing the ratio of unsurveyed areas in these states.

Dam Projects Could Create A Million Jobs

Material Makers as Well As Actual Construction Workers Would Benefit

Jobs for thousands of skilled and unskilled workmen will be created in every part of the country when congress approves plans and provides funds for building more than 400 irrigation and power projects proposed by the bureau of reclamation in its $5,000,000,000 postwar inventory.

Although these proposed irrigation and power projects will be located in the 17 western states, where the bureau of reclamation since 1902 has been responsible for the conservation and wise use of water resources, their construction will create job opportunities from Maine to California.

Behind every man on the construction job there will be one or more helpers who may be thousands of miles away. An employment analysis of the bureau's postwar inventory reveals that of the 4,250,000,000 man-hours of labor required to construct all the projects about 1,650,000,000 man-hours will be required at construction sites.

Materials from 31 States.

The materials needed for reclamation work, of which such basic products as iron and steel, cement, electrical equipment and supplies, foundry and machine-shop products, and lumber are of primary importance, must be obtained from widely separated sources. Much of this material and equipment will come from the 31 states outside the arid and semiarid regions of the west.

If funds are made available for construction of all the projects, bureau officials estimate that more than 450,000 men could be put to work the first year, less than half of these at construction sites. At peak employment in the second or third year almost 1,000,000 men could receive pay envelopes in different parts of the country as a result of this mighty effort.

Agricultural and industrial enterprises in the West will help to support and give homes to servicemen and others who have expressed their desire to settle on irrigated farms. Of the 2,000,000 westerners in the armed forces, it is estimated that 265,000 will want to return to the land.

Veteran legislation, authorized and pending, gives servicemen priority of settlement on bureau of reclamation projects. On some projects public lands will be open to homestead entry.

BEA WAIN'S new program is one of the high lights of radio's summer season. She's been doing guest shots, marking time, refusing to tie herself to any definite commitment—like many another army wife, she wanted to be free to join her husband any time, any place. Efforts to lure her to radio programs emanating from Hollywood failed. Now Maj. Andre Baruch's affairs are set, and Bea's on the air with "Starlight Serenade," on Mutual Thursdays. Though she's young, she's a veteran entertainer; she became a professional at the age of six. And because she always knew just how she wanted to sing, she studied everything but singing; her method is all her own.

BEA WAIN

George Raft's first RKO picture is "Johnny Angel," a romantic mystery. It revolves around the efforts of Raft to track down the unknown mutineers who killed his father and highjacked eight million dollars in gold bullion from his father's ship.

Though they didn't know who he was, a lot of people still remember the tenor who sang "The Rose of Tralee" in "The Informer," while Victor McLaglen emerged from a building with his sinister reward. The tenor is Larry Burke, and he sings the title song in "Those Endearing Young Charms."

Twentieth Century-Fox won out over other studios and snared Burl Ives for a picture. He's the balladeer whose singing in "Sing Out, Sweet Land" was one of the hits of New York's theatrical season this year. His first film will be a technicolor version of "Smokey." While in Hollywood he'll continue with his Sunday night "Radio Reader's Digest" shows, with the rest of the program coming from New York.

Richard Tucker is likely to become one of radio's headliners, so if you want to be in on his debut listen when he replaces John Charles Thomas on Sunday afternoons over NBC late in July. Tucker is one of the Metropolitan Opera company's tenors.

The American's Breakfast Club, radio's oldest and most continuous program, heard six days a week, 60 minutes each day, recently celebrated the completion of its 12th successive and successful year. The program first hit the air on June 23, 1933, under the guidance of one Don McNeill, who has served as master of ceremonies of the show ever since that date.

Singer Danny O'Neil is headed for nation-wide recognition soon, if history's any indication. He has replaced "Music That Satisfies" on CBS and that spot has been the springboard to fame for such stars as Kate Smith, Bing Crosby, Martin Downey and Frank Sinatra.

Jennifer Jones didn't have to learn the rolling-hip walk she uses in "Duel in the Sun"; it was already there. She's remembered by a friend who was with her at Northwestern university as "the girl most whistled at" when she was an undergraduate there. "It was that walk," he said. Incidentally, Joan Tetzel has joined the "Duel in the Sun" cast, leaving a hit Broadway show to do so.

Joan Leslie'd like to convince Warner Bros. that they ought to make a picture based on the life of Rosina Galli, the former first ballerina of the Metropolitan Opera company, and give her the title role. She's been working hard at ballet dancing for the last three years. Buddy Easton, the studio's ballet coach, says she could step right out of "Janie Gets Married" and star as a dancer.

ODDS AND ENDS—Jimmy Durante turns dancer for the first time in his 35 years as an entertainer, in Metro's "Two Sisters From Boston." . . . Feliz Knight and Francia White will costar as replacements for Nelson Eddy this summer. . . . Jerry Wayne will have Joe Baker and Gladys Swarthout on his new show over CBS, on July 6th. . . . Guy Lombardo's postponed his concert tour, as he and the Royal Canadians are booked to start soon on a film based on his life. . . . Georgia Gibbs was so moving in that bond-buying talk on "Hall of Fame" that three people wrote her that they'd bought bonds and named her as coowner

Of Such Stuff

By J. WILLARD RIDINGS

McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

NO ONE in Brownton would ever have guessed that Joe Adams would be the town's first war hero. But there it was; Joe had been decorated for bravery in action. Joe, the report said, had risked his life to bring in two injured buddies from the battlefield, and had himself been wounded in doing so.

Brownton mothers insisted that the weather was still too cold, even if Spring was in the air. "Joe, you really shouldn't go,"' Mrs. Adams admonished.

But the boys were sure that swimming days had returned. "Last one in's a softie!" yelled Zeke Davidson, biggest boy in Joe's grade, as he jumped hilariously into the water of Parson Creek.

Zeke came up, teeth chattering. "It is a little cold," he sputtered.

But splashes came in rapid succession as each boy met the challenge. Finally Joe was left alone on the bank. "Joe's a softie!" came the cry.

Joe could barely swim. But he stepped off the sloping mud bank into the edge of the creek. "Joe's a soft—"

The taunt was lost in a gasp as Zeke doubled up, anguish on his face. "Zeke's got cramps!" the boys yelled excitedly.

Zeke made it to shore in spite of his pains but Joe, attempting to help, fell into the swimming hole, beyond his depth. Two of the boys had to pull him out, shivering with cold and spitting water. "Joe's a softie!"

"Disregarding the cross fire of the enemy's machine guns."

"Disregarding the cross fire of the enemy's machine guns, Pfc. Joseph W. Adams carried a wounded man one hundred yards to the safety of a shell hole," Brownton read in the official citation as printed in the Messenger.

• • •

It was the last half of the ninth inning. Brownton High, one run behind, had men on second and third. Joe was at bat. "Come on, Joe. Give us a bingle!" "A hit means the old ball game!" "Just a little single!"

The pitch looked good and Joe swung hard. "Strike three. You're out!" the umpire pronounced.

Brownton rooters groaned. Somebody said it, not loud, but clearly. "Joe's a sissy! What can you expect from a boy who plays the piano?"

Joe hadn't particularly wanted to take piano lessons. But circumstances had combined against him. Mrs. Adams was the mother of six boys. She loved music and had dreamed of a daughter who would sing and play. Each time, after the first boy, she had prayed for a girl. Joe was the youngest—and not a girl. When Joe was ten, his father accepted a piano in payment of an old account. There, then, was the piano in the Adams home. There was Mrs. Adams' longing for a talented child. There was Joe. "Music is ennobling," Mrs. Adams insisted. It was as inevitable as that.

"Pfc. Adams, after silencing two enemy snipers with rifle fire, went out and brought in a second badly injured man, this time sustaining a wound in the leg from a machine gun bullet."

• • •

"Boy, is this a day to shoot quail! Come on, Joe, let's go hunting."

Joe wasn't too responsive. But shooting was the one thing he could do as well as the other boys.

"If I had a gun like that one of your dad's, I'd go hunting every day, one argued.

They tried boyish flattery. "You can shoot better'n any of us."

"But I don't much like to kill things," Joe said.

Jeers greeted this statement. "Joe feels sorry for the poor little quail!" "Joe can't stand the sight of blood!" "Joe's a killer!"

Yes, Brownton had a war hero of its very own. He lay on a hospital bed in Italy and smiled up at a nurse. "Now don't get me wrong," he told her. "The medal is swell and I'm proud to get it. But this hero stuff is all the bunk! I'm no hero. You know, the thing I do best is play the piano. Anybody back in my home town will tell you that I'm just a sissy!"

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Synthetic rubber, as used in rubber gloves made by B. F. Goodrich, is superior to natural rubber. The new "service gloves" are impervious to strong soap, oils and cleaning fluids that deteriorate natural rubber.

Two synthetic rubber plants operated by The B. F. Goodrich Company have produced 300,000,000 pounds of synthetic rubber. This is equivalent to the normal yield of 28,000,000 Far Eastern Rubber trees, requiring the services of 79,000 natives for the same period of time the plants have been in operation. The two plants employ about 1,200 men and women.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Dense clouds of smoke rolled up from the roof of a North Carolina cotton mill, while one of the workers in the mill darted down the railroad track to help put out the fire. Looking ahead he saw several water hose crossing the track, and he knew that it was time for the morning limited. Then he thought of the peg-leg watchman who would stop the train. He looked in all directions but the old watchman could not be seen. Just then he heard a faint call coming from a ditch near the track and he rushed over to see. There was the faithful old watchman down with an heart attack. He dropped by his side and started to do something for him, but the old guard pointed toward his flag and said, "Run down the track and stop the train. We cannot put out the fire if the hose is cut." The mill employee grabbed the flag, stopped the train and the fire was put out. If we allow the ways of this world to run over the lines that connect us with God, we will be unable to put out the fires that are burning everywhere today. We cannot put out the fire when the hose is cut.

A wagon train passed through Oregon and met with hardships that made despondency to take possession of all the travelers. There was but little water and grass and the heat was stifling. When they stopped for their noon meal, it was decided that when they camped for the night that they would hold a meeting to discuss their troubles. That night the emigrants gathered and they were ready to air their line of troubles. Just then one of the men arose and asked permission to make a statement before their troubles were discussed. He said, "I want to thank God that we have come this far and not a death, neither have we had any serious troubles with the Indians, and all of us are strong enough to go on to our journey's end." He sat down and there was silence in the camp. No one had any complaints to bring before the body, and soon the gathering was a meeting of thanksgiving. When we learn to count our blessings, we will not be so depressed because we meet with a few troubles

Well, it seems that we in Clanton, aren't the only ones who have a man by the name of "Golden" who goes about with his "little black satchel" doing good. Over in Germany, one of the busiest men in the 56th A.I.B's. Headquarters, with the 12th Armored Division is Pfc. Wilbur E. Golden, of Clanton, Ala., He can be seen, as each C. P. is established and the work of the wire crew finished, taking off to some quiet corner with his "little black satchel". His, however, is filled with every kind of tool and great roll of leather, instead of pills and doctors instruments.

Pfc. Golden started his hobby of making watch bands, wrist bands holsters and camera cases while stationed in France. One of the men in his Company needed a holster for a captured Kraut pistol so Pfc. Golden started to work on an old leather boot and thats when it all began. The finished product was so good that he was swamped with requests for leather work.

Pfc Martis S. Scott son of Mr and Mrs. Columbus W. Scott, of Jemison, Ala. has received another honor. He has been awarded the Combat Infantry Badge for exemplary conduct under fire. Pfc. Scott has been with the 126th Infantry of the Red Arrow (32nd) Division for 14 months. He is a veteran of the Aitape, Morotai, Leyte and Luzon campaigns and has been fighting for the past several months in Northern Luzon.

We are very happy to know that mid-shipman Flem Higgins, Jr., is home and will visit with his parents until July 3rd. He is stationed at Tulane University at New Orleans.

After a six year Naval career, Cecil E. Martin, whose wife lives at Jemison, Ala., has advanced to Chief Machinists Mate, aboard a Battleship, in the Pacific. He was aboard this vessel in January 1941, and was a member of her crew when the ship was damaged by the Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor. He has seen action at Attu, on North Atlantic convoy duty, at Normandy, Southern France, and Iwo Jima and the bombardments of Toulon, Marseille and Cherbourg.

R. E. Seales is home after spending some time in the Hospital at Camp Rucker, where he was stationed. He was suffering from a back injury received during training.

A welcome visitor this week is Melvin Wilson, better know as "Shorty" He has been overseas for two years and has seen plenty action. We are very glad to have "Shorty" home again and we know he is happy to be where he can get better acquanted with that precious little daughter of his.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our deepest appreciation to our many friends and neighbors who were so good and kind; for every kind word that was spoken, concerning the death of our dear mother, Mrs. Mahaley Frances Jones, who passed away June 23.

May God bless you all.
— The Family.

County Chapter Winner In Cancer Poster Contest

Mrs. W. P. Baugh, of Decatur, Morgan County commander of the Field Army of the American Cancer Society, and Mrs. Sophia Jones, of Clanton, Chilton County commander, have been chosen as winners of first prizes in the organization's scrapbook contest according to announcement Saturday by Mrs. Ray Meade, of Birmingham, State commander, through the Field Army's Montgomery headquarters.

Mrs. Baugh was declared winner of the prize offered for the best scrapbook submitted by a county commander in a county having one or more daily newspapers, while Mrs. Jones' scrapbook was voted the best of those submitted by commanders of counties having only weekly papers.

Second-prize winners were Mrs. Julius Rice, of Montgomery, commander of Montgomery County, for submitting the second-best scrapbook entered by a commander in a county having daily papers, and Mrs. C. S. Prescott, of Wedowee, commander of Randolph County, for submitting the second-best scrapbook entered from a county not having any daily papers.

Judges of the contest were Mrs. Meade, John Luskin, of the Depart of Journalism of the University of Alabama, Doyle L. Buckles, field manager of the Alabama Press Association, and J. M. Gibson, of the State Department of Health.

Local Ball Club Win Over Montevallo

Clanton American Legion Baseball Club split even on their games last week.

They won over Montevallo on their home park by a score of 6 to 5, each side getting 8 hits and the game was won in the last inning.

On last Friday they lost to the Columbiana Club at Columbiana, by a score of 4 to 3, this game also being decided in the last inning. Oats was the leading hitter for Clanton, getting two hits out of three official times up and Garrett was the leading hitter for Columbiana, getting 3 hits out of 4 times up.

There are only two more games to be played in Clanton the dates of same being July 4th and July 11th. July 11th Siluria meets Clanton here. We have only one more game away from home which will be July 9th at Sylacauga.

New Points To Spend

Validation last Sunday of five more blue stamps has added a total of 100 points to your food buying budget since new stamp retains the established 10-point value.

New Blue Stamps are J-1 through N-1; new Red Stamps are A-1 through E-1. All ten stamps may be used any time from now through the month of October, OPA's announcement said. There are always four sets of both the red and blue stamps valid, said OPA, the lifetime of each set being four months. The first set is always retired as the fifth becomes good.

In announcing the new stamps, District Director Irby A. Jones urged all ration book holders to write the expiration date on the back of each stamp, for easy reference.

Hardware Disease Kills Many Farm Animals

From time to time livestock specialists warn against "hardware disease." This disease comes from the common habit of cattle eating nails, staples, pieces of wire, and other sharp metal objects which they find in pastures and elsewhere around the farm. Such assorted hardware often penetrates vital organs, sometimes with fatal effect.

Though not contagious in the usual sense of the term, hardware disease is transmitted through carelessness. Prevention consists of keeping pastures, feedlots, fence corners, and all other parts of the premises free from small pieces of sharp metal that might cause injury to cattle or other stock.

Two Drown Near Jemison Sunday Afternoon

Tragedy struck hard in one family Sunday afternoon when G. P. Porter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Scott Porter, of near Jemison, was drowned at Cofer's Pond. In a vain attempt to save the life of his younger kinsman, Obie Lee Burnett, age 21, lost his life also.

Young Porter, with his brother Clarence, were swimming when it is supposed he took cramps and called for help. Clarence rushed to his rescue but found he could not save his brother. Then Obie Lee Burnett swam to the two brothers and all three went under. Clarence came back to the surface and swam to safety, but the other two never did come up again.

The bodies of the youths were recovered a short time later, but an attempt to revive them was unsuccessful.

Martin and Sons ambulance answered the call. Funeral arrangements will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Howard College Announces Summer School Plans

Howard College in Birmingham is anticipating one of the largest summer school enrollments in many years for the second semester summer school dating July 9-August 11.

To handle the teaching of some 27 courses to be offered during this term, Prof. Oscar S. Causey, Director of Summer School, has assembled a staff of seventeen professors. Several of these men are visiting professors from other states. Dr. A. W. Aleck, Professor of Psychology, is from State Teachers College, Castleton, Vt.; Dr. F. Dewey Amner, professor of Foreign Language at Denison University, Ohio; and Dr. Wise, professor of History at the University of Texas.

Included in the courses to be offered are: Human Physiology, Organic Chemistry, Materials and Methods in Education, Educational Psychology, Shakespeare, Political Background of World War Two, Contemporary Literature, Intermediate Spanish, Elementary Spanish, Teaching Reading, American Literature, Hispanic American Literature, German, General Psychology, Introduction to Religion, General Sociology, College Algebra, General Biology, Mammalian Anatomy, General Inorganic Chemistry, History of Russia, Trigonometry, Physics, Quantity Cooking, Composition.

Professor Causey has announced that students may receive credit for a total of eight semester hours during the term. Classes are to be held daily six days a week for one and one-half hour periods. Anyone desiring additional information should write Prof. Causey at Howard College, Birmingham 6, Ala.

Farmers Advise To Market Culled Cows

To avoid a glut and other complications in livestock marketing this fall, W. H. Gregory, extension livestock marketing specialist, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, is advising Alabama farmers to cull their herds and sell the culls immediately.

In giving farmers this advice he points out that normally they sell 60 per cent of their cattle during a short period of time in the fall. He also called attention to the fact that the meat is badly needed at the present time.

Veterans of this war are given preference over nearly all other prospective purchasers of new farm machinery. Under the order, veterans who can show both the need for and the inability to obtain farm machinery to establish or re-establish themselves in farming may obtain preference certificates that require dealers to give priority to their needs.

Farmers May Build Or Remodel Farm Houses

Effective July 1 [illegible] up to $1,000 per dwelling unit for construction or remodeling of farm service building and facilities on a single farm without obtaining prior WPA approval, announces T. H. Martin, Alabama AAA administrative officer. Maintenance and repair expenditures on service buildings and facilities are unlimited as in the past.

"The exemptions for farmhouses are entirely separate from and are not included in the above exemption for farm service buildings," he says. "Up to $1,000 may now be spent in a calendar year on a farm house designed for single family occupancy, for construction, maintenance and repair. Note that maintenance and repair costs must now be included in the $1,000 exemption."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

United Nations Security Pact Headed for Senate Ratification; Act Against German War Revival

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

As General MacArthur listens to native chieftains of Philippine archipelago, the governor of Jolo (left) recounts the majesty of the sultan of Sulu (right), who has 26 wives and over 100 children.

UNITED NATIONS:
To Senate

Drawn up by 800 delegates from 50 countries, the United Nations postwar security organization now goes up for ratification by the various states, with indications that the U. S. senate, for one, will approve of the charter to curb future aggression.

Senators Connally and Vandenberg

Even though an effort may be made to incorporate several minor provisions into the charter to assure American sovereignty and interests, no battle comparable to the one resulting in rejection of the League of Nations is expected to develop in the senate, where 51 members already have signified their approval.

For one thing, ratification of the charter will be considered before the peace conferences, thus avoiding opposition to enforcement of unpopular provisions, which helped beset the League of Nations. Then, too, the inclusion of Senators Connally (Dem., Texas) and Vandenberg (Rep., Mich.) on the American delegation at San Francisco provided the upper house with representation of its interests in the formulation of the organization.

In this respect, the support of Senator Vandenberg is expected to prove invaluable in swinging the votes of the more cautious members, since the Michigan solon has taken a middle of the road course in international affairs. Under the circumstances, Vandenberg said, the charter is the best that could have been gotten, and though imperfect, nevertheless is a step toward effective collective security.

It is anticipated that some senators will challenge the power of the American delegate on the security council to vote for the use of armed force in settling a dispute without congressional approval. However, it is expected that proponents of ratification will suggest legislation under which congress would instruct the American delegate on action to be taken.

POSTWAR GERMANY:
Curb on Industry

Allied acquisition of German technological developments and prevention of the re-establishment of German industry in foreign countries in the postwar period are among the aims of the U. S. state department for destroying the economic basis for a military revival of the vanquished Reich.

Expounded by Assistant Secretary of State William L. Clayton, the U. S. program being worked out in conjunction with the British calls for the acquisition of all of Germany's wartime technological developments, since total war requires the use of virtually every phase of industry. It was also revealed that U. S. officials have tentatively agreed that the developments could be used by this country for peacetime production.

With German industrialists reportedly having planned to set themselves in foreign countries to help rebuild the shattered Reich through the export of capital and material, Clayton said the U. S. will take steps to prevent such a move. Because not all South American countries have wholly co-operated in exterminating German business firms, he said, 100 exist in Argentina, 27 in Uruguay, 10 each in Colombia and Chile, and 5 in Paraguay.

PACIFIC:
Cleanup

With the finish of the campaign on Okinawa, attention again was drawn to the Philippines, where General MacArthur's forces split the surviving Japanese army in northern Luzon and also cleaned up on Mindanao.

Meanwhile, the U. S. and Australian assault on Borneo slowed in the face of stiff Japanese resistance in the rugged country, prized for its rich oil resources. Helping ground forces, Allied aircraft pounded enemy coastal vessels supplying strongpoints, and hammered fuel dumps and airdromes.

Split by the juncture of U. S. troops driving northward and southward in the Cagayan valley, remnants of the once powerful Japanese army on Luzon fell back into the mountainous country on the east and west sides of the island, where they could be expected to make a last, desperate stand. Ability to prolong resistance was greatly impaired, however, with the Yanks' capture of the major enemy supply base in the rugged terrain west of the Cagayan valley.

MEAT:
Hog Drop

Announcement of the department of agriculture that the number of hogs available for slaughter this summer will be below last year, and the spring pig crop fell 7 per cent under 1944, presaged continued tight pork and lard supplies until at least next spring.

As a result, the general meat situation is expected to remain acute despite high marketings of cattle, reductions in army orders and a severe cut in exports.

With major stockyards presently receiving small shipments of hogs, little hope was held for improvement during the next three months, with the report that the number of pigs more than six months old totaled only 25,566,000 as of June 1, 8,934,000 head below last year.

Because of the drop in the spring pig crop to 51,687,000, supplies of pork and lard will remain tight through next winter when the hogs are marketed. Even if farmers fatten up the spring crop liberally, the pork and lard tonnage will fall 350,000 tons below last year's level. Any increase in the fall pig crop will not be felt before next spring or summer when the hogs are butchered.

TIRES:
July Quotas

Declaring that it was rationing more tires than current production warranted because a record number of flats and blowouts could be expected during the hot weather, OPA set the July quota for passenger tires at 2,500,000, the same as last month.

Going only to "B" and "C" card holders, the quotas should meet the immediate requirements of essential drivers, OPA said. Until military demands taper and the manpower and military situation improves, "A" card motorists possess little chance of receiving any cords.

At the same time, the quota of smaller-sized truck tires was boosted from 360,000 last month to 386,862, and the allotment of larger truck and bus types was increased from 189,750 to 234,308.

LEND-LEASE:
Russian Aid

Announcement that Russia had received upwards of 3 billion dollars of lend-lease aid in 1944 pointed up the question of continued assistance to the Soviets following the defeat of Germany.

Speaking before a house appropriations committee, Foreign Economic Administrator Leo Crowley revealed that lend-lease would be shipped to Russian Siberia, where the presence of Soviet troops tends to pin down great numbers of Japanese who might otherwise be diverted against American, British, Chinese and other Allied forces in the Pacific.

Mapped by the military, this lend-lease program will continue as long as the army deems it essential to the Allied cause, Crowley said. All material being shipped is considered necessary to the plan.

Despite the end of hostilities in Europe, the lend-lease budget for 1946 calls for 4 billion, 375 million dollars, Crowley revealed. With the tapering off of shipments following V-E Day, some countries were given the opportunity to buy material to complete plants and other facilities started under the lend-lease program.

Because the army deems it necessary to combat hunger and disease in American areas of occupation, Italy will receive supplies under the 1946 lend-lease budget.

Vet Death Claims Jump

With claims increasing 250 per cent in the last eight months, the veterans administration has thus far paid out over 2 billion dollars in national service life insurance.

From only 87,340 approved claims from October, 1940, to October, 1944, the total jumped to 307,264 in the intervening 8 months, it was revealed.

As of June, 1945, 17,627,500 applications for the federal insurance have been accepted, totalling over 136 billion dollars. Average policy is over $9,200.

SUGAR:
Dicker With Cuba

Rejecting the U. S. offer for virtually all of the 1946 sugar crop at 3.45 cents a pound, Cuban millers and planters countered with demands for 4½ cents plus guarantees for continued American support of their market.

Under the Cuban proposals, the U. S. would have to assure purchase of 85 per cent of the country's sugar output through 1950 at a price equal to that paid Puerto Rican producers; guarantee annual imports of not less than 3,000,000 tons of Cuban sugar, and supply chemical fertilizers, agricultural implements, mill machinery and spare parts for the expansion of the Cuban sugar industry.

In addition, the Cuban interests seek assurance that the cost of American rice, lard, jam, bacon, pork, corn, meal, wheat flour, shoes, lumber and machinery will not be increased to upset the balance between prices received the paid in trade between the two countries.

SALARIES:
List Tops

Business men and movie stars were among the highest salaried Americans in 1943-44 with President Charles E. Wilson of General Motors topping the latest treasury list with $459,041.

Right behind, Thomas J. Watson of the International Business Machines corporation drew $425,549, while Film Actor Fred MacMurray made $419,167.

No less than five other General Motors officials drew over $300,000 during 1943-44, with Ormond E. Hunt receiving $359,519; Albert Bradley, $350,432; John Thomas Smith, $306,311; Donaldson Brown, $306,161, and Charles F. Kettering, $306,118. Film Actress Barbara Stanwyck made $323,333 while Crooner Bing Crosby earned $294,444 exclusive of radio fees.

FARM LOANS:
For Vets

To finance vets' purchases of family-sized farms, the Farm Security administration has set aside $25,000,000 for the next 12 months under terms much more liberal than those of the G.I. Bill of Rights.

Made under the terms of the Bankhead-Jones farm tenant act of 1937, loans can cover the full purchase price of the farm and allow up to 40 years for repayment at 3 per cent interest on the unpaid balance. FSA already has received applications from more than 2,000 discharged veterans wanting to buy farms.

FSA also announces that more than 2,500 veterans have obtained rehabilitation loans to finance purchase of machinery, livestock, feed and seed so they could resume farming, mostly on rented land.

AUSTRALIAN BOOM

A network of strategic highways born of military necessity promises to speed the development of Australia in peace, says Ethyl News. These roads, some comparable to the Alcan and Pan-American highways of North America, now tie together the north, south, east and west of Australia, and open up more than 1,500,000 miles of almost virgin land.

The First World war gave Australian industry its first big push, and World War II has carried it immensely further. It is pointed out.

Presidential Succession Congressional Problem

President Truman, in asking congress to revamp the law covering the succession to the presidency by having the speaker of the house succeed the vice president, seeks to perfect an important detail of government which has been a challenge throughout 156 years of U. S. lawmaking. It is a detail which was neglected for more urgent problems by the framers of the Constitution.

In 1792, congress provided that the president pro tempore of the senate, and then the speaker of the house should follow the vice president to the presidency. In 1886, it provided that succession should pass to the secretary of state and then to other cabinet officers. In 1932 it merely determined that a vice president-elect shall become President if the President-elect died before his term.

Specter of Starvation Stalks Liberated Europe

Hunger Already Rampant in Many Nations; Relief Dependent on Sacrifices of United States and Canada.

Washington, D. C.

The size and shape of the postwar food emergency which the world has been generally anticipating and fearing is now beginning to take shape. As this is written in mid-June, a swelling cry is coming across the Atlantic, "We're hungry. Send us food." In one day's issue of the New York Times there were special dispatches stating:

1. That the liberated European nations were meeting in London to hear the facts of the world food situation from British Food Minister Llewellin. He had spent three months in Canada and the United States surveying the world picture. It was said that he would inform the delegates of the liberated countries that there is in prospect a world shortage of 2,500,000 tons of meat, 1,000,000 tons of fats and oils and 1,500,000 tons of sugar. A shortage, that is, in terms of what is required to maintain a quite frugal, though fairly health-giving diet.

2. That European nations were being urged to produce to the maximum in order to offset the lack of imports for their winter's food supply.

3. That the new food minister of France (Christian Pinaud) was coming to the United States to urge the American food industry to sell food to France.

4. That the Bavarian food ration was down to the low minimum of 1,150 calories a day (the average American diet contains 3,200 calories).

Need Is Acute In Many Areas

The need for food is acute in many areas throughout the continent of Europe. The people living in German - occupied Holland have been suffering from outright starvation for months. The physical condition of many was so serious immediately following liberation that they were no longer able to digest ordinary foods. The whites of eggs in powdered form were shipped from the United States to provide special treatment for these starvation victims. Britain also shipped to Holland a special food consisting of solutions of predigested proteins, glucose and vitamins.

In Yugoslavia, when UNRRA supplies arrived and were being unloaded from the first shipment, food was so scarce that the women brought brooms and brushes to sweep up the grain that spilled from the sacks of wheat. When cans of beans were distributed to the people, the Yugoslav weighing officials were so careful in measuring out portions that it was common to see a single bean removed from the scales in order to give each person no more than his fair share.

In May, the office of foreign agricultural relations of the United States department of agriculture reported that this year's output of food in Europe will be the smallest since the beginning of the war. It may be as much as 10 per cent under the 1944 production. As the war has come along, machinery is worn out. Factories have been kept out of most of Europe by the lack of transportation and the shortage of materials.

Manpower has become scarcer. In the final agonies of the conflict, farm animals were slaughtered or stolen by the retreating Nazis. Hence, the production of the continent will reach the low point of this winter in the current crop year.

Sharpening the difficulties is the breakdown of internal transportation to move what food is produced from the countryside into the cities and towns. In the final phases of the war the Nazis systematically destroyed railroads and rolling stock behind them as they retreated; the Allied air forces systematically blew bridges and burst locomotives. The result is that in Greece, for example, there were for months no railway lines operating. Even now, when some of the tracks and bridges are repaired, there are less than 20 locomotives and less then 500 good cars in the country. More are being rushed there, but the railway transport will be far below even the wartime normal. The highway service has disintegrated and the bridges are blown. Trucks are so scarce that they are number one priority in the relief schedules of UNRRA and of the countries which pay for their own imports.

An UNRRA worker in Yugoslavia reported that he saw girls 12 and 15 years old carrying hundred pound sacks of grain on their backs for five kilometres. In Greece, women and children hitched themselves to carts of supplies and hauled them over mountain roads that were so full of bomb craters that trucks could not travel them.

100 Million People Hungry on Continent

In the face of this situation, it is evident that, as Colonel Llewellin told the British House of Commons on June 13, "There are a hundred million hungry people in Europe today." Hope for relieving hunger is in imports this summer and next winter. Will the imports be forthcoming from the world outside?

The best answer that can be given at present seems to be "not in the volume desired." To provide enough food to bring the populations of liberated Europe and the Far East up to the prewar level — or even to a rather low minimum level for full health and strength — would bring the civilian food supplies in the major nations down considerably from their present level. The British ration has already been reduced in a number of items — and it was a tight ration before the reduction. Australia has cut down butter and meat rations still further within the last 60 days.

A good part of the answer to the plea of hungry Europe and the Far East depends on how much sacrifice the civilians in the United States and Canada are willing to undergo. President Truman, in issuing the report of Judge Samuel Rosenman on relief needs in western Europe, pointed out that the American people need to understand the dire plight of the people in these Allied countries and in order to be prepared to accept continued control on our consumption here. The coming months will give the answer to the extent and severity of controls that are imposed.

Food—Not Money— Remains Scarce

Relief for liberated countries is not a matter of financing. The countries of western Europe have their own financial resources and are seeking in vain to buy — particularly such items as canned meats, dairy products, fats and oils and sugar. The liberated countries of eastern Europe which do not have the foreign exchange resources to pay cash for their supplies are receiving them from the uninvaded United Nations through UNRRA. UNRRA has financial resources contributed by the uninvaded nations. The trouble is that supplies are not forthcoming in the scarce food lines at a desirable rate.

Incidentally, the director general of UNRRA, in a somewhat justified didactic vein, has lately pounded home in his public utterances the fact that if UNRRA fails to provide supplies, it is not because of UNRRA's shortcomings, but because the member nations do not come through with the supplies.

"UNRRA," Director General Lehman says, "is not a superstate with resources and powers of its own. Far from it. It is the servant of the governments which created it."

There is one bright spot amid the encircling gloom of the food situation. This is the fact that the world has plentiful supplies of wheat. This member of the bread grains has been produced in bumper quantities for several years in succession by the farmers in the U. S. and Canada. The crops have been average in other exporting countries. The result is that wheat is not even under allocation and the full amount needed for a normal diet can be supplied to the people of liberated Europe. But man doesn't live by bread alone. For health and vigor, you and I and everyone need some fats and proteins in our diets. Will we be willing to cut down on our—by the standards of Europe—rather lavish consumption of these things so that our liberated Allies can come through the next winter with a minimum loss of health and strength?

FBI's Identification Division Can Name Anyone Of 97 Million People Through Fingerprint Cards

Huge Files Now Hold Records of Majority Of American Citizens

Picture a vast room, longer and wider than a football field, with a vaulted ceiling 75 feet high, filled with long rows of steel filing cabinets.

In this great hall 2,500 girls work at calculating machines, typewriters and filing cases. Then visualize 96,588,265 separate fingerprint cards (the total as this is written) in these files, and you have some idea of the size of the fingerprint, or identification division of the federal bureau of investigation in Washington.

But that isn't all. In addition a half dozen other large rooms are filled with hundreds of other girls engaged in classifying incoming fingerprint cards before they are forwarded to the main fingerprint files.

It is a complex, tedious job of huge proportions, but so proficient has the FBI become in this identification division, so expert has become the classification system, that when the sheriff of New Madrid county, Missouri, or the chief of police of Norman, Okla., or the town marshal at Bluffton, Ind., telephones for identification of a given person, or sends in fingerprints, these officials have an answer within a few minutes. For, although there are almost 100 million separate cards, representing 100 million persons, on file, classification has been reduced to such a science that it is never necessary to remove more than 100 cards for comparison to make positive identification.

Building up this tremendous reservoir of identification cards has become a hobby, almost a fetish, of the nation's boss G-Man, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI. He foresaw years ago the advantage of the fingerprint system in both criminal identification, and in civilian non-criminal investigations, both in peace and wartime. The system has had a tremendous growth during these five war years.

Bureau Expanded by War Need.

For instance, on July 1, 1941, the bureau had approximately 21,700,000 fingerprint records on file. But since the war, fingerprint records have been coming into the bureau at the rate of about 22,000 daily. Impetus has been given through the selective service system, and the civil service commission, which requires fingerprinting of all employees. War workers are all fingerprinted, too and copies are sent to the bureau, so that during these war years about 77 million prints have been added.

The job of classifying, filing and sorting these millions of separate cards has been a tremendous one. First it was necessary to recruit girls from all over the nation. These girls had to be above the average, with high school or college educations. They took the regular FBI oath. Their habits and lives were thoroughly investigated and even their place of residence in Washington picked from a list supplied and approved by the FBI.

But to get this bureau started . . . to overcome the popular prejudice against being fingerprinted, to sell police officials on the advantages of the fingerprint system in the early days, took months and months of educational work by FBI agents traveling throughout the country.

Enlisted Help of Local Police.

It took painstaking effort on the part of the bureau to build up good will among police officials and public officials everywhere. In those early days every agent had orders when passing through a town to pay his respects to the police officials and to pass along a "message" from J. Edgar Hoover concerning his willingness to help in any local investigation. The crux of the message was "don't forget to take fingerprints and send them in."

The identification division is now housed, for the duration, in the brand-new white stone District of Columbia national guard armory. It occupies the whole building, and has constructed new temporary additions to house the cafeteria, lounges and locker rooms. Where it will go after the war is a question.

Criminal identification is indispensable in combating crime and of course is a most potent factor in apprehension of the fugitive. From the earliest annals of history, personal identification of some character has been in vogue. Members of one savage tribe were distinguished from others through distinctive attire, bodily decorations, or characteristic scars from self-inflicted cuts or burns. It was not until the advent of photography, however, that law enforcement agencies initiated modern methods and built up "rogues" galleries. The famous Bertillon method, a system of measurements of certain bony parts of the anatomy in addition to the frontal and profile photographs, was an effective but not a positive means of identification since it was early realized that one operative would take these measurements "loose" and another would take them "close" resulting in different classifications. This system, nevertheless, was the best possible until the fingerprinting method was developed in the early 1900s. The pioneer work was done by Sir Francis Galton, a noted British scientist, who discovered that no two individuals in the world have identical fingerprints, and that the pattern remains unchanged throughout life. In 1892 he assembled the first collection of fingerprints in the world.

This is a portion of the Personal Identification Form, showing the fingers of the left hand. The print of each finger is also recorded separately on the card, which also contains all necessary written data.

In 1896 the International Association of Chiefs of Police, which includes the heads of police departments of most of the principal cities of this country and Canada, established a special bureau at Chicago. This was later removed to Washington and became known as the National Bureau of Criminal Identification. Its purpose was the compiling of Bertillon records. As use of the Bertillon system was discontinued the national bureau gradually began acquiring a collection of fingerprint records.

FBI Took Over in 1924.

In 1924 this identification division was placed under the jurisdiction of the FBI and received and consolidated in Washington the records of both the National Bureau of Criminal Identification and the records of the Leavenworth prison. More than 11,000 law enforcement agencies today are submitting prints to the bureau and more than 600 fugitives are identified by the bureau each month.

The bureau has now on file more than 1,200,000 prints of persons applying for government positions under the Civil Service commission. Comparison with criminal records show that 7.7 per cent of these have had a previous criminal history, or about 1 out of 20 applicants. Through the vigilance of the FBI these people are barred from obtaining positions of trust within the government.

Here's an example of how these requests of identification work. In 1939 the Works Projects administration in New York City submitted prints of a woman applying for a job as housekeeper. Search revealed that she was arrested in June, 1933, on a first degree murder charge and a fingerprint card sent from Sing Sing indicated that the woman was incarcerated at Ossining, N. Y., awaiting execution for murder. It is interesting to note that after being sentenced to execution in 1933, this woman was somehow free six years later.

On September 14, 1944, 29 persons were killed in a train wreck at Terre Haute, Ind. Twenty or more were army air corps men returned from overseas. Difficulty was experienced in identifying the bodies, but fingerprints were sent to the FBI. Experts carefully checked the incoming fingerprints and identified eight of them under names sent in from Indiana. Two other prints, however, were not identical with those of military personnel whose names were given, but were identified as two other soldiers whose names had not been furnished.

So not all identifications are criminal identifications. Missing persons have been found, amnesia victims identified, traffic accident victims identified . . . for instance—

Fingerprints of an amnesia victim from Fresno county general hospital in California were received. The victim had been asked to write on her fingerprint card any names which came to her mind. She listed seven names and addresses in Gary, Ind., Seattle, Wash., and Charleston, W. Va. As soon as the prints were received by FBI they were found to be identical with a set of prints received from Portland, Ore., from a company doing war work. In making the application the woman, of course, had given her correct name and this information was furnished the police in Fresno. The woman had no criminal record in the FBI files.

Importance of fingerprint identification of non-criminals is pointed out when the department shows that in the past year alone 9,000 bodies were taken to morgues and nearly 2,000 doomed to burial in potter's fields because of inability of authorities to identify them. During the same year more than 200,000 persons disappeared in this country and were sought by relatives and friends. Fingerprinting has solved thousands of these tragedies and returned many lost folks to their loved ones.

Records Benefit Everyone.

The department in this connection points out the advantage of voluntary, widespread fingerprinting. As a permanent seal of personal identity these fingerprint records offer indubitable benefits to those who take advantage of the service.

According to Mr. Hoover, it appears to him as ridiculous that if a victim of amnesia or of a disaster has a prior criminal record, his family will be immediately notified, while if he has lived within the law, his family, ignorant of his trouble, can render no aid. This is an ever-recurring paradox because fingerprinting of the criminal is the rule, while fingerprinting of the law-abiding citizen is still the exception.

All civil personal identification prints are kept in files separate and apart from the criminal records and are there available in case the individual meets with any mishap which makes it necessary to determine his identity.

One interesting sidelight on the criminal identification side is the maintenance in conjunction with its regular alias name file, an additional file of nicknames. This nickname file now includes approximately 285,000 cards and is of value in establishing the identity of criminals who are known only by aliases and nicknames.

It sometimes occurs that the only clue to a particular crime is a nickname used unconsciously during the crime. Many of these names are descriptive and amusing such as Ash Pan Slim, Dill Pickle, Cream Puffs, Ant Eater, Bughouse Bill, etc. A number of cases have been solved by coordinating these names with fingerprints.

The main file room is now located in the great drill hall of the national guard armory. The identification division of the FBI now occupies the entire armory. This is a temporary arrangement. After the war a special building probably will be erected.

Individuality and Uniqueness of Fingerprints Was First Established in 1880 by British Scientists

The first known scientific observation particularly relating to fingerprints was made in 1686 by Marcello Malpighi, professor of anatomy at the University of Bologna, Italy, who alluded to the ridges which "describe divers figures" on the finger tips. During the subsequent years others pointed to the "ridges" on the finger tips, but it remained for Dr. Henry Faulds, an Englishman connected with the Tsukiji hospital at Tokyo in 1880 to establish the fact that individual fingerprint patterns were of very great variety, and that they remained unchangeable.

Sir Francis Galton, noted English scientist, established the fact that no two fingerprints are alike, and devised the first collection of fingerprint records in 1892.

But the comprehensive system which is the basis for that used in this country was established by Sir E. R. Henry, commissioner of police at London's Scotland Yard office in 1901. First practical introduction in police work was in Sing Sing prison in New York state in 1903. Then on September 24, 1904, R. W. McClaughry, warden of the U. S. penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., was granted authority to fingerprint prisoners, and five days later the St. Louis police department inaugurated the system under supervision of a British officer from Scotland Yard.

At last! All of us who've complained for years because movie stars look too much like movie stars when they're shown in getting-up-in-the-morning scenes are going to get what we've asked for. In "Janie Gets Married" Joan Leslie wakes uncombed, without make-up.

In response to a request from the Canadian army, Lassie, the collie star, made a personal appearance tour during his recent location trip in Vancouver for Metro's "Son of Lassie." Many sequences were made in the beautiful Banff region of the Canadian Rockies.

Vincent Sherman temporarily relinquished direction of "Janie Gets Married" to 11-year-old Clare Foley about to appear in a scene with Donald Meek. The sequence required Meek to play with a yo-yo; Sherman had forgotten how to do it, and Meek never had known.

"Crime Doctor" begins its sixth year on the air August 12, but after writing the first four scripts Max Marcin decided he was written out, and wanted to quit. His sponsor urged him to try once more, and he did, in fact, he's written 256 more, or will have, by the 12th of August. It's like eating salted peanuts, the more times he sets up a crime for House Jameson to solve, the more he thinks up.

Thanks to Merrill Mueller, NBC correspondent in the Philippines, soldiers there have a new slang expression—"NBC leave." It means a three-day pass to Manila and began when Mueller arranged for soldiers to come from jungle fighting lines to the capital city for broadcasts to the U. S. This "NBC leave" usually lasted three days, and built up Mueller's popularity considerably.

Generals And Medals

General Dwight D. Eisenhower, receiving a tumultuous welcome upon his return to the United States, has been presented with an Oak Leaf Cluster to add to his Distinguished Service Medal for "conspicuous service" to the peoples of the United Nations.

We have expressed the opinion, upon several occasions, that the services of General Eisenhower are not yet fully appreciated. The award contrasts strangely with the Medal of Honor that was voted to General MacArthur shortly after he arrived in Australia.

New Passenger Cars

Ten automobile manufacturing companies have been allotted quotas to produce 241,816 passenger cars in the last six months of this year and 449,102 in the first three months of 1946.

The three largest companies have been allotted 353,923 and the seven smaller companies 137,095 cars for the nine months period. General Motors gets the top position with 285,288 cars, Chrysler is second with 148,905 and Ford third with 119,730.

The other seven manufactures received a quota of 137,095 cars. This is less than the Chrysler total and less than one-half of the General Motors figure.

Fraudulent Schemes

It is difficult to imagine anyone heartless enough to attempt to victimize the families of war casualties, but information concerning fraudulent schemes designed to swindle the families of American war heroes has recently been brought to the attention of the War Department, according to Major [illegible] Keldsen, Commanding Officer Alabama Ordinance Works.

Next of kin of Army casualties should guard against the possibility of being taken in by certain individuals, groups and organizations who are conducting promotional schemes in which published Army casualty lists provide the basis of fraudulent exploitation.

These schemes take on varying forms, according to Major Keldsen. One of the most common is to write the next of kin, as appearing in the newspaper casualty lists, seeking further information on the soldier listed as a casualty. The next of kin is advised that the deceased soldier is to be given a particular and special niche in a so-called "hall of fame" or "Hero Memorial Book" or photographic layout. Cash remittances, or deposits in advance are required. As soon as the remittance is received, the transaction is closed, and another soldier's family has been victimized by this new and contemptible form of racketeering.

Vigorous action is being taken by the United States Post Office Department in all such cases as fast as they are uncovered. Postal fraud orders denying the use of the U. S. mail to these casualty list swindlers, are issued, and in those cases where the facts warrant such action, criminal prosecution follows swiftly.

Injustice To General Patton

On June 30th, General George S Patton, speaking to a group of Sunday School children at Los Angeles, said that he "hoped" a way would be found to end wars, but added, "in my opinion, there will be nother war because there have always been wars."

Continuing his remarks to the children of the Episcopal Church of San Gabriel, he pointed out that we have never found a way to stop war, "although I hope we do," and then told the children that "you are the soldiers, sailors and nurses of the next war, if we don't stop wars."

Thereafter, according to the United Press, the General told his listening group that he had found much comfort in religion during battle and urged them to cultivate their religious life, "if that day of war does come, you will find strong support in religion."

We have given a summary of the news account that came from Los Angeles on June 10th, telling of the talk that General Patton made to a group of Sunday School children. The remarks of the General strike us as being eminently sound, sensible and deserving of general commendation.

Accordingly, we were somewhat surprised to see an Associated Press dispatch, dated June 22nd, from Paris, giving the copy of an imaginary letter, addressed to the General and somewhat blowing him up for his remarks. The writer of the sobby, sentimental epistle asked a favor of the General, that he "just stay a soldier."

In view of the facts as to what the General actually said, and what the writer of the letter apparently assumed that he said, it might have been better for the writer of the blurb to follow his own advice, and "just stay a soldier."

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

If you haven't seen the display of souvenirs in the window of the Chilton County News, you have missed something. They were brought back from the South Pacific recently by Melvin (Shorty) Wilson. The assortment contains everything from a pair of Sniper's shoes to a piece of Zero. (Shorty explains that is another Zero that didn't amount to nothing). But geting back to the window: A Jap Helmit, Jap Jewelry, a bayonet, 25 MM shells, a Jap officer's signature case, a Japanese air raid warden's arm band, a girl's civilian nurse arm band. That's a few, there are many more just as interesting, and Shorty says they took most of the "stuff" he had accumulated away from him.

By-the-way, we're going to make use of some of the type that Shorty brought back with him. We're going to call all those folks that we're mad at a dirty name.

則狂規哉菓去凌惜ぐ牡

Now we don't know what that means, but written in Japanese type, it would naturally be a dirty name.

Always remember:

You may call a woman a kitten, but you must not call her a cat.

You may call her a mouse, but you must not call her a rat.

You may call her a chicken, but you must not call her an old hen.

You may call her a duck, but never call her a goose.

You may call her a vision, but never call her a sight.

A magician, traveling on a troopship, had his pet parrot with him. Whenever the magician performed his sleight of hand stunts the parrot began a running fire of observations and kept them up throughout the act.

Finally, their ship was torpedoed and sunk. Magician and parrot found themselves together on a life raft. After they had been floating around for hours, the parrot said in disgust: "All right, I give up. What did you do with the ship?"

Last week culprits took the flag from the pole along with the ropes, that stood at the intersection of Second Avenue and the Highway. To say the least it was just about as low a trick as could be thought of. We are sure that those taking the flag did not at the time, realize the seriousness of the act. If they had they would never have taken it. Now word comes to us that the members of the Chilton County War Finance Committee have a very good idea as to who it was that took the flag. They have asked us to make this announcement: If the flag is delivered to the Alred Drug Store within five days from this Thursday, in good condition, the matter will be dropped and no questions asked. Or if they prefer, they can mail the flag to the Chilton County War Finance Committee, Clanton, Ala. If, after the given time, the flag has not been received the matter will be turned over to the F. B.I. After all, the flag was U. S. Government property.

Electric Service Still Good; Price Down!

COMPARE the price of anything you buy today with what you paid 15 years ago. Make the same comparison of the price you pay for electric service for your home.

You'll find it to be one of the few things that is not only no higher in price, but is lower! On the average, you can now use in your home about twice as much electricity as you could 15 years ago for the same amount of money.

And your service is more dependable, even under war conditions.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

One day Columbus discovered America. The discovery was great and it changed the tide of history, but Columbus knew nothing about the great lakes and rivers that rested upon the bosom of this new world. He knew but little of the mountains and planes that stretched to the west; even to his last day. So many of us have discovered something of the love of God but there are heights and debts and lengths to this love that we know but little about. The love of God is a mighty ocean and we must live in it for years to even know partially what it contains. It takes more than a life time to learn just a fraction of the sweep and the depth of this love that is for each of us. "God so loved." Blessed thought.

Do you know the legend that comes to us with that beautiful little flower, once known as the "Mouse's Ear" and now known as the, "Forget Me Not?" The story is that a very poor peasant of Germany once loved a maiden of high degree, and in order to win her heart he went away to distant lands and strove to obtain money and fame. When he had obtained both he came back and claimed her hand. One Sabbath afternoon they were walking by the river Rhine and the famous lover stooped to pluck a small tuft of the blue flowers and lost his balance and fell into the swirling waters of the river. As the mad waters snatched him under he threw the flowers to his sweetheart and said, "Forget Me Not" and he was gone. Throughout the world today this little flower is known as, "Forget Me Not." in memory of that German musician. That flower is a sweet memorial to faithful love.

I was standing by the big furnace that heated my church plant and as the sexton came to start the fire. I asked of him, "Moze, how much water have you in this boiler?" He glanced at the gage and replied, "Pastor, it is just half full." The old darkey could not see the water in the boiler but he knew that the gage in front showed the debth of the water on the inside. When the glass tube is half full the boiler is half full and when the tube is empty, the boiler is empty. Do you ask, How do I know that I love God? I believe that I love Him, but I want to know the truth of the matter, and also how much I love Him. We can look at the gage and know the amount of love that we have for God, by seeing how much we love our fellow man. Our love for our brother is the gage showing how much we love God.

There was not a very large crowd at Mulberry for either service Sunday. We wish we could have better crowds at Sunday School and B.T.U.

The General Assembly of the W.M.U. met at the church Wednesday afternoon in their regular monthly meeting. We had a regular business session and plans were completed as to our women furnishing lunch for the Quarterling Meeting of the Chilton County Association Wednesday, July 11th. Program from the Commission was given by the members.

G.A.'s will meet with Betty Lois Conway Saturday, July 7th, at 2:30 p.m.

Miss Sallie Fay Clenner is able to be out again after her operation.

Mrs. O. F. Davenport, Jr., and baby is spending a few days with her mother-in-law, Mrs. Era Davenport.

Miss Tamera Williams of Birmingham spent several days this week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Williams, here.

Mrs. Tulah Smith and Berta and Mrs. Irma Ellen Brafford and children of Birmingham spent several days here recently with Mrs. Lilla Carter. While they were here they put up dozens of jars of vegetables and fruits, etc.

Our Vocational Teacher, Prof. Yeilding and family moved in the home with Mrs. D. O. Manning Saturday. We all welcome them to our community.

Mrs. J. H. Wells is recuperating at home from a tonsil operation.

We are sorry for and wish to apologize for the error in this column last week concerning T-Sgt. Oscar Bates. In a paragraph about him, we stated that he was in the Lawson General Hospital recovering from wounds received in action.

A letter from T-Sgt. Bates informs us that this was incorrect, as he lost his right foot in an accident on a tug boat, while working on it in the Hawaiian Islands.

Oscar says that he hopes to be in Clanton soon on a furlough that he has been long looking forward to. It is our sincere wishes that his hopes will be realized even sooner than he expects.

Cpl. Howard Minor from Miami Fla., is spending a 10-day furlough in Thorsby and Clanton with his parents and friends before going to Kansas for further assignment.

Clarence L. Ousley, Boatswain's Mate first class, USNR, of this city, has been attached to the Hawaiian Sea Frontier for the last twenty [illegible] He attended the [illegible] Instructor School at Miami, Fla., and received naval credit in July, 1943.

Sgt. Mack Askins who recently returned from 33 months overseas and is now stationed at Camp Sibert was in Clanton with parents and relatives recently.

T-4 Raymond L. Gore, 22, son of Mr and Mrs L. G. Gore of Route 5, is serving with the 45th Chemical Laboratory Company which was awarded the Meritorious Service Unit Plaque, according to a recent announcement from the headquarters of Lt. Gen. Dan I. Sultan, India Burma Theatre Commander.

A Letter From Odell C. Calloway in The Western Pacific—

Dear Sir:

I wonder if you would be so kind as to publish these few lines in your paper as I often think of the nice people I knew in and around good old Clanton and this is about the best way I know of to let them all hear from me so if you will print this, it will be highly appreciated.

I wish to take this means to say hello to all my many friends and relatives in and around Clanton, and to let you know that I am well and doing o. k. I can't say that I am having a good time, but I am seeing things.

I am enclosing my address and would like to hear from each and every one, and to know all the news back home, so come on fellows drop me a line or two.

Yours truly,
Odell C. Calloway, M.M. 3-C 8th NCB Co C. Care FPO San Francisco, Cal.

Increase farm productivity by building improvements with CONCRETE

Farmers today are stepping up production of dairy products, eggs, livestock and other essential foodstuffs. One way to begin the job is to build concrete barn floors, stock feeding floors, poultry house floors, manure pits, storage cellars and other improvements that make your farm more efficient and productive.

All you need are a few sacks of portland cement, sand, gravel or stone, and some boards for forming. Concrete conserves critical "war materials"; many farm concrete jobs need none.

Economical, life-time concrete improvements cost surprisingly little to build. If you need help, get in touch with your concrete contractor or building material dealer.

For helpful free literature on "how to do it," check list below and mail today.

Kathleen Norris Says:

From Today On

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

With an almost blind husband, a mother-in-law, a small daughter, an English boy, a house to manage, Alice will have her hands full.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

IF YOU have not been saving kitchen fats and taking them in tin cans to your butcher, do it—from today on.

If you haven't been setting aside superfluous warm, plain clothing for the next clothing drive, do it—from today on.

If you haven't been investing every spare penny, and some that you cannot spare in this great war to free all peoples and settle all boundaries, then commence to do it—from today on.

If you should not be dieting, or balancing your domestic budget, or writing regularly to your soldier, or taking on a part time job as assistant nurse, then begin to do it—from today on.

One great trouble with us American women, who have known so many years of security and plenty, is that we are apt to think about all these things and a thousand others, "I wish I'd begun that—years ago. Saving dimes. Studying Spanish. Having the children's friends in for simple hospitalities. Walking two miles a day. Look at all the time I've lost! If I'd had any idea how useful it was going to be to me—or how happy it would have made Tom—or what help I could have given that poor child — or how welcome that extra money would be now—"

Chance for Fresh Start.

Some lives are spent in this sort of useless regretting. But the smart woman eventually learns that whatever the mistakes and omissions of the past, there is always today. Today may be the beginning of the new time—the time of quiet accomplishment, friendship, study, saving, building.

"I don't write him half often enough!" says the busy woman in the market. She is deciding between frankfurters, salmon, or curried eggs for dinner, the place is full of bustle and gossip and morning light; her heart goes for a moment to the man overseas, then she forgets him again. To son or husband she is apt to write often, but this man is her nephew, or a friend's son, or the casual Christmas guest who begged so wistfully for an occasional letter.

So she doesn't write, and perhaps presently learns that the chance as far as that particular sailor is concerned, is gone.

What we ought to remember is that today is as powerful, as filled with opportunity, as any yesterday was, and that a few months' concentration on the saving, the diet, the child, the foreign language, is still in our power.

In a letter yesterday I received an illustration of this and can only advise Alice M., who wrote the letter, to start all over again—from today on.

Alice is the wife of a young naval officer, she has a child of three. She writes that she adores her husband, adores her child. She has a comfortable home, and is busy with the usual activities of housework and baby care, Red Cross and canteen. Archie has been away for 15 months.

Last fall Alice met an army man who is married and has grown children; on neither side was there any pretense of great love, or any suggestion of divorce. They were lovers for a brief space; Alice does not excuse or defend this, she merely tells me that for a few weeks of what now seems to her insanity she and the major met at various times and places and carried on a secret affair. He has now gone to Africa, and her hope is that she will never see or hear from him again. Her shame over this episode is equalled only by her fear that Archie will end their marriage, always so happy and harmonious, and take her child away from her.

Archie is Coming Home.

Now comes the news that Archie is on his way home, almost blind, and that his mother, recently widowed, is about to join the family with her young adopted English son, one of the babies who was evacuated six years ago. Alice writes me in complete distress; must she tell Archie, and how to handle the long deception if she doesn't.

Well, my advice would be to pick up this complicated problem and work it out as if there was no secret to hide—from today on. We're all going to have to forget a lot of everything if this world is to be rebuilt. With an almost-blind husband, probably studying for an entirely new profession, a mother-in-law, a small daughter, an English boy, a house to manage, Alice will have her hands full. If she will go straight ahead, trying to make them all happy, trying to make each day perfect in service and love, she need never tell Archie anything at all, except that she is the wife who loves him, and who is determined to help him to blot out the cruel years that have so scarred him, and create a perfect life together—from today on.

Sources of Vitamin C

Tomatoes and oranges—both rather scarce at present—are not the only source of vitamin C. Fresh raw cabbage and turnips have been found to be just as rich as citrous fruits and tomatoes. The buffalo berry of North Dakota is outstanding in content of this vitamin, while good guava powder is phenomenally rich, with 3 per cent. The Russians and British have made a jam from rose hips. A Russian nut containing 3 per cent is being utilized also.

START NOW

Yesterday is gone, and tomorrow may never come. Today is the time to begin. If you have been delaying and excusing yourself for a long time about doing something you should — buying bonds, or rolling bandages, or saving fats—right now is the time to start. Don't bother with regrets over the past. Don't make grandiose plans for the distant future. Act today. This is Miss Norris' advice to women on the home front.

Even in a seriously complicated domestic situation, as in the case outlined in this article, the only sensible thing to do is to start over as well as possible. A young wife of a naval officer has been carrying on an affair with a middle-aged major. There was never any real love in this liaison, and it is now ended. Alice now wants to forget it, but she is afraid this unsavory episode will cloud the future. She has just heard that her husband, Archie, is returning from service, almost blind. He is bringing his widowed mother with him, and her adopted son, an English boy. This will mean, now, two children in Alice's household, as she and Archie have a three-year-old daughter.

Miss Norris tells Alice to start today, determined to hold her marriage together, and to try to make everyone as happy as she can. There will be much for everyone to forgive and forget after this tragic war period ends.

POLITICAL UNREST GROWS IN EUROPE

WASHINGTON. — Those senators back from Europe had far more to say than they offered in interviews. Their private reports on their quick-study of the western end of the continent would make your ears curl. Here are some of the things they did not make public:

De Gaulle is staving off an election in France because he fears the communists will sweep him and all democrats into the discard. The impending election in the British Isles may do much to determine how she will stand against the sweeping surge, as defeat of Churchill would mean appeasement of communist expansion. He, himself, is afraid of it. Yet Churchill and De Gaulle are fighting each other.

De Gaulle ordered the Syrian shooting by his French forces because he saw Britain going back into the Middle East in the old way and thought he could do the same thing. Churchill dislikes him and is suspicious of him, although the French general is probably the only remaining road-block to communism in France. De Gaulle is existing in control only by adroit double-handed juggling of French political factions.

The French people are not as fully filled with admiration of us as the cheering movie newsreels sometimes suggest. They see American soldiers not always as their liberators but as highly paid strangers (etrangers) who travel in jeeps while others walk, and are well-fed, while they are not.

The French powers likewise resent the presence of American forces in North Africa because we tend to give the Arabs ideas of liberty which the French do not consider healthful for their colonists.

Their ruined industries, shortages of materials and unbelievably extreme decay in morals are combining to break the stamina of the nation and make it an easy prey for any opposition to existing rule—and the most potent, powerful opposition is the political absurdity known as communism.

Their heritage runs back into a great love of liberty as deep as our own, but they are to a considerable extent a peasant people, and therefore easily subject to harsh, disciplined leadership of dictators. So far they have not come to that yet, but there is resignation apparent among millions of them who do not have enough to eat and not enough work. They are in the mood for subjection by any overrunning political power.

In Italy, communism is much stronger than dispatches have led us to suspect. The revolutionary movement is kept down mainly by the American military force of occupation. It seems to have all the political spending money there is in hand-to-hand circulation there. All the symptoms of dejected resignation apparent in France are also present in Italy, including the decline in morals.

The Belgians and Dutch seem to have much more character, more stamina, are more insistent upon liberty and christian principles. They are trying harder to revive. Their people show less moral decay.

Whether the people in Anglo-French - American Germany can be made democratic is yet unclear. They are not only dejected but sullen, and do believe they face years of dire existence as their penalty for making war. The anti-fraternization policy of General Eisenhower is likely to be changed to permit our soldiers to mingle more with them.

But these areas, all of them, are in our sphere of democratic influence, and therefore the most favorable sections of the continent. The Russians have everything else in their lap (except possibly Greece, which is held on one knee, so-to-speak) and everything the Russians have is completely blacked out from the rest of the wide world.

Nothing valid or penetrating is known by us of Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria, Austria, or Czechoslovakia, except that Stalin is there setting up the kind of governments he wants, and one other confirmed fact — all anti-communist opposition is being liquidated.

The Polish issue, which we discuss so extensively, is a minor matter as compared with this whole of middle and southeastern Europe operating on a Russian axis.

If conditions are as bad as they are known to be in our end of Europe, it would be unreasonable not to suppose that they are twice as bad in the unknown poorer end.

Many courses of probable action are being discussed. Anglo - French relations certainly need to be fixed at once. Rapprochement between De Gaulle and Churchill is called for. More intelligent and earnest American leadership to back the people in Europe who like our way of life (which was their historic way) is needed.

Handy Chart Helps You Can Vegetables
(See Recipes Below)

Vegetable Canning Tips

The surprise point values on vegetables when stocks were beginning to dwindle this year made many a woman vow not to get caught short-handed this following winter. Though it may mean a few hours of solid work, vegetable canning is certain to be worth the time and effort put into it.

Women who have canned in years past find it is just as easy to put up vegetables as any other kind of produce. It is simply a matter of carrying out a few simple rules to the letter.

Selection and Preparation.

Young, tender, freshly gathered vegetables are a "must." Any delay from garden to canning kettle gives bacteria a chance to develop and makes processing more difficult. Tough, overripe vegetables give poor results because canning improves no vegetable. If you want prime quality, then can that kind of vegetable.

Preserve the sweet flavor of peas and corn, for example, by picking them yourself, if possible and putting them in the canning assembly line as soon as possible. Two hours from garden to kettle is a rule, not just something that sounds nice.

To achieve best results grade vegetables for size and ripeness. Wash them thoroughly in large containers with plenty of running water. Clean vegetables are freed of much bacteria which the soil itself can carry.

Hot Pack or Cold Pack?

If you have the time, take it to hot-pack vegetables as this saves food and color values and gives a better product in the can. By hot-pack is meant packing the vegetable hot. This consists of cooking the vegetable a few minutes to shrink it (so that it doesn't shrink too much in the jar during processing) and using that same liquid in which it was cooked for the jar.

Many women who can hundreds of quarts do not always have time to hot pack their vegetables, and in that case, they simply prepare the vegetable for the jar and process according to directions.

Preparing the Jars.

Round up the children to help with the canning as best results are achieved when everything moves like clockwork. The day before actual canning starts, lay out the equipment — kettles, utility pans for holding the jars while they are filled, knives, pans for washing, etc.

A big job to get out of the way is the jars. All these should be washed in large pans of soapy suds and rinsed thoroughly, made ready for sterilizing the following day. Be sure that jars are checked for nicks and cracks. Have plenty of covers, etc., on hand. Then, when canning starts, place jars in pans or kettles and pour boiling water over them.

Filling the Jars.

To fill the jars quickly, since speed is important to prevent bacteria from developing, lay the jars on a large utility pan, and place it right next to the kettle in which vegetables have been cooked. Ladle in vegetables as quickly as possible. In most cases, add liquid to within one-half inch of the top. For starchy vegetables like corn and peas, leave one inch space at top. Adjust the cover according to manufacturer's directions.

How to Process.

As soon as the jars are ready, they should be speeded into pressure cooker or boiling water bath. If you can possibly get a pressure cooker use it as it will save time, give better results. It is the method recommended by the United States department of agriculture. All pressure cookers vary in some way as to the closing of the cover, and it's best to follow directions that come with it.

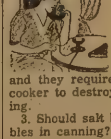
These, however, are points well worth remembering with a pressure cooker: have 1 to 2 inches of hot water at the bottom; place jars on the rack; make sure cover is fastened securely; permit steam to escape from petcock for 7 to 10 minutes before closing. Do not count processing time until the meter registers the desired pressure.

The best way to prevent liquid from escaping from the jars is to keep the temperature even. It should not fluctuate as this causes the contents of the jar to boil over and overcooks the vegetable.

Cooling Jars

After the jars have processed according to the table given above, set them on several thicknesses of cloth or newspaper and allow to cool away from a draft. Test for seal when cool and store in cool, dark place.

Some jars need tightening after processing, others do not. Study the directions which come with the covers, as the manufacturer knows what treatment is necessary in the case of his particular brand.



Common Queries.

1. Is it necessary to boil vegetables before using?

Home-canned vegetables should always be boiled before tasting or using, for 10 to 15 minutes.

2. What is meant by non-acid vegetables?

Non-acid vegetables include all vegetables except tomatoes, ripe pimientoes or sauerkraut. Since most vegetables are non-acid, they might contain botulinis, a type of bacteria which could be harmful and they require a steam pressure cooker to destroy it during processing.

3. Should salt be added to vegetables in canning?

Salt is usually added in the proportion of 1 teaspoon per quart for purposes of seasoning. It may be omitted.

Canning Memos: Don't cheat on processing time by trying to hurry vegetables or fruits along in the water bath or pressure cooker. Time can be saved by having produce or equipment in readiness so that all work goes along on a production line schedule.

After the jar has been packed, press a clean, silver knife all the way around on the inside of the jar to destroy bacteria and air bubbles.

Don't forget to wipe the rim of the jar after packing it with food.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

The new government tire industry expansion program is geared to produce an additional 21,300 military tires a day, or 6,000,000 more a year.

Foam rubber is expected to replace familiar upholstery construction in automobile seats, saving nearly a foot in the length of the body.

Rubber springs already in use experimentally for automobile springs, and in actual operation on street cars, may speed all wheel transportation and greatly increase riding comfort.

MAN'S FAILURES AND GOD'S PROMISES

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 6:5-7; 8:1, 4, 18, 20-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease.—Genesis 8:22.

The beginnings of all things in the book of Genesis include, we are sorry to note, the beginning of sin in the fall of Adam. Soon we read of the first murder, Cain slaying his godly brother, Abel, because his acceptance with God exposed the wrong heart-attitude of Cain.

The godly line was renewed in Seth, but before long sin again lifted its ugly head. Now the wickedness of man had become so widespread that God was driven to a drastic judgment.

I. Judgment for the Wicked (6:5-7).

The Lord sees the wickedness of men—let us not forget that! At times it seems as though the ungodly flourish in their sin and that there is no judgment upon them.

God knows what goes on in the world. He is long-suffering and merciful, but there is a boundary line to His patience, and when that limit is reached, there can be nothing but judgment.

Ever imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was evil continually (v. 5). One is reminded of Jeremiah 17:9, and of such a contemporary estimate of man as that of Dr. Mackay, who said, "Psychology has unveiled the dismal and sinister depths in human nature. Man can no longer flee from reality into the romantic refuge of his own heart; for the human heart has become a house of horrors in whose murky recesses man cannot erect for his solace either a shrine or a citadel. Man is bad; he is a sinner."

God did not change. His mind (v. 6), but man by his sin moved himself out of the circle of God's love over into the circle of His judgment. God never changes, but we change our relation to Him by our actions. Such is the evident meaning of this verse.

II. Deliverance for the Upright (8: 1, 4, 18).

God remembered Noah, and he "found grace in the eyes of the Lord" (Gen. 6:8) because he was "a just man" (6:9). At the Lord's command, he prepared the ark for the saving of himself and his house, and after the Lord had "shut him in" (Gen. 7:16), the great judgment by water came upon the earth.

After 150 days (Gen. 7:24), the Lord remembered Noah (8:1) and caused the earth to dry up once again. The same Lord who shut him in to keep him during the flood brought him out after the flood (8: 15, 16), gave him great power (9: 1-4), assured him of His protection (9:5-7), and gave him the great promise (9:8-16) of which the rainbow became the token.

The God who will in no wise forget the sin of the wicked will never leave nor forsake those who walk uprightly before Him. The story of Noah should stimulate our faith, causing us to obey and trust God. His protecting hand is over His children, and He can bring them through the darkest days of tribulation.

III. Mercy in the Midst of Sin (8:20-22).

"Noah builded an altar," for the first impulse of his heart was to give praise to God for His mighty deliverance. His offering came up to God as "a sweet savor," that is, it was pleasing to God.

To come before God with acceptable worship, man must come with clean hands. The question is not whether he is brilliant, learned, or of high position. The one thing that counts is obedience. When such a man offers the worship of his heart before God, it goes up to him like a sweet savor.

God knew man's heart (v. 21). He had no illusions that even the judgment of the flood would change it. Eagerly His love sought man's obedient response, but He well knew that the awful pestilence of sin would continue until the very end of the age.

So in spite of that sin, and in the very midst of it, God promised that He would never again wipe out humanity as He did in the flood. There would be individual judgment and collective judgment on certain groups, but never again the smiting of every living thing. Thus, He set men free from the terror which must have now been in their hearts.

The beautiful rainbow in the cloud became a token of God's promise, and the visible assurance to "all flesh" that the judgment of the flood would not be repeated. Never again would seed time and harvest, nor any of the orderly processes of nature, fail throughout the whole earth.

What a gracious God we have! And what a pity that men presume upon His goodness.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the orders, to permit food and water to enter the city. The Major placed a ceiling on prices to stop a black market caused by the generosity of the Americans. The fishermen sent Tina to the Major to thank him for arranging for the renewal of their fishing rights. The Major told her he would soon have good news about her sweetheart.

CHAPTER XX

The case which Gargano considered serious was the case of Errante and his mule cart.

Errante was sworn in. The Major asked for the accusation. Gargano pushed Errante to one side and stood before the Major.

"Honorable Mister Major," he began, "this is a case of interference with the American military. I consider it one of the most serious we have yet had to handle."

The Major said: "That is for me to judge, Gargano. What is the accusation?"

Then Gargano told, or rather acted out, the story of how Errante Gaetano's cart had blocked traffic on Via Umberto the First. Gargano the Two-Hands leaped and swore and shook his two fists at Errante, and he made Zito act as the mule, and he attacked Zito fiercely, and then he reeled back from sham blow after sham blow. He did not ask anyone to act out the part of Errante, but let his own dodging and staggering give the idea.

"I am poor, Mister Major," Errante began. "I have a cart. A cart is all I have."

He looked around the room and thought.

"My wife died of the malaria," he said. "My wife was a serious woman. She did not laugh for eighteen years. However, she cooked rabbit well. She died of the malaria."

After another pause he said: "It seems to me that I have heard more laughter since the disembarkation. This is especially true among the children. You see, I have been trying to think out what made me stop and listen to the children the other afternoon, when I did not notice the Swimming War."

"The what, cartman?"

"I call them Swimming War. They are American vehicles which swim."

"Amphibious trucks, yes, go ahead."

Errante Gaetano paused. This time it did not look as if he would come out of the pause. He frowned.

Major Joppolo covered up this embarrassment by saying to Gargano: "We are going to have to dismiss this case, Gargano. I regret that it caused you embarrassment. But after what this man has said, could you see any justice in punishing him?"

Gargano protested: "American soldiers might have been killed by the delay."

The Major said: "I doubt it, Gargano. All he was guilty of was being too interested in the children's laughter."

Errante had recovered from his moment of emotion. He said: "There is more laughter. I think my wife would have laughed at my description of this man"—he looked at Gargano—"talking about my cart. It is too bad she died of the malaria. Now that you Americans are here, I think she would have laughed. In spite of the mistake about the mule. Yes, I think so, Mister Major."

"Oh dear," said Private First Class Everett B. Banto, clerk in A.P.O. 917, in a second floor room in one of the annexes of the Saint George Hotel in Algiers.

He was reading somebody else's V-mail letter, the envelope of which was open. Private Banto was a mail clerk. He had also been a mail clerk in Greenton, Vermont, before the war. Even in Greenton, he had been very concerned about the way America was behaving herself in the world.

"Oh dear," he said. "I don't see how we're ever going to win the war."

"What's itching your pants now?" said Sergeant Walter Frank, another clerk, who was reading somebody else's copy of Collier's.

"Listen to this," said Private Banto. "It says here: 'Why the hell do we have to give the Frogs and the Limeys and the Chinks all the stuff we make? Seems to me we've played Santa Claus long enough.' Oh dear."

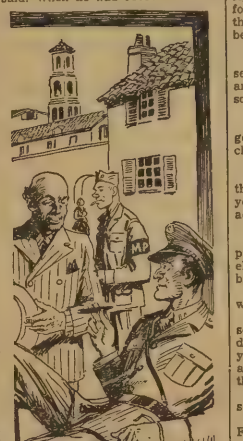
"Says who," said Sergeant Frank, "what's a matter with that? It makes me vomit to see these Frenchmen driving all over the place when my folks at home can hardly even drive to the A. & P. to get their food."

"Walter, that's not a very good attitude, is it? We won't make many friends in the world that way."

Private Banto put the V-letter back in its envelope, and put the envelope in its proper cubbyhole. He picked up one of the mail pouches from the front, cut the wire binding and began to sort the contents, most of which consisted of tempting memoranda, not enclosed in envelopes.

"Gosh, Walter," he said, "we Americans certainly go in for a lot of paper work. Look at this stuff from the front—from the front, where they're supposed to be fighting. I don't see how we're ever going to win the war."

Sergeant Frank, who was trying to read a story, said testily: "So what's the matter with a little paper work?"



"And look at this. Gosh, but we're inefficient. Look here, this is supposed to be addressed to someone in the 49th Division which is over there, and it's from someone else in the 49th Division, right there too, and they sent it all the way back to Algiers. Isn't that terrible?"

"Oh yes, it's just terrible!" said Sergeant Frank, imitating Private Banto's voice.

"Well, what should I do about it, Walter?"

"You can jam it in the ash can for all I care," Sergeant Frank said harshly.

"Why, Walter," Private Banto said. When he had recovered from the shock, he said: "Seriously, Walter, what should I do with it?"

"I think the Major's falling for the blonde."

"Well, if it don't look important, you can throw it in the dead letter basket, that's what we usually do."

"You couldn't do that, Walter."

"You just said yourself there's too much paper work. What's one paper more or less?"

"It might be important."

"Well, look at it. What is it about?"

"It says: 'For information. Re carts, Adano.' And then it has something about an order that General Marvin issued, and then apparently a certain Major Joppolo countermanded the order, or something."

"It's about General Marvin? Throw it away!"

"Oh no, I wouldn't dare." And Walter put the memorandum in the pouch to go back to the front.

"Now don't bother me," Sergeant Frank said. "I'm reading."

Private Banto kept on sorting. "Oh dear," he said in a few minutes, "listen to this, here's a thing about a captain that's being sent back because of behavior unbecoming to an officer. I don't see how we're ever going to win, dear me."

The idea of a party for Major Joppolo grew up in a peculiar way. It came up partly because of real affection for the Major. But it was also partly because Captain Purvis wanted to see if he couldn't make some time with one of the daughters of Tomasino.

Giuseppe the interpreter stopped in to see Captain Purvis at the M.P. command post one afternoon. Giuseppe was just keeping his butter evenly spread. "How's a thing, a Cap?" he asked. He called Purvis Cap because his tongue always tripped on Captain.

"Okay," the Captain said.

"You like Adano?"

"Okay," the Captain said.

"You like a little more fun?"

"Who wouldn't?"

"Why you don't a go see Francesca no more?"

"There's nothing there, Giuseppe, the family's always hanging around."

"I'm a no so sure. You don't a try very hard."

"Besides, I think the Major's falling for the blonde. He's a good guy, I wouldn't want to mess him up any."

"How you mess him up? You fool around a Francesca."

"No, Giuseppe, I think the Major's serious. I don't know, he didn't say anything, I just got a hunch. If I fooled around with those girls, it would be strictly for fish. No, I don't think it's a good idea."

"You mean a Mister Major, he's a fall in a love?"

"I don't know. Maybe. I think so."

"What a for? Can he have a no fun without a fall over like a that?"

"Doesn't look to me like you can have much fun with a whole bunch around, including you, Giuseppe, and having to eat that awful candy, and the old lady sitting there. No, Giuseppe, if I play house with a little dolly, I like a little privacy."

"Giuseppe's a fix."

"I doubt if you could."

"Francesca's not a scrupulous. Tina's not a scrupulous. You can have a some fun."

"How? What can you fix, Giuseppe?"

"Fix a party."

"There you go with a crowd again. Let's have a little privacy."

"How about a Major?"

"Yeah, I suppose we got to think of him. You know, Giuseppe, he's a funny guy. Sometimes I think he's an awful wet blanket, and sometimes I can't help liking him. He was telling me the other day at lunch that the main thing he really wants around here is to have these Italian people like him. You know what I think we ought to do? I think we ought to throw a party for him. Or rather I think we ought to rig it so these Italians throw a party for him." Captain Purvis never thought of Giuseppe as an Italian, because he spoke English.

"Giuseppe's a fix."

"I mean a real good party, Giuseppe. With people like the Mayor and that old sulphur crackpot, and some nice girls of course."

"Giuseppe's a fix."

"And some wine. Couldn't we get some champagne for a change?"

"Giuseppe's a fix."

"If we really had a big party, then a certain Captain and a certain young lady could do a disappearing act, couldn't they?"

Giuseppe winked again.

"That's what I hate about a small party, anyone goes out, everyone else notices it. We ought to have a big party for a change."

Giuseppe said: "How many you want, a Captain?"

"Oh, I don't know, you can get some of these Italians together and decide. I'll put up whatever dough you need. We could have it down at the villa where my men stay, that Quattrocchi guy's house."

"When you want a party?" Giuseppe asked.

"Well, pretty soon, how about next Friday?"

"Giuseppe's a fix."

And so it happend that in his mail, two or three days later, Major Joppolo got a card, on which was written in Italian: "A Committee of the people of Adano request the pleasure of your company at a party in honor of His Excellency the Mister Major Victor Joppolo on Friday evening, July 29th, at Villa Rossa, 71 Via Umberto the First, at 8:30 p.m."

Major Joppolo propped the card on the inkstand on his desk where he could read it, and often did: ". . . in honor of His Excellency. . . ."

General Marvin believed in what he called "keeping in touch." He liked to know what was going on, both in the world and in the Army.

That Monday morning, the Lieutenant read him Ernie Pyle's column and Pup Tent Poets from the Stars & Stripes, an article on Teller mines and S-mines in the Infantry Journal, a condensation of birth control in the Reader's Digest, three situation reports from A.F.H.Q., a handful of fan letters arising from an article about the General in some magazine, and a letter of commendation of the General from Secretary Stimson, referring to a battle in Tunisia. This last had arrived several days before, and without being told, Lieutenant Byrd had had the sense to read it to the General every morning.

By the time these things were finished, the General was in an excellent mood. But as always seemed to be the case, when Lieutenant Byrd started in on the memoranda from various officers, the old man gradually got angry.

Memoranda always seemed to be written about things that had gone wrong. This morning there was one about how some signal corps telephone wire had been lost on an LST, so that one unit was very badly off for communications; there was another about the need for gasoline dumps to be established closer behind a certain division so that trucks would not have to run so far for fuel; a third about the way close air support was occasionally attacking friendly troops . . . and so they went.

After some of the memoranda, the General would bellow directions to Colonel Middleton, sitting in the next room. After others he would roar: "The hell with 'em. They're no worse off than all the others. The answer is no."

Lieutenant Byrd picked up one of the memoranda and read: "To General Marvin for information etcetera etcetera, routing address, and so forth. Subject: Mule carts, town of Adano."

The General rumbled: "Dam mule carts."

Lieutenant Byrd read: "On July 19, orders were received from General Marvin, 49th Division, to keep all mule carts out of the town of Adano. Guards were posted at the bridge over Rosso River and at Capocardo Sulphur Refinery. Order carried out . . ."

SHIELD EXPERT HERE

H. M. Shevnan, widely known expert of Chicago, will personally be at the Jefferson Davis Hotel, Montgomery, Saturday and Sunday only, July 14 and 15, 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

Mr. Shevnan says: The Zoetic Shield is a tremendous improvement over all former methods, effecting immediate results. It will not only hold the rupture perfectly no matter the size or location but it will increase the circulation, strengthen the weakened parts, and thereby close the opening in ten days on the average case, regardless of heavy lifting, straining or any position the body may assume. A nationally known scientific method. No under straps or cumbersome arrangements and absolutely no medicines or medical treatments.

Mr. Shevnan will be glad to demonstrate without charge.

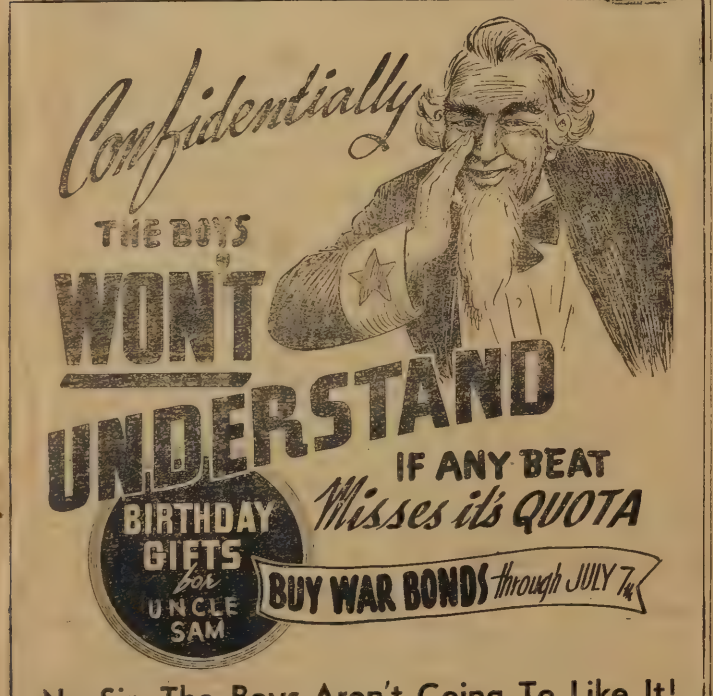
have a nice record that all the men will be anxious to tell about when they complete the battle.

Charles is the son of Mr and Mrs C. D. Messer of this city.

Its nice to have S-1C Jesse Culp home from Jacksonville, Fla. where he will spend a 30-day leave here with his parents. He is enroute to Berea, Ky., where he will attend college for one year before entering pre-flight school.

We received a nice letter from "Bucky" Armstrong who is in Breman, Germany, this week asking us to please send him the "good old Chilton County News". He said that he had just seen his brother-in-law, Charles Honeycutt, who had a copy of the News and he let him read it. "Bucky" says that was the first and best News he had gotton from Clanton in about a year. We're glad that he enjoyed it and sincerely hope that he will soon be getting one of his own as we're starting to send it this week.



Anyone wishing to write him may secure his address from the News office.

Arnold L. Messer, S-1C, of this city on liberty in Belgium after participating in the Normandy invasion, decided to drop in at the local movie theatre. The Luftwaffe decided to drop in too. When their work was done only sixty survived out of 1300 spectators. One of them was Messer. He is now a patient at the U. S. Naval Hospital at St. Albans, Long Island.

Aboard a Liberty ship, Messer participated in both the Normandie and Southern France invasions. His ship was fifth to land in Belgium and underwent a robot attack as it was leaving. Messer's travels have taken him to Australia and Russia, besides Europe. He wears the American, Asiatic, Pacific and European Theatre Ribbons with two stars. His parents are Mr and Mrs C. D. Messer who reside at 203 15th Street, Clanton.

No Sir, The Boys Aren't Going To Like It!

That is they aren't going to like it if they find out that you aren't doing your part.

This is your Uncle Sam speaking, the old gentleman with the whiskers and the Red, White and Blue suit.

If a single beat, whether it is in the country, town or city, in a single Alabama county, fails to measure up to the job it has been asked to do . . . well, the boys just aren't going to like it.

You see those boys have been fighting while you have been here at home. They have been facing death and living under the very worse kind of conditions.

No good beds for them at night. Most of their food comes out of cans and you wouldn't eat it on a bet. They are either wet or scorched with heat most of the time. But when they are given an objective they make that objective. If they didn't you wouldn't be quite so happy now.

It isn't that I think any of you are going to fail. It is just that I don't want those boys over there, and those who are going to have to go over there, to ask you embarrassing questions.

Now is the time to do your part of the job and avoid such questions, for if every beat in every county goes over the top, then Alabama has done its part of the job.

No Alabama beat, or county, will be happy if that beat or county fails.

Take a hitch in your suspenders. Take some time off. Dig a little deeper in the old sock, you know it has been pretty full the past few years, and put your money behind the men who will fight their way to Tokyo.

You Have Until Saturday, July 7th To Do Your Part!

THEY DID IT BEFORE—
THEY CAN DO IT AGAIN

With Farmall Tractor Power

Throughout the Spring, from the Rockies to the Atlantic seaboard, worried farmers searched the skies for signs of clear weather, but the cold rains fell relentlessly.

For more than a month the seed should have been germinating in the warm soil. Millions of acres lay unplanted because the ground was too wet for preparation of the seed bed and too cold for germination of the seed.

Only a generation ago there could have been but one outcome—crop shortage and food scarcity. Nature allows scant time for planting when the warm sun waits till late May or June before drying the soggy soil. Horses are too slow and tire too quickly to get the job done then.

But the farmers remember May of 1943—only two years ago—when their fast, untiring tractors averted crop failure. Then, too, rains flooded the fields and the month was all but spent before they could go in on the land and plant.

In 1943, most farmers drove their tractors from dark to dark, and longer. Many planted around the clock, working in two or three shifts. They made one of the greatest crops in history.

In today's war-torn world—with hunger and disease already stalking many peoples—even one major crop failure could bring famine. This is why the sound of tractors and planting machinery was heard, day and night, from the Plains states to the Eastern seaboard—why headlights stabbed the darkness over the fields.

America's farmers are doing it again, in spite of an unprecedented combination of adverse circumstances—bad weather, shortages of machines and shortages of manpower. For the second time in three years, they are relying upon their tractor-powered machines to help rescue large areas of the world from catastrophe. More of these tractors are products of International Harvester than of any other company.

VOLUMN XXIII — CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1945. — NUMBER 28

Unity Chilton Associational School of Missions

God, in His great goodness, has again brought us to the date for our Associational School of Missions to be held at the First Baptist Church, Clanton, July 24-25. He has led us step by step, so that today we find all plans and preparations almost complete.

We believe great blessings and privileges are in store for all who will give God a chance to speak to them through the lives and words of our consecrated missionaries as they present the challenge of the Great Commission to our day and generation. If we are to remain truly missionary Baptist churches, we cannot afford to miss this opportunity that comes but once a year. The experiences of our missionaries as they have claimed the promises of God in far distant mission fields, will surely strengthen the spiritual life of our churches.

Rev. Lawrence Thibodeaux, Louisiana, of our Home Mission Board, and Miss Annie Sandlin of China and Miss Minnie McElroy of Brazil, representatives of our Foreign Mission Board, will be our missionary speakers at the General Assembly periods.

Mission study classes, conducted by talented and conecrated leadership, have been arranged for all ages. The adults will study "Epochs of Home Missions" under Mrs. R. M. Richardson of Tuscaloosa, our State W.M.U. mission study chairman. Intermediate boys will study "The Westward Way," under Rev. Charles Barnes, director of the Baptist Student Union at the University of Alabama. Intermediate girls will study "The Apostle of the Chilean Border" under Mrs. W. C. Drake of Birmingham. Junior boys will study "The Life of David Livingston" under Rev. Robert Woody of the Louisville Baptist Seminary. Junior girls will study "They all Began to Sing" under Miss Mary Ellen Yancey of the W.M.U. Training School, Louisville Ky., and the Sunbeams will study "Just Like You," under Miss Margaret Wilson, graduate of Blue Mountain College, Miss. There will be mission study text books on sale for all ages. Come prepared to be able to carry some Christian literature home with you.

The two-day sessions will run from 9:30 a. m. 'til 3:30 p. m. Be generous and share your cars and trucks so that all may find it possible to attend both days—even the children. Let us, at least on this occasion, forget the common ordinary personal things of life, and put God and His Kingdom first . . . "and all these things shall be added unto you."

Everyone is asked to bring his own lunch, and we shall eat together in the church basement at noon. The Clanton W.M.S. will serve iced tea to all.

Let us all pray and work for a great associational school of Missions.

American Legion Baseball Results

On July 4th, in Clanton, a large crowd saw the Clanton American Legion team drop one game to Sylacauga Post No. 63. On Friday, July 6th, Clanton lost another game to Sylacauga Post No. 45 at Sylacauga, Ala.

The last scheduled game will be played here Wednesday, July 11th with Siluria. However, every one seems to want to continue the league, and a second half of scheduled games may be arranged and played, in which case, the winner of the first half and second half, will probably fight it out for the championship of the league.

REVIVAL AT PLANTERSVILLE BAPTIST CHURCH, BEGINS 4TH SUNDAY IN JULY

The revival at Plantersville Baptist Church will begin on the fourth Sunday in July, which will be the 22nd.

AWARDED THE COMBAT INFANTRYMAN BADGE

Pvt. Talmadge E. Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fonza T. Williams, Billingsley, Ala., was recently awarded the Expert Infantryman Badge, for having successfully completed the combat course of training as prescribed by the War Department.

Inducted into the army in February of this year, he is now completing his training cycle with Co. B, 9th Battalion, at Camp Wheeler, Ga.

Lewis Eubanks, AMM 3-C from Kingsville, Texas, flew down to Birmingham with military personnel and visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dewey Eubanks last Tuesday.

Private Veryl B. Killingsworth, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Killingsworth of Jemison, Ala., who entered service in October, 1942, is now serving as an ammunition loader with an anti-aircraft artillery gun battalion, in Major General William F. Marquat's 14th anti-aircraft command on Luzon.

At this time he is entitled to wear the Asiatic-Pacific medal with two combat service stars attached to denote battle participation in New Guinea and Philippines campaigns and the Philippine liberation medal.

S-Sgt. Gordon Dunnavant from March Field, Calif., is spending a 15-day furlough here with his wife and other relatives.

Cpl. John Vandereer just returned from overseas and is spending some time here with his father.

GIRL PARACHUTIST TO MAKE ANOTHER JUMP JULY 15TH

This might be your last chance, so don't miss it.

A. E. A. To Support Tax Amendment

The Alabama Education Association, through it's executive and legislative committees, has pledged active support to the income tax amendment to be voted on October 2, according to announcement by Frank Grove, association secretary. Another influential organization, the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, will not support the proposed amendment, according to a statement from its president, Walter Randolph. These statements indicated possibility of a lively campaign developing over ratification of the proposed amendment. Approval of the amendment would greatly increase funds available for education, welfare and other services, but would eliminate the present requirement that future income tax revenue be used exclusively for further reduction of State ad valorem taxes. The amendment does not levy any new tax, but removes restrictions on use of revenue from the existing income tax.

MR. GEORGE T. GUY

Mr. George T. Guy, age 5, died at his residence July Fourth about 8:20 a.m., Verbena Route. Funeral services were held at 4:00 p.m. Thursday, from Proctor Creek Church in Coosa County, conducted by Rev. Phillip Bonnett and Rev. Joe Raines; interment in adjoining cemetery.

Ink spots can be removed by pouring table salt on the spot while it is still wet. As soon as the salt absorbs the ink, remove it and replace with fresh salt. Repeat until the spot disappears.

Cottage cheese is abundant now and is an excellent source of protein, and of calcium. Cottage cheese may be served plain, with salad dressing, with whole milk and sugar, or combined with fruits and vegetables. It is ideally adapted to salads and sandwich fillings.

Pilot Club Enjoys Picnic

On Tuesday evening, June 26th, a large percentage of Clanton Pilot Club members motored to Dr. Nix's camp and enjoyed several hours of boat riding and swimming. Several children were guests of the club and added to the fun. When supper was served there were an abundance of fried chicken salads, sandwiches, cakes and many other things that go with just such outings.

Members appreciate the kindness of Dr. Nix, also the hospitality of his daughter, Margaret.

July 10th will be business meeting at the home of Escharles Johnson.

MR. D. S. ROBINSON

Mr. D. S. Robinson, age 76, passed away at his home in Cooper July 4th after a long illness.

Funeral services were held at Cooper Baptist Church Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Ogletree of Central Park Baptist Church, Rev. J. D. Hughes and Rev. Roswell Owens. J. Mell Martin & Sons were in charge.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Nettie L. Robinson; two sons, N. J. of Cooper and John of the U. S. Army in England; twelve daughters: Jane and Deane Robinson and Mrs. Dewel Jones, all of Cooper; Mrs James Morgan of Montgomery; Virgie Robinson of Mobile; Mrs. Percy Minor Mrs. Dewey Rockett and Mrs. Nan Taylor of Clanton; Mrs. W. G. Vinson of Cooper; Mrs. George D. Curlee of Birmingham; Mrs. C. D. Hughes of LaFayette and Mrs. Lee Robinson of Verbena; three sisters; Mrs. L. A. Calloway and Misses Zonie and Laura Robinson of Clanton; four step-daughters; one step-son in U. S. Army in Italy; 17 grand children and three great-grand children.

Pallbearers were: Houston Robinson, Percy Minor, Jimmy Morgan, Dewey Rockett, George Curlee and Walter Vinson.

MRS. MINNIE ARMSTRONG

Mrs. Minnie Armstrong, age 53, died at her residence, Clanton Route Four, Friday about 6:30 p.m. Funeral services were held Sunday from Concord church at 2:30 p.m., conducted by Rev. G. G. Williams and Rev. G. C. Burk; interment in adjoining cemetery.

She is survived by her husband, Mr. Jim Armstrong; her father, Mr. Elijah Mims; six brothers—O. E. Mims of Birmingham, E. C. of Montgomery, W. L., V. M., C. E. and O. M. Mims, all of Clanton; three sisters—Mrs. W. G. Taylor, Clanton, Mrs. A. J. Maddox, Clanton, Mrs. G. J. Easterling of Clanton.

Pallbearers: Howard Mims, Hilman Mims, Morris Taylor, Fred Mims, Winford Mims and Erskin Mims.

Flower ladies: Mary Clyde Mims, Dorothy Mims, Maverine Maddox, Doris Mims, Edna Ruth Mims, Mrs. James Glover Parrish, Mrs. Paul Parrish, Miss Ora Jones, Onnie Ruth Smith and Mrs. Jeff Waites.

More Money On Gas Tax Since Ration Increase

The biggest check mailed to Alabama counties since gasoline rationing started went our from the Department of Revenue last Friday. Distribution of Gasoline tax money collected in June gave each county $10,-349.62, compared with $9,661.48 for the same month last year. For the first nine months of the current fiscal year, from October 1, through June, each county has received approximately $88,000, compared with $82,000 for the same period a year ago. Major A. B. Tucker, chief of the gasoline tax division of the Department of Revenue predicted that due to liberalizing of the rationing program, larger distributions may be expected in the future.

Here Is What Your 1945 Legislature Accomplished

The legislature ended its 1945 session Friday, June 29th. Important action at the session included:

Submitted to the voters a proposed constitutional amendment to place income tax revenue in the State treasury subject to legislative appropriation, after providing for retirement of bonds to which it was originally pledged and also of old reconstruction or "carpetbag" bonds.

Increased annual appropriations to education, public welfare, and health as follows: Education, including higher institutions approximately $6,850,-000; of this, $1,750,000 is conditioned upon ratification of the income tax amendment, and $1,200,000 on condition of the treasury and approval of the governor. Welfare, $3,000,000, of which $1,750,000 is conditioned on ratification of the income tax amendment, and $750,000 on condition of the treasury and approval of the governor. Health, $236,000, of which $220,000 is conditioned on state of the treasury and approval of the governor.

Created a State Building Commission, and set aside $22,000,000 of the surplus for a building program for schools and various State institutions.

Provided aid to counties for farm-to-market roads. In first postwar year, $2,500,000 of State money and like amount of Federal funds will be divided among the counties, giving every county meeting required operating standards $75,000, without being required to match.

Created a State Department of Veterans Affairs, with annual appropriation of $350,000, and provision for county service centers, to help veterans get benefits to which they are entitled.

Submitted a proposed amendment authorizing the State to acquire, build and operate hospitals and health centers, and passed enabling legislation along that line. Authorized construction of district tuberculosis sanatoria.

Tightened laws governing registration of voters, including submission of a proposed amendment to require applicants to be able to understand and explain the constitution, and to eliminate existing provision making ownership of $300 worth of property a qualification.

Provided a retirement system for State employes, with authority to cities and counties to come under its provisions if they desire.

Submitted proposed amendment to authorize cities to levy ad valorem taxes up to 12½ mills.

Authorized establishment of an agricultural center, for exhibition of livestock, agricultural and industrial products.

Levied a severance tax on timber proceeds to go to forest fire protection.

Increased beer tax by one-half cent a bottle, expected to produce $500,-000 annually, to be divided equally among the 67 counties.

Amended the absentee voting law in a move designed to curb abuses, changes including a requirement that names of those voting absentee ballots be published or posted four days before an election.

Created a tax study commission to study revenue laws and propose revisions, and passed a measure strengthening county boards of equalization.

Increased salaries of circuit judges from $5,000 to $6,000 a year, and provided that on reaching age of 70, with 15 years continuous service, they may retire to supernumerary status at salary of $3,000 a year.

A large volume of proposed legislation was defeated. Measures introduced, but which failed to pass, included: Repeal or modification of poll tax. Reapportionment of representation in the legislature. Enactment of a State wage-hour law. Abolition of absentee voting except for members of the armed forces. Submission of the prohibition question to the voters. Repeal of the Merit System. Creation of a new State Board of Education with enlarged powers. Lowering voting age from 21 to 18. Elimination of sales tax tokens. Provision for a referendum on local legislation by voters of the county affected. Granting authority to sterilize insane and feeble-minded persons. Cutting terms of county tax assessors and collectors back to four years. Refund to farmers on tractor gasoline tax.

The session just ended was the last of the present legislature, unless it should be called in special session. Next regular session will start in January, 1947, of the new legislature to be elected in 1946.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Many Wives Aid the Enemy

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"Mollie," she says, "is a perfectly good girl, but she has her friends at the house—all the time, who are laughing and making candy and going to afternoon movies."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"THINGS have just been running down at home since Ted and Larry went away to war," whined a woman to me in the market the other day. "You see," she went on, "Larry was making good money and he helped out a lot, and by this time I suppose Ted would have been a wage-earner, too. Now with just Betty and Dad at home, we are the most dismal group you can imagine, and the money trouble doesn't help to console us! I can't wait to have the boys get back, when we can get all straightened out, pay our debts and start over."

I looked at this woman in amazement. She loves her sons; she will grieve bitterly if either is taken by war. And yet she could stand there and tell me, with a sort of melancholy pride, that the welcome provided for the boys of the family is going to be complaints, debts, anxieties, responsibilities—no heartening assurance of the family's solvency and security, no encouraging plans for rest and recuperation—just the old tedious complaining and protesting against the general injustices of fate.

Another woman wrote to her son that she and his grandmother, who have been living together, have had so serious a disagreement that they are going to law about it. She asks him to answer several questions by return mail: Does he remember his grandmother saying that his mother had been mixed up in an unsavory love affair before her marriage; will he testify that his grandmother often called his mother ugly names, and so on.

The lonely son, wasting the best years of his life in the bleak Aleutians, must sit down and handle the quarrels of the two undisciplined women.

Runs Down His Wife.

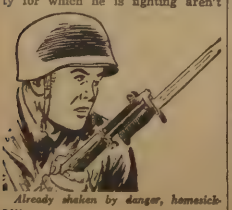
Another woman writes her son disparaging letters about his wife. Mollie, she says, is a perfectly good girl, but she has friends at the house all the time who are laughing and making candy and going to afternoon movies, and the mother-in-law thinks it is a shame to have Bob's money wasted that way.

And again a homesick man must open letters that fill his heart with bitterness and despair.

As for the "dear John" letters—these have become a recognized aid to the enemy! The "dear John" letter is a missive that opens with the shattering phrase, "I have been thinking of us and our married life, and I believe we would both be happier if we were to obtain a divorce and make a fresh start with other mates."

Don't smile at this and dismiss it as only an occasional thing. It is a very real and desperate menace to the morale and peace of mind of our fighting boys. Hundreds and hundreds of these cruel notes go forth daily, and the effect they have on a man whose nerves are shaken already by danger, by the loss of comrades, by homesickness, mosquitoes and strangeness may be imagined.

The woman he loves doesn't want to see him any more. The little children who cried when daddy went away won't be his children when he comes back. The home and security for which he is fighting aren't either home or secure. The devastating breath of war is not only blighting his life now, at the terrible battle front, but it has destroyed everything else, too.



Grim, Vital Days Ahead.

I would like to remind these letter-writing women that we are going into grim and vital postwar days. Every woman in America will be a help or a burden to the building of the new world then—there will be no half-way. Thousands of helpless, selfish, discontented women will find themselves left out of the running, their children rebellious at the change that gives them a strange home and a new father, their new mates not inclined to be particularly considerate of the women who coldbloodedly could drop old mates during the crisis of war.

But thank God there will be other women, millions of them—women who have written nothing but encouraging and loving letters during this time; women who have planned practically for the homecoming, are saving money, are out of debt and are full of ideas for Tom's future; women who know that more than our pilgrim or pioneer mothers needed them, we need now courage, self-control, economy and foresight. It is the woman who is strong, faithful to her mate, concerned with his welfare and that of the children and able to live on her income, no matter how small, who is going to be the inspiration, the essential creator, of the new America.

MORALE WRECKERS

It is every woman's duty to try to preserve the morale of the men of her family who are fighting. She should do everything she can to preserve and, when possible, to improve the situation at home. When there are difficulties that she cannot cope with, she should tell her soldier little or nothing about them. Perhaps they will clear up—in any case they can wait. Seldom can the poor fellow in a distant camp do anything about them, anyway. He has enough to contend with, struggling against the enemy, and enduring discomforts of all sorts. Letters disparaging his wife, telling of family quarrels and financial problems, do serious damage to the spirit of the front-line fighters.

Already shaken by danger, homesickness. . .

Shifting Curtains Around Makes Them Last Longer

Curtains hung at windows exposed to bright light or sunshine will give out first. Sunlight causes the fabric to lose its strength. It is a good plan to make top and bottom hems of the same width and then reverse them each time they are washed or cleaned. Curtains from sunny windows can be shifted occasionally to the shady side of the house. Sheets usually wear thin first in the upper center, where the shoulders give them more rubbing. To make them wear more evenly, reverse them from head to foot occasionally. Mend all snags promptly. The thrifty home-maker may stitch together the outside edges of sheets worn thin in the middle, split them down the center and hem the edges, to greatly prolong their usefulness.

More Cloth Coming Soon

The supply of yard goods for home-sewing in small towns and rural areas will soon be increased. Preference ratings will be given to merchants in these areas for the distribution of about 150,000,000 yards of cotton fabrics, including pongee, voile, sheeting 42 inches and wider, print cloths, outing flannel and gingham. This decision follows a similar order, issued during the first quarter of this year, which was aimed to correct unequal distribution of piece goods.

News Behind the News

By Paul Mallon

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

LABOR LEGISLATION FORCED BY STRIKES

WASHINGTON. — A fair-trade-practices bill for labor (Richberg) is supposed to lie around congress until the coming expected wave of union strikes generates an irresistible demand for its adoption—then it, or something like it, is passed. This, indeed, is the sotto voce program.

Such delay may sound like a backend way to handle an expected national crisis, because the bill proposes to avert the strikes by providing machinery for just settlements, not only in the public interest, but in the long-range interest of the unions. Yet you can see what is beginning to happen to the legislation in the probable absence of Alabama's Senator Lister Hill from the list of sponsors.

Donald Richberg

This was supposed to be a four-senator bill, introduced by two Democrats and two Republicans; in fact, the same ones who sponsored the declaration of senatorial peace principles, Ball, Burton, Hatch—and Hill. But on this bill, Hill says he was "just too busy" to fill out the B2H2 leadership, so it became B2H1. Most people think the real reason is that the CIO was instrumental in Hill's recent re-election.

The "too busy" treatment is likely to be applied generally to the proposal, because nothing in its announced purposes can very well be openly opposed by the unions, or anyone.

Basically, the bill would require the arbitrary unions to moderate their "public - be-damned" policy. Disruptions of public service, such as in the Fifth avenue bus slowdown in New York recently, where the drivers just decided to run an hour or so late, as well as strikes in public utilities, milk deliveries, etc., would be prevented by judicial compulsory arbitration.

This is in the sound interest of the unions, because all now are suffering from the conspicuous public-be-damned policy of a few unions.

The bill was not written by manufacturers or employers, but by an old union lawyer, Donald Richberg, who composed the most successful labor law ever enacted, the Railway Labor act. Under it the railway brotherhoods have prospered better than other labor unions, and without strikes.

The senatorial sponsors are not anti-labor people either, but somewhat left-leaning. The way they described their general purposes is this:

ONE BOARD PLAN

They would break up the competitive handling of labor through various government agencies now, and put all conciliation and mediation activities in a new five-man board.

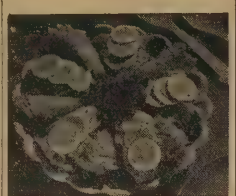
A second board of three would handle complaints of unfair practices by labor or employer, not just labor alone, as now.

The Wagner act would be further amended to make unions democratic and to limit the closed shop to places where the union controls at least 75 per cent of the workers and is open to all members, and thus is not in itself a closed shop handing employment down from generation to generation in its own ranks, or otherwise limiting workers' rights.

Further logical limitations would cut down the number of captious strikes now expanding in the country.

Labor could stop all the unconstructive opposition arising against it in many states where laws or constitutional changes are being advocated or enacted, to protect public interest against the unions, if they would take the mild and reasonable purposes of this bill, or alter them to suit the situation. If they would say the word to senators like Hill, the bill would go through in a minute.

Unfortunately too many labor leaders now are shortsighted reactionaries who want to defend the status quo and prevent any reform of existing unsatisfactory conditions.

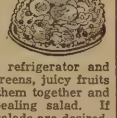


So it is quite possible congress will not only wait until the strike-horse runs away but the whole labor barn burns down, before taking up this key to lock the door.

Excessive use of power always kills itself by its own excesses. History is bulging with undeviating examples. Latest one is Hitler, who contrived his own defeat by carrying his power to lengths which caused an overwhelming opposition to be aroused. Statesmen, labor leaders or other humans seem unable to realize that power lasts only as long as it is wisely used.

Those who read this column weekly on the legal power built up by the Black faction of the Supreme court for unions to fix prices, realize the trend of this faction.

Heap Salad Bowls With Vitamins For Summer



Help Yourself to Vitamins: This pretty as a picture salad bowl is made simply by alternating rows of lettuce wedges and mounds of potato salad, garnished with slices of hard-cooked eggs. It's hearty enough for a main dish, even without meat.

Summer is the time to heap high the salad bowl and bring generous portions of nature's bounty of vitamins and minerals to the table.

Active summer play and strenuous work calls for big servings of health and energy producing foods. That's why the salad bowls play a major role in the menu parade.

There's another reason, too, why salads are going to be important this season. When the butcher has no meat and the cupboard yields nothing of interest to the homemaker, she can always go to her refrigerator and bring out lovely greens, juicy fruits and berries, toss them together and serve an eye-appealing salad. If more substantial salads are desired, especially for main dishes, they can be flecked with the white and gold of protein-rich eggs, unrationed, luscious bits of chicken or well chilled and subtly seasoned fish.

Vary the trimmings and change the dressing, and no salad can ever become monotonous. If oils and fats for salad dressings are scarce, put them together with sour cream, fruit juices, vinegar or cooked dressings that require little fat.

Here are two main dish salads that will go over big with the family. One stars eggs and the other chicken:

Star Deviled Eggs.
(12 Eggs)

12 hard-cooked eggs
2 tablespoons salad dressing
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1½ teaspoons mustard
1½ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
¾ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Remove shells from eggs. Cut a slice from both ends, cutting the slice at the round end deep enough to expose the yolk. Cut deep gashes into the egg white around the rounded end to give a saw tooth edge. Pressing gently at the bottom, force out the yolk. Press yolk and egg white that was cut off through the sieve. Add remaining ingredients and beat until smooth. Refill shells. Garnish tops if desired.

To serve as a salad, lay on top of sprigs of watercress or other greens. Or, use as a garnish for other salad platters.

Buffet Chicken Salad.
(Serves 8)

2 cups cubed, cooked chicken
¼ cup french dressing
4 cups boiled rice, chilled
Salt and pepper to taste
Boiled dressing or mayonnaise
Lettuce or greens
Jellied cranberry sauce
Deviled eggs

Combine chicken and french dressing. Chill about 1 hour. Meanwhile cook rice until fluffy and season well according to taste. Just before serving combine chicken, chilled rice and enough salad dressing to moisten. Season. Arrange in individual lettuce cups on platter or salad bowl. Garnish with thick slices of cranberry sauce and deviled eggs. Top with additional dressing, if desired.

There's nothing so cooling on a warm summer night than a jellied tomato salad. Although this recipe provides for a simple salad, it may be varied by adding leftover or chopped, fresh vegetables to it.

Jellied Tomato Salad.
(Serves 10)

1 quart hot, stewed tomatoes
1 teaspoon salt
2 packages of lemon flavored gelatin
½ cup sliced, pickled onions or
1 teaspoon onion juice
¼ cup sliced stuffed olives
¼ cup diced green pepper
1 cup diced celery

Dissolve gelatin in hot tomatoes. Add salt and cool. When gelatin begins to congeal, add the remaining ingredients. Place in a large mold, rinsed with cold water, or in individual molds. Chill until firm. Serve on salad greens with either french dressing or mayonnaise.

A fruity salad doubles for the dessert, if so desired. This one is especially good when served with tiny cakes or finger cookies:

Ocean Breeze Salad.
(Serves 6)

3 tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups diced honeydew melon
1 cup watermelon balls or slices
⅔ cup white grapes, split and seeded
1 cup grapefruit sections
3 tablespoons preserved ginger
1½ tablespoons gelatin
¼ cup cold water
¼ cup sugar
3 tablespoons chopped maraschino cherries

Mix gelatin and water and let stand 5 minutes. Dissolve over hot water. Combine fruits, lemon juice, sugar and ginger. Chill thoroughly. Add gelatin and pour into a mold. Chill until firm. If it is obtainable, ½ pint whipped cream may be added to fruits before they are mixed with the gelatin.

Green, White and Gold: As picturesque as a garden in full bloom is this simple salad made by placing chilled deviled eggs on crisp sprigs of watercress. Use extra dressing if desired, and serve for luncheon or side dish at garden supper.

Your salad can be better than just "passing" if your dressings are smooth and well seasoned so they can complement the other ingredients of the salad bowl. Here are several good basic suggestions:

Cooked Dressing.

½ cup sugar
½ cup vinegar
½ cup evaporated milk
½ teaspoon salt

Dissolve sugar in vinegar and stir until it dissolves. Beat in milk until mixture thickens. Pour over cabbage or other greens.

Sour Cream Dressing.

½ cup sour cream
½ cup vinegar
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt

Mix ingredients in order given. Chill.

Thousand Island Dressing.

1 cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons chili sauce
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons pimiento
2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickle

Mix all ingredients in order given. Serve over vegetable salads.

Different Salad Dressings: If fruits and vegetables do not give enough variety to make salads interesting, season the dressing itself for flavor plus.

Club Dressing: To 1 cup of mayonnaise, add 1 tablespoon chopped currants, 1 tablespoon chopped raisins, 1 tablespoon chopped nuts.

Indian Dressing: ¼ cup of chow-chow to 1 cup mayonnaise.

Tartar Dressing is excellent on fish salads. To 1 cup mayonnaise, add 2 tablespoons chopped sweet gherkins, 1 tablespoon capers, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and 2 tablespoons chopped olives.

Thousand Island Dressing is easily tossed together. For a cup of mayonnaise, use ¾ cup chili sauce, 1 tablespoon green pepper and chopped stuffed olives.

Egg dressing is lovely to look at when made by adding 1 chopped hard-cooked egg, 1 tablespoon chopped pimiento and 1 tablespoon India relish to 1 cup mayonnaise.

A bit of leftover meat? Add it to the eggs. Especially good are diced ham, tongue or dried beef

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the orders, to permit food and water to enter the city. The Major placed a ceiling on prices to stop a black market caused by generosity of the Americans. General Marvin finally received the note from Captain Purvis telling of the Major's granting carts entrance to town. He issued orders to have the Major recalled at once.

CHAPTER XXI

The General said: "Right, stop the carts. Lousy Italians trying to hold up the whole damn invasion. They better carry out the order."

Lieutenant Byrd droned on, hardly noticing what he read: "On July 20, guards were removed on order of Major—"

Lieutenant Byrd suddenly realized what he was reading. He put the memorandum down and picked up the next.

But the General Roared: "Finish it, finish it."

The Lieutenant read: "—were removed on order of Major Victor Joppolo, Civil Affairs Officer, town of Adano, because carts were essential to town and town was—"

Now the General had forgotten about finishing the memorandum. "Joppolo," he shouted, and his face was the color of distant mountains. "Joppolo."

General Marvin's memory worked in a peculiar fashion. "Middleton!" he shouted. "Come in here, Middleton."

The Colonel came in.

"Middleton, remember the name of Joppolo, a lousy little wop named Joppolo?"

Colonel Middleton said, with a tired face: "Yes, sir. The carts."

General Marvin bellowed: "I just remembered something. That wop was out of uniform that day. You remember? He had on pinks and a khaki shirt. You remember that, Middleton?"

Colonel Middleton said with a tired voice: "No sir."

"Damn him, he had the nerve to let the carts back in that town, what the hell was the name of that—"

Lieutenant Byrd said: "Adano, sir."

"Adano. Damn upstart."

Colonel Middleton said: "Perhaps there was some reason why he had to—"

"Damn you, Middleton, you're getting too independent minded."

Colonel Middleton said: "Yes sir."

Lieutenant Byrd said: "It goes on to say here, sir: 'carts were essential to town and town was in bad shape without same.' "

The General stood up: He said: "I've had enough of that little wop, Middleton."

"Yes sir," the tired voice said.

"Make out an order recalling that Italian wop from that town, what's the name—"

Lieutenant Byrd said: "Adano, sir."

"Order him to report back to Algiers for reassignment. Make out a separate report to Algiers explaining why. I'll fix that little wop. Get it off today, too, none of your delays, Middleton."

"Yes sir," the tired voice said.

The day before the party, the fisherman named Agnello and his men talked about it as they fished.

"Are you going, Merendino?" Agnello asked.

Merendino, who was not one to commit himself too far, said: "I have been invited."

Sconzo, the youngest of Adano's fishermen, said: "I am going. You'd better go, Merendino. I hear that we fishermen are lucky. Mostly the guests will be officials and big people, but because of Tomasino—"

Agnello said: "And perhaps because the daughters of Tomasino are not pock-faced."

Sconzo said: "Perhaps," and laughed.

The men hauled in their net. They spilled the shining, flopping fish into the bins. They were good fish, mostly of the four- and five-lira grades.

Sconzo said: "It is a rare chance for us fishermen, Merendino. You'd better go."

Merendino said: "I will think about it."

They let the net over the side again, and Merendino took the wheel as the boat moved away from the net. As they slowly pulled away, Sconzo lay down at the very bow, with his cheek on the hawser eye, and he watched the forefoot cutting the water and the reflection of the upper parts of the bow moving across the glassy water. It was one of those rare Mediterranean days with not a breath of air on the deep blue water.

Agnello said: "Merendino, don't you think perhaps we are getting too far inshore?"

Merendino said: "I will look at the chart."

Sconzo said: "He's just trying to get away from Tomasino's boat. Old Tomasino splashes his net so much that he scares the fish away. Tomasino has such a bad temper, he's probably angry with the fish and that's why he splashes the net. Merendino's just trying to work the boat away from Tomasino's, aren't you, Merendino?"

Merendino said: "I do not think Tomasino is angry at the fish."

Agnello said "We'd better not get in too far. We were warned about what would happen if we went out of the zone which they marked for us on the chart."

Merendino looked at the chart and then at the headlands up and down the coast and he said: "Perhaps we are a little far inshore." And he put the wheel over and headed out, but diagonally away from Tomasino's boat.

Sconzo said: "Personally I like the younger daughter of Tomasino better than the blonde. I like honesty in the color of hair."

Agnello said: "Not that either of Tomasino's daughters would pay any attention to you, Sconzo."

Sconzo said: "Oh, I think I could make an impression if I wanted to."

Agnello mimicked Sconzo: " 'If I wanted to.' " And then he said: "What makes you think you could? Your nose is too big."

Sconzo said: "What makes you think the daughters of Tomasino are so hard to impress? What do you think, Merendino?"

Merendino said: "I think that people with big noses who are fishermen are apt to retain a smell of fish in their nostrils after working hours, and sometimes they attribute the smell of fish to the young ladies they are with. I think it is time to pull the net in."

The three men stood and began to tug at the net.

"We have a good catch this time," Sconzo said. "Feel that load."

They pulled some more, then Agnello said: "It feels sluggish. It does not have the lively feeling of a good haul of small fish. Don't you agree, Merendino?"

"Order him to report back to Algiers for reassignment."

Merendino said: "I never divide the fishes into grades until they are in the bins."

But as the net came in it became more and more obvious that the net had something besides little fish in it.

Sconzo said: "Maybe Lojacono's painting has attracted a porpoise. Maybe Lojacono painted a she-porpoise and maybe it is the mating season among porpoises."

Agnello said: "It doesn't feel right. It feels like the time we pulled in the hogshead of nafta."

Merendino made a positive statement: "It feels like something we do not usually catch."

The boat had come around as the men hauled at the net. They were pulling the dripping net in over the starboard bow by this time.

When the net was almost in, Sconzo said: "Wait a second, let me look and perhaps I can see what we have before we haul it aboard."

He lay down at the bow again, and put his cheek on the hawser eye again, and looked. What he saw was the last he ever saw.

"Stop!" he shouted. "Stop hauling!"

But it was too late. The slow forward motion of the boat and the slow reactions of the heaving fishermen drove the bow onto the mine.

The explosion could be heard easily in the town. The wives of farmers and land laborers thought it was just some blasting by engineers. But the wives of fishermen ran down to the harbor and looked out over the water.

There they saw unusual activity among the fishing boats. They were all clustered together, and there were one, two—only five!

At the moment of the explosion, Tomasino turned toward the point where Agnello's boat had been. Fortunately Tomasino had his net in and could move fairly quickly.

When they reached the place they found only splinters of wood, many dead fish floating, dead Agnello floating, dead Merendino, and some pieces of Sconzo.

Tomasino and his men hauled the two whole bodies aboard as the other fishing boats came up.

Tomasino shouted to the others: "Continue to fish: Move farther offshore. I will take Agnello and Merendino in."

Someone from another boat shouted: "And Sconzo?"

"Sconzo," said Tomasino, not looking at the small pieces of Sconzo floating in the water, "is missing."

As soon as they tied up, Tomasino jumped ashore and walked quickly uptown to the Palazzo. He was the first to bring the news to the Major.

"Good afternoon, Tomasino," the Major said cheerfully. "I'm looking forward to the party tomorrow night. I hear you are one of the hosts."

Tomasino's face was black with misery, but the Major had not thought that unusual.

"I cannot go," Tomasino said.

"Why not, Tomasino? It wouldn't be the same without you."

Tomasino said grimly: "I came to talk about the explosion. Did you hear the explosion?"

Major Joppolo said: "I did hear an explosion. About half an hour ago, was it?"

Tomasino said: "About half an hour ago."

"What was it?"

"One of my ships. A mine, I suppose, just as you warned."

The Major stood up. His face had gone white as soon as Tomasino started talking about the explosion. He went around his desk to Tomasino and put a hand on his arm.

"It is my fault, Tomasino, not yours," he said.

"It was Agnello's fault," Tomasino said. "He was too far in. I took bearings, and I know that he was outside the fishing zone."

"I am sorry," the Major said.

Tomasino said: "Why are you sorry? I thought you would be angry."

"I feel as if I had killed your men, Tomasino."

"Accidents happened here before you came, Mister Major. Men have died here before."

And so it happened that before he left, Tomasino was consoling the Major instead of being berated by him for allowing carelessness in the fishing fleet.

As Tomasino started to go, the Major said: "You will continue to fish?"

Tomasino said: "Of course. Four of the boats are still out."

The Major said: "Good, Tomasino." Then he said: "I'm sorry about tomorrow night."

Tomasino said: "I am sorry too. But it would not be decent. I am supposed to be the head of the fishermen."

Major Joppolo hesitated. Then he said, trying to sound delicate about it: "Do you feel that your family should stay away as well?"

Tomasino looked at Major Joppolo's face. Tomasino looked no less sad as he said: "No, I think Tina should go."

The day of the party came, and many things happened.

At about 9:30 in the morning, a U. S. Navy truck pulled up in front of the Palazzo. A Chief Petty Officer and five men unloaded a crate from it onto the sidewalk, and the Chief went inside and delivered a note for Major Victor Joppolo.

Major Joppolo was busy at his desk, and had not noticed the truck. He opened the note and read:

"Dear Major:

"The U.S. Navy is delighted to be able to do the U.S. Army a favor. Here is your bell. . . ."

The Major jumped up and shouted: "Where is it?"

Zito the usher said: "Where is what, Mister Major?"

The Major said: "The bell! The bell! They have brought us our bell." And he ran out on the balcony just in time to see the Navy truck pull away. He saw the crate sitting there on the sidewalk.

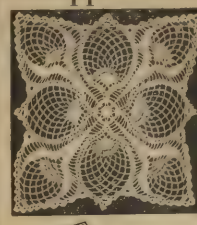
Major Joppolo shouted down to an M.P. in front of the Palazzo. "Hey, stand guard over that box, don't let anybody walk off with that."

The M.P. grumbled out loud, but not loud enough for Major Joppolo to hear: "From the way them sailors was gruntin' and groanin', don't strike me that nobody's goin' to strut off with that thing."

The Major hurried back inside, and he said to Zito: "How long did you say it took them to take the old bell down, Zito?"

Zito said: "They had to use six sets of block and tackle. It took them two days to get it down. Then one day to crate it."

The Major said: "I can't wait that long."



He went to the phone and called up the Engineers.

"Major Harvey, please. . . . Major? This is Joppolo. Say, I wonder if you could arrange to do this town a big favor. We've got a delicate job to do, and I'm afraid the workmen we could round up to do it would take ages and maybe hack it. The job is raising a new bell on the clock tower of the Town Hall here. I guess it would take about eight men, and if you've got a good strong block and tackle, and maybe a tow truck to haul out the tackle and raise the bell. . . . You can? That's swell. Can they start right in? What time you think they could get here? Okay, I'll be on hand at eleven thirty to tell them what to do. Don't know how to thank you, Major."

10-Foot Earthworms

It's no fairy story—earthworms in Australia actually reach a length of more than 10 feet. These pink giants of the worm world are said to resemble closely a slender rubber hose.

The worm lives in damp or muddy soil, and its movements in its subterranean home produce a gurgling noise that may easily be heard several yards from its tunnel opening. The bizarre monsters are quite harmless, Australian natives say.

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

"Greater Love Hath No Man --"

Last Sunday week a young man one, Obie Lee Burnett, of Birmingham and formerly of Jemison, gave his life in a vain effort to save the life of another. In this world of selfness we wonder sometimes if thought of one's self doesn't overshadow all else, until we read of such sacrifice as that of this young man.

"T. Lay Down One's Life For A Friend" may be easy to read or say, but in doing it, there is a far different story.

Young men of the calabre of young Obie Lee Burnett do not think of the cost of a deed, as that of going into the water to save the life of his kinsman; personal danger was the last thing that could ever have entered his mind.

The thought of another needing his aid was uppermost and whether it cost him his life or not, wasn't the consideration. Someone needed him He answered the call. It cost him his all—his life. Greater Love Hath No Man Than This—That He Lay Down His Life For His Friend.

If ever an act of heroism deserved recognition, this one does.

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

We have been informed of a crowd of little boys in Clanton who go about the town shooting birds and trespassing on people's property to shoot at the squirrels and other acts of mischief. There is a city ordinance against shooting the birds and there is a State law against shooting them. The squirrels are also protected by law. There is surely a law against trespassing. Parents of the youngsters should be told so that they might correct them for this recklessness.

Our good friend, John Vanderveer, Jr., is at home after spending a year in France, Holland, Belgium and Germany. He brought many interesting souvenirs home to show of his travels. He will return to Atlanta in thirty days to be reassigned.

You know, a lot of strange co-incidences will come to light when all the boys get home. The other day John and Bob Sumner were swapping stories down on the corner. Bob is at home after being liberated from a German Prison Camp. During the course of their conversation they discovered that John's "outfit" was the one that liberated the camp where Bob was confined.

A negro track laborer had been moving timbers and ties all day until he was completely worn out.

At the end of the day he approached his foreman and said: "Boss, you sure you got my name right?"

The foreman looked on his list and replied: "Yes. Here you are, Simpson, John Simpson. Isn't that right?"

"Yas, suh, boss, das right. Ah thought mebbe you had me down as Sampson."

Everytime we turn around these days there is an old familiar face coming in the front office. All are glad to get back to friends and all have a full of interesting experiences to tell. Some are coming in wounded; some are worn from battle and strain; most of them the old friend you knew "back when"—maybe just a little older and more serious. There'll be a lot of the old faces who won't show up. Those coming back make you think more about those who never will.

"Big Jim" Folsom was through the other day and stopped long enough to shake a few hands and say a few hello's. "Big Jim" had been to Florida for a couple of weeks and was headed to his home in Cullman. He is in the best of health and feeling fine. Before many weeks he will be coming around to stay longer and see all of his friends in Chilton County he says.

Anyone who tries to manage the business of someone else, neglects his own business.

According to Gerthie Easterling he has found a man who has educated chickens. A couple of Sundays ago he was out to see Roland Easterling. While there he noticed that the chickens were eating some tomatoes that Roland had picked and had ready for market. He informed Roland of this and they went to see what damage had been done to the valuable produce. Well, believe-it-or-not, the tomatoes had been culled and separated in two different groups, and the chickens were eating nothing but the culls.

Jack Arnold swapped his rolling store recently for a bigger and better one. The old rolling store was so small that it kept him hunched over all day getting this and that for his customers. Where he stood in the center of the truck and turned for so many long hours had worn a one-inch gum plank until it was practically all the way through.

We could go on and on but we're getting sleepy, so we will quit with this: A minister made this announcement from the pulpit: "Those in the habit of putting buttons in the collection plate will please use their own buttons and not those from the cushion on the pews."

HIGHLAND

The crowd Sunday was not as good as it should have been. It is very discouraging to the teachers and to the superintendent to come out every Sunday morning to find just a small crowd. There is plenty in this community to have a nice size Sunday School every Sunday morning. So please, starting with next Sunday, everyone that can possibly come, do so, and see how much better it will make you feel. Sunday School begins at 10 o'clock. Everyone is invited to comt.

Bro. Hand delivered a most delightful message following Sunday School.

Our revival starts the Fourth Sunday of this month, July 22nd.

Rev. Cox of Prattville is to help in the meeting. Rev. Cox is a fine minister and we invite everyone to come and hear him.

There will be a cemetery cleaning here July 18th. If it is raining that day come the next. Everyone bring tools to work with.

We are very sorry to give up one of our dear friends, Mrs. Jim Armstrong. She was a fine, noble, christian, lady, loved by all. She was not a member of this church but had been living in this community for a long time. We realize that she has gone to a sweeter and happier home in which to live when she will know neither pain or heartache. Her body was laid to rest at Concord Sunday afternoon. Many families from this community attended the funeral services.

We were glad to have Mr and Mrs J. C. Brown of Marbury with us at church Sunday. Also Mrs Gannon Gray and three daughters and Mrs Amy Fisher.

Mr and Mrs E. C. Hand, Mr and Mrs J. C. Brown, Mr and Mrs W. A. Shaw took dinner and spent Sunday afternoon with Mr and Mrs Teamon Cowart and family.

FRANKLIN - COX

Miss Peggy Mims Franklin of Thorsby became the bride of Private Joseph Raymond Cox of Clanton Saturday evening, July 7th, at 7 o'clock, at the MacClenny Baptist Church, MacClenny, Fla., with the Rev. Jenkins performing the ceremony. The ring ceremony was carried out.

The bride was lovely in a dress of light blue crepe with white accessories. She wore a corsage of pink rose buds.

Her only attendants were her aunts, Mrs. Spurgeon Calloway and Mrs. Cecil Ellison; her brother, Aubrey Franklin, and Miss Hazel Taylor.

Miss Franklin is the daughter of Mr. R. R. Franklin and the late Mrs. Franklin of Thorsby. Pvt. Cox, the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cox of Clanton. He is stationed at Camp Blanding, Fla.

The couple will make their home at Jacksonville, Fla., while Pvt. Cox is stationed there.

South's FIRST STREAMLINER

AMERICA'S FIRST TRAIN HOSTESS

Ten years ago, on July Tenth, The Rebel made its inaugural run into New Orleans. Thousands lined its route for a glimpse of The South's First Streamliner.

A uniformed young lady—America's First Train Hostess—greeted passengers with a smiling welcome at each station.

Many days have passed, days of peaceful travel and wartime urgency .... 4,256,000 miles have clicked beneath the wheels and more than 1,600,000 passengers have enjoyed the homelike comforts for which The Rebels have become famous.

Today The Rebels are on the job as always. Streamliners have become common-place. Hostesses are generally accepted as a part of passenger train personnel.

But to GM&O, The Rebels and their Hostesses will always be a measuring stick of Rebel Route progressiveness and a challenge to furnish the best transportation our means and ability will permit.

Above are the three sons of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Giles of Maplesville, Ala., now serving in the armed forces.

They are, reading from left to right, Pfc. Joseph (Joe) Giles, who received the Bronze Star on May 15th for the hero which he has been. Having served overseas for one year, first in New Guinea, from there to the Philippines. Pfc. Giles spent six weeks in the hospital, but had a speedy recovery and is now with the aviation engineers in the Philippines.

Giles, husband of Wilda (Bill) Mitchell of Stanton, Ala., has been in the service two years.

Sgt John Otis Giles, who entered the service in August, 1942, is now in his training in Missouri and Illi. He is now stationed in New Mexico for the duration.

Sgt. Giles is the husband of Dorothy O'Dell of Birmingham, Ala., and has one daughter, Dorothy Ruth Giles, age two.

Last, but not least, is the Navy guy of the family, Hardy Giles S 2-C, who entered the service September 6, 1944 taking his boot training at Great Lakes, Ill., and Port Huemene, Calif. Then he left for sea duty, which he is taking up in the Philippine Islands with a unit of the Seabees.

PFC. JAMES E. ABBOTT

Many hearts were wounded when the tragic news came of the death of Pfc. James E. Abbott.

Pfc. Abbott was serving with the ground forces of our Army Air Corps on Tinian Island, of the Marianas, and was engaged in photographing aerial operations when a heavy bomber crashed into the truck on which he was standing, May 21, 1945, killing he and another crew member instantly. A companion was wounded.

Pfc. Abbott received training at Maxwell Field, Alabama; Hendricks Field, Fla.; Freeman Field, Ind.; Keesler Field, Miss.; and Smokey Hill Air Base, Kan.

He entered the U. S. Army Air Corps on Oct., 21, 1942, and has been overseas since November 1944.

Pfc. Abbott was born and reared in Chilton County. He attended Isabella High School. He was married to Miss Nettie Mae Speer of Rockford, Ala., on March 11, 1944. He is the son of Mr and Mrs J. L. Abbott of Pletcher, Alabama. He is also survived by two sisters: Mrs Carl Keener and Mrs Preston Johnson, both of Bessemer, Alabama.

He was a fine, likable young man, and may God touch and heal the heart chords that have been so deeply broken.

Technician 4th Grade Robert P. Ward, 32, veteran of 49 months overseas in the European Theatre of Operations where he served in the Medical Corps, returned to the U.S. recently aboard an Air Transport Command trans-Atlantic plane landing him at LaGuardia Field, N.Y. He plans to visit his father, Mr. Allen F. Ward, of Route Four. His wife, Myrtle, who will join him there, has been staying at Kellyton, Ala.

S-Sgt. Perry R. Riffe of Maplesville, Ala., has been awarded the Air Medal for meritorious achievement in aerial flight while participating in combat flight in the China, Burma, India theatre. The award was made at a troop review at retreat ceremonies in front of Keesler Field, Miss.,

S-Sgt. Riffe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Riffle, of Maplesville.

Jesse Culp writes us again that he has now been moved to Berea College in Kentucky, where the weather isn't so hot as it is back home he says.

Jesse says that the civilian students are away on summer vacations now, but the boys are patiently awaiting the return of the Co-eds in September. Can't say as we blame them, as a little touch of romance on the subject usually makes it more interesting.

Cpl. William M. Johnson of this city, is in the 31st Infantry Division Unit, who, fighting every few hundred yards, subsisting on the barest of rations, and plodding on feet that were never dry, completed an exhausting 15-day "mop up" push into the mountains recently.

Scouts on the point of the advance were not kept in the lead for more than 15 minutes at a time and a detail of 10 men was taken daily from companies in the rear of the column to serve as litter bearers, so slippery were the trails that sometimes as many as 16 men were needed for a single litter patient—eight men to carry and eight to keep the bearers on their feet.

Cpl. Johnson is the son of Mr. Rubin Esaw Johnson of Clanton.

John W. McKey, Aviation Machinist's Mate 3-C USNR, of this city, has returned from overseas where he completed 50 combat missions as flight engineer and air gunner with the Navy's Patrol Squadron Sixty-Three.

McKey spent eight months overseas. A former student at the Chilton County High School, he enlisted in June, 1943. He is the son of Mrs. Mary E. McKey of Clanton.

T-Sgt. Eugene Kelly of Maplesville, who is stationed with IHAEF in Germany, writes that Germany is more like home than any other place he has been in Europe. He says all the towns are almost completely destroyed and about all one sees is complete destruction, which means that the German people don't have anything to look forward to only work or starve.

Kelly says that the G.I.'s are living in apartments that are nicely furnished and it isn't too bad.

He has served overseas since January 26, 1942, but is expecting to come back to the states in July or August, and is eligible for discharge under the point system, having one hundred points or more.

ISABELLA

Bro. Stuckey preached two very inspiring sermons to a well attended congregation at Mulberry Sunday and Sunday night.

The Baptismal Service was held at the creek near the church Sunday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. The candidates were: Sallie Fay Clinner, Flora Nell Grooms, Joe Earl and Judson Bray. They were received into the church Sunday night.

Little Estelle Fox, six years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Fox, is to be complimented on attending Sunday School in the Primary Department and being 100% every Sunday for the last quarter at Mulberry. We wish more would have this record at Sunday School.

The D.V.B.S. will begin at Mulberry Monday after the fourth Sunday in July.

The revival will begin on the second Sunday in August.

Chief Petty Officer Earl Clinner is spending his leave here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bud Clinner.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Camp and family of Montgomery spent the Fourth of July with Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wells here.

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Fulford have been visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Fulford, of Plantersville, and Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Milzie here. They returned to Norfolk, Va., where he is stationed in the Navy.

Miss Lorene LeCroy of Gadsden visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. LeCroy, and other relatives here for a few days recently.

Mrs. C. T. Little, Bobby and Martha Sue, of Winchester, Tenn., visited her mother, Mrs. D. O. Manning, here for a few days last week.

Betty Lee Tucker, who is a Wave in the Navy, is spending her leave at home now with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Tucker.

Capt. O. F. Davenport, Jr., who is home on furlough from overseas, is spending the time with his parent Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Davenport, Sr., here and his wife and baby.

Mr. and Mrs. Onnie Bell and family of Birmingham spent the Fourth with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. LeCroy, here.

Mr and Mrs Ernest Davis of Clanton were among our visitors at church Sunday. We are always glad to see them here.

Ernest McCary, Jr. and his new bride are spending his leave with parents here.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

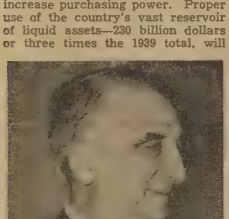
Biggest Air Raids on Jap Targets Coincide With Invasion of Borneo; Vinson Outlines U.S. Postwar Plan

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BIGGEST RAIDS:
On Jap Targets

Nearly 600 Superfortresses, in a record raid on the Jap homeland, dropped some 4,000 tons of incendiary bombs on four of the empire's industrial cities. The targets included Kure, Shimonoseki, Ube and Kumamoto. Kure is Japan's greatest naval base on the Inland sea; Ube is a principal coal center and rates first in the empire's production of magnesium; Kumamoto is a military training center.



None of these cities had been previously fire-bombed. This raid brought to 22 the number of Jap cities to be scorched by incendiary attacks. Up to this time Tokyo had suffered greatest from B-29 incendiary attacks, the heaviest B-29 fire raid having been made on the Nip capital on May 23, a raid in which 550 of the huge bombers participated.

Shimonoseki, with a normal population of 196,000, is a vital bottleneck of Nipponese rail transportation. Much of the coal required for the war plants of Honshu must pass through Shimonoseki, which is the southern terminus of Honshu's railroads.

RECONVERSION:
Vinson's Postwar Plan

War Mobilizer Fred M. Vinson, without promising that Japan will fall soon, has announced his postwar economic charter, which he says must be ready to swing into action the day Japan falls—or before.

When V-J Day arrives, states Vinson in his report to the nation, the fewer war workers that will have to be absorbed, the smoother will be the transition. His plan immediately following V-J Day calls for an immediate reduction in taxes, for industry and individuals, which will increase purchasing power. Proper use of the country's vast reservoir of liquid assets—230 billion dollars or three times the 1939 total, will be a self-starter for postwar economy if planned right.

Other points in his program call for federal aid to foster small business and encourage the birth of new business; vigorous anti-monopoly program; reduction of industrial strife and a higher wage policy of industry; blanket indorsement of Bretton Woods; expansion of unemployment compensation; raise standard of living for the farmers; and fiscal policy to maintain economy at or near full employment.

PEACE PACT:
Senate Action

A United Nations charter, which envisioned the world's hopes for an enduring peace, was presented to the senate by President Truman, who appeared before that body personally. Little opposition was at first apparent to the new world league and an overwhelming majority of the senators seemed in favor of its acceptance.

Fifty nations whose representatives had gathered in San Francisco framed the charter which is designed to prevent aggression by force. Approval of the document by the U. S. senate, Britain, Russia, China, France and 23 other nations will establish the new world league for peace.

President Truman's historic plea for acceptance of the charter was made where, 26 years ago, Woodrow Wilson stood to plead, unavailingly, for a similar cause.

The document was flown from San Francisco to Washington and delivered to the President by Alger Hiss, state department official, and secretary of the world peace conference.

MUSHROOMING DEBT:

America's national debt was a little under 1 per cent of the country's national wealth a century ago—today it is 65 per cent, according to a study by Northwestern National Life Insurance company. The average per capita share of the national debt is $307, compared with $2.77 a century ago.

The enormously increased proportion of public debt to national resources points to the need for vigorously maintaining business activity.

ANOTHER GOAL:
Borneo's Oil

Australian troops, with supporting American and Dutch units, all led by General MacArthur landed three miles east of Balikpapan, Borneo's oil center, the richest oil center of the Dutch East Indies. This was the third operation in Borneo by Australian troops since May 1.

General MacArthur who exposed himself under fire on Borneo.

The landing was made after the heaviest naval bombardment of the entire Pacific war. The naval and aerial bombardment continued for 10 days before the troops went ashore, and during this time cruisers and destroyers paraded up and down the invasion coast, blasting everything that was seen to move.

Balikpapan is 320 miles down the coast from Tarakan island, where the initial Borneo landing was made.

Allied troops, supported by tanks, fought through groups of Japs to the top of an important ridge. The Japs fled northeast in every type of vehicle they could lay their hands on.

Landing losses were light, and resulted mainly from mortar, small arms and artillery fire.

The importance of taking Balikpapan is clear from this: In peacetime its plants produced 2,500,000 gallons of gas weekly.

This landing in Borneo, according to General MacArthur, secured the domination of Borneo and split the East Indies, virtually completing Allied tactical control of the entire S. W. Pacific.

More than 300 ships were in the Allied invasion fleet, which included the U. S. 7th fleet and Australian and Netherland units.

OPA EXTENDED:
Agriculture Gets WFA

Price controls of the OPA were extended for another year when President Truman signed the bill at Kansas City, just in time to prevent the powers of the Price Control and Stabilization act from automatically expiring. The necessary papers were flown to the President, who was returning from San Francisco.

In renewing the OPA, President Truman declared that stabilization controls must be continued into the postwar period. "We must always remember that it is the war, not these agencies, which is responsible for these shortages and hardships," he emphasized.

Another important move to improve overall production and distribution of food was the placing of the War Food administration directly under the control of the new secretary of agriculture, Clinton Anderson. In commenting on this action, the President stated that he "was glad congress did not disturb arrangements for co-ordinating the stabilization and reconversion programs, and for settling the differences among the agencies."

DANGER:
In September

With the "Mighty Seventh" war loan drive ended, if the usual practice is followed, September will see thousands of bondholders rushing to the bank to cash in on their "E" bonds when they fall due.

During campaigns, few bonds are offered for redemption, but after the campaign is over an "organized" movement gets under way to redeem those that are 60 days old. If previous figures are any indications it is to be expected that 50 per cent of the bonds will be turned in at banks before they mature—most of them during September.

More Metal Freed

The War Production board announced that it was freeing all available supply of metal for civilian goods—that is metal that is left over after all war needs have been met. It also began to scrap its priority system for all but munitions items.

This does not mean that civilian production can begin full production. Many items will not be on sale for another year, and few will become plentiful within the next five or six years.

HOME FRONT:
House Buyers Revolt

War-boomed realty inflation prices are being punctured on the West coast by a buying public that has become choosey and harder to sell.

This buyers' rebellion of homes has resulted in prices in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland falling from 10 to 15 per cent and with little interest being shown except when bargains are offered. So far Seattle is selling at peak war prices, when sales are made.

Realtors state that the buyers' rebellion is not caused by war plant lay-offs, but rather by the fact that purchasers of homes want a new postwar model and are not willing to invest much capital in prewar style houses. Publicity given to the "dream house of the future," has done much to lower buyers' demand for inflated priced older homes.

Dealers are upset because they believe that bright forecasts are premature and the public is being led into false hopes. They cite the announcement of Henry Kaiser's announcement of an ideal home for $5,000. They say this same house would have to be sold from $7,500 to $8,000, so buyers are waiting and prices are returning to normal.

GOVERNORS MEET:
Charter Approved

The 37th annual governors' conference was held at Mackinac Island, Mich., to help win adoption of the world peace charter framed at San Francisco by 50 participating nations, and to deliberate on postwar problems. The conference lasted three days.

Forty-three state and territorial governors were present. Among the speakers was Comdr. Harold E. Stassen, former governor of Minnesota, who played a key role on the American delegation to San Francisco.

Governor Dewey of New York, at a press conference, urged speedy adoption of the charter without reservations.

CABINET:
Five New Members

With the appointment of James F. Byrnes as secretary of state and the swearing in of four new appointments, President Truman's official family has in fact as well as name become reconverted.

Byrnes has had a varied public career. He was elected to the house of representatives in 1911 and served until 1926, when he failed in a try for the senate. He was elected to the senate in 1930 and during his second term resigned to become a member of the Supreme court, leaving in 1942 to head the nation's war agencies.

Others who have taken over cabinet duties include Clinton P. Anderson, until now a congressman from New Mexico who became secretary of agriculture; Lewis B. Schwellenback, former senator from Washington and former federal district court judge, who was sworn in as secretary of labor; Robert E. Hannegan of St. Louis, chairman of the Democratic National committee, who became postmaster general, and Tom Clark, an assistant attorney general from Texas, who assumed the post of attorney general.

Anderson, upon taking office, promised to bring about an improvement in the food situation.

FOOD CROPS:
Frost Factor

While the pea canners have been able to keep their promise that they would process more than in 1944, other canners, hampered by not so favorable growing conditions may fall short of their goal. As late as April, all processors believed that they would have record runs.

Apparently the canners will reach their allotment on canned fruits, but if they do, the winter supply of fruits will be short. It looks instead as if some fresh fruits will be put on the market at the expense of the canned items.

Fresh vegetables are now getting easier to find and it begins to look as if the potatoes, beans and rice for storage will be adequate. California, with one-fifth the country's tomato acreage, expects a normal crop, while Indiana with 95,000 acres is having its trouble.

West coast's fruit canning has gotten off to a good start and prospects are good there, while the middle west and eastern states will have little to offer canners.

It is still too early to be sure about the corn crop. This will depend upon the first frost date.

Nazi Influence Remains To Vex Allied Control

Indoctrination of Youth and Lethargy of Mass Of People Obstacle to Efforts to Reconstitute Beaten Nation.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

(This is the first of two articles by Mr. Baukhage revealing how the results of Himmler's "planned terror" are making it hard for the Americans to "run" Germany.)

The hearings of the Kilgore subcommittee on war mobilization concluded in the last weeks of congress and are to be resumed next September. Testimony before the committee has revealed certain "secret documents" showing plans on the part of various German industrialists to subsidize a Nazi underground party.

The purpose of the hearings, Senator Kilgore's associates tell me, is to prepare the United States against a future recrudescence of German militarism.

If such underground organizations exist and continue to exist it will be necessary to hunt them out of their hiding places if we can. This is going to be especially difficult since some of those hiding places undoubtedly will be on foreign territory and it may not be easy to reach across the frontiers of nations not too unfriendly to the Nazi - Fascist idea.

Meanwhile there is an immediate problem to be faced and that is the practical task of "running Germany," something which it is generally admitted is going to be harder than we thought.

There are many baffling factors of a purely physical aspect which enter into the scheme but I do not intend to deal with them here. I want to talk about the psychological problem which is recognized by trained observers on the scene but perhaps not as fully understood as it might be.

It may be recalled that some months ago there appeared in these columns an exposition of the organization and the indoctrination of the German people and the integration of all elements in Germany into a single unit, created for the purpose of waging total war. This dealt with the positive steps taken in the training of the youth and conversion or compulsion exerted over such of the older generation as were sufficiently pliable. In this and a succeeding article I propose to deal with what might be called a program of negation since its purpose was to destroy the quality of resistance to Naziism on the part of those too old or too stubborn to accept, actively or passively, the Nazi regime. It is what I have alluded to as the program of "planned terror."

Nazification Extended To All Classes

First, it must be remembered that since the Nazis were in full power for about 12 years and the real indoctrination of the Germany youth began at about the age of 12, there might be presumed to remain a group of middle-aged Germans who escaped the full blight of Nazi indoctrination. Normally they would be the ones most likely to offer collaboration with the American or other officials and most amenable to an acceptance of democratic methods and beliefs.

Of course, there are some such. On the other hand, although this group who by age or inclination were less favorable to Nazification, the majority have not escaped the effects of Nazi rule. These men were brought up in a more or less normal 20th century atmosphere, regimented to some extent, it is true and with the long tradition of German militarism behind them, but at root a kindly, businesslike, churchgoing folk whose evils were environmental and not necessarily hereditary as they proved when they left home and settled on our shores.

They are the ones in Germany whom we blame for failing to arise and overthrow the Hitler regime, for accepting it and its inhumanities. We find them now, according to most of the persons who have visited Germany, befuddled, submissive, yet resentful; but honestly rejecting all personal, individual responsibility for war guilt of Germany and the atrocities of the Nazis. For the most part they have proved about as valuable in assisting in the governing of their country as a large piece of slightly rancid dough.

To meet this and other conditions existing in the Allied zone of occupation, the psychological warfare division of supreme headquarters has a special program worked out. (And don't be frightened at the $64 title of that organization—a lot of our boys are alive today because of its assault on the enemy as you will learn some day.)

Aim to Reorient German Mind

A part of the aim of the American program is to help maintain order, and its long-range objective is described as "reorienting the German mind, after 12 years of Naziism."

General McClure, head of the psychological warfare division, explains the immediate objectives of the information bureau of his division as "(1) to maintain and deepen the mood of passive acquiescence and acceptance of orders to the German people, and so to facilitate the completion of the occupation of Germany; (2) to undertake special campaigns required by military government, and (3) to take the first steps toward arousing a sense of collective responsibility for Germany's crimes and to provide the facts which expose the fatal consequences of Nazi and militarist leadership and German acquiescence in them."

General McClure realizes that step number three is a long one and a high one. At present the American occupation officials are in a somewhat paradoxical position. They are expected to maintain strict military discipline and in the same breath in which they order, "Stand at attention," they have to say, "Now think for yourself!" And furthermore the Nazis have done all that is humanly possible — or I should say, inhumanly possible—to see that there is nothing left of initiative or individual responsibility in Germany. Having created this state of chaos, they hope to gain an interim in which to strengthen their underground.

It is not organized resistance which the American occupation is meeting. Out of 10,000,000 or more Germans in the American zone, so far less than 4,000 have been jailed for acts inimical to the American military regime, but hundreds and hundreds have been fired from the civil administration because they cannot produce a clean anti-Hitler record or they have definite connections with the Nazi party or its activities.

What many people fail to realize in this connection is how thorough the Nazification of Germany has been. I had occasion to point out in previous columns that the German people were the Nazis' first conquest, that it took longer than the military conquest of any of the nations occupied by the German armies and that the preparation for this domestic campaign was long and thorough.

Recently we have had a chance to learn more about what a concentration camp really was. I refer not only to the grisly horrors revealed by the dead and the living-dead found in the captured camps. What is far more deeply revealing is the testimony of some of the former inmates who were released earlier with their brains still intact. From them we learn the powerful psychological influences of the treatment of prisoners by the gestapo.

This psychological effect reached those outside, too. Further, by repeating publicly the camp brutalities in a milder form and likewise by means of the tyrannical restrictions on the whole people, all Germany was turned into one great concentration camp. This was deliberately planned.

From my own personal experiences in Nazi Germany I can testify that this last statement is not an exaggeration. I have felt the "terror" atmosphere which the gestapo created even for a foreigner, reasonably sure of safe and unmolested departure from the accursed country. Leaving Germany in wartime, herded into the station under the piercing eyes of the SS troopers, with the invisible presence of the gestapo all about one, had a paralyzing effect on a person even though he had a passport in his pocket and the sovereign power of the United States behind him.

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

Service Flag

By EDWARD GRASSFIELD

McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

POLICE Lieutenant Moore tried to assume a stern expression as he looked down at the little old lady standing before him.

"You say you are an impostor and that you want to give yourself up?" he asked kindly. "Now just who was it you imposed on, Mrs. Murray?"

"On my country, Your Honor," she replied. In spite of her determined air she could not keep her voice from trembling. "I didn't mean any harm. You see, sir, I'm a widow without any children and it all started when I began to walk in the park evenings to get a little air.

"The boys in service are such fine looking young men. When I heard them laughing and talking I used to pretend that one of them was mine, especially when he would say something about writing home to Mom."

Her voice broke a little and she blinked rapidly before beginning anew. "The next thing I did was to start noticing the mailman. Every day he brings a letter from overseas to some house on the block. I know because I watch him from behind the curtain.

"I envied everyone who has a little service flag in the window until I couldn't bear it any longer. I bought one and hung it in my own window, even though I had no right to. I sit down every night and write a letter to my boy abroad. Of course I never post it because I haven't one to send it to, but it makes me feel as if I have."

This precinct was mentioned, that's why I came here.

She took a little lace-trimmed handkerchief from her pocketbook and dabbed at her eyes.

"Here, now!" The policeman came from behind the desk and put his arm around her. "I guess we all make believe once in a while."

"Not wrong?" She stared at him incredulously. "Why, I saw in the paper that it's wrong to pretend when it concerns your country. This precinct was mentioned, that's why I came here." She dug down into her bag and handed him a newspaper clipping.

BOY IMPOSTOR JAILED

Last night police arrested George Marlin of 32 Chester street. The 18-year-old youth, an orphan, is charged with illegally wearing an army uniform and will be arraigned tomorrow morning at the 2nd precinct.

The policeman laughed. "That's different, Mrs. Murray, and even that worked out all right. At first the boy was turned down for some minor defect and he was self-conscious because he couldn't get in the army. The judge suspended sentence when he found out the boy's motive, and the army was willing to accept him for limited service."

He looked at the clipping again and whistled. "Wait a minute. There's something here I didn't see before." He turned to the attendant. "Mike, bring that boy out again, I want to speak to him."

Mrs. Murray looked up, frightened. "Officer, I hope I haven't made trouble for him by coming here."

The lieutenant didn't answer but he smiled as the boy approached. "George, this is Mrs. Murray," he began by way of introduction. "She is an impostor, too, and in a sense an orphan like yourself."

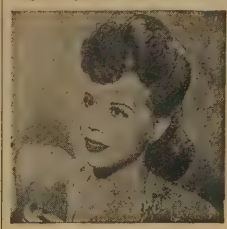
The youth seemed puzzled, looking from one to the other.

"You are hereby ordered to write to her twice a week and to adopt her as your service mother. Do you agree?"

"Gosh!" George blurted out, "I'll say I agree—that is, if Mrs. Murray really wants me to. Gee, I'll be getting letters like the rest of the fellows—just as if I had folks!"

Mrs. Murray threw her arms around his neck. "Write to me quickly, George. Write as soon as you find out where you will be stationed." Then she hurried out the door.

The lieutenant noticed George's bewilderment at her quick departure. "She's in a hurry, George," he said. "She has a mighty important flag to hang up."



The lad still didn't understand, but he was happy. That morning he had acquired an Uncle Sam and now he had a mother. One thing he did know; he'd never let either one of them down.

JOAN EDWARDS has it to her credit that she wasn't discovered by her uncle, the star-maker, Gus Edwards, but got to the top by herself. But the gay young star of "The Hit Parade" did want her uncle to be present at one of her broadcasts, so she arranged to go to the Coast for some guest performances, and have her uncle, who has been ill for so long, brought to one of them. Joan as the mother of lovely young Judy Ann, aged 1½, is a different person from the talented singer and pianist the public knows; she'd like to spend a lot more time with that young lady if she could. But she's tied to "The Hit Parade" for years to come.

It's nothing new for Director Mitchell Leisen to lend his own belongings as props for pictures. He did it for the eighth time for "Masquerade in Mexico," when Dorothy Lamour had to be shown with a lot of smart luggage. The property department couldn't supply matched bags, wardrobe cases and a steamer trunk—so you'll see Dorothy surrounded by Mr. Leisen's very expensive traveling kit.

Alexis Smith wound up her role in "The Two Mrs. Carrolls" at Warner Bros. on a Saturday afternoon, and immediately walked across the studio lot to begin work in "Night and Day," based on the life and music of Cole Porter; she's seen as Mrs. Porter.

For three years Metro has been grooming Jacqueline White for big things; she was signed up right out of college, and has had just one picture role, in "Song of Russia." She gets her first big role in "The Yearling," playing opposite Gregory Peck.

"Queen for a Day," the Cinderella show aired daily over Mutual, will become a picture; Ed Golden's bought the film rights, and it will be released through United Artists. In case you haven't heard the show, it's the one on which a queen for a day is chosen from the studio audience, and then is given her every wish. In the picture the Queen will probably drop in on various movie stars.

Two famous mysteries, written in the last century, will reach the screen by way of the Warner Bros. studio. They're by Wilkie Collins. One is "Woman in White," the other is "The Moonstone"—and they're better than many a modern whodunit.

Rise Stevens takes another step up the ladder with that new radio show of hers that is the summer replacement for "Information Please." And it's a novel idea to have a different musical director each week, from one of the leading motion picture companies.

Several weeks ago Lulu McConnell, feminine star of the hilarious "It Pays to Be Ignorant," was ordered to a hospital by her doctor. She was a good patient till Friday came; then she defied doctors and nurses, got up and dressed, and was off to the studio for her broadcast. Like the show's other stars, she's an old-timer in the theater. "When I can't get to the broadcast, I'll be dead," she told Tom Howard.

Weary apartment seekers in Hollywood rejoiced when a sign "Apartment for Rent," was hung outside one of the buildings of the Monogram studio that faces the street. Gale Storm was to do a scene for "The Gay Nineties," inspecting the sign—but before camera crews could get there the street was so crowded that it took half an hour for an assistant director to convince them that it was just for a picture.

ODDS AND ENDS—Jane Withers will probably have her own air show in the fall, a show just for young people. . . . Alice Faye may abandon movies completely, and do an air show with her husband, Phil Harris. . . . Hi Brown, producer-director of "Inner Sanctum," has directed over 15,000 broadcasts, and during one year had 35 of his own shows on the air. . . . The Ray Bolger show, replacing the Jimmy Durante-Garry Moore one, has a staggering line-up of stars signed for the summer and early fall. . . . Judy Canova's husband left for overseas when their baby was two weeks old—but the proud parents drank a toast to the baby.

This Man Proves That Loss of Arm Is No Handicap

Living Lesson Pointed to War Cripples That They Too Can Succeed.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. — Orville Starke is one fellow who wouldn't let the loss of his right arm keep him from success in business, sports and social life. Now he's teaching his philosophy to amputees in the army's Thomas M. England hospital at Atlantic City, N. J., and also to discharged Milwaukee servicemen who have lost a leg or an arm.

Starke is purchasing agent for the Holeproof Hosiery company. He is 51 and looks younger. His face is tanned and ruddy from being outdoors. His mustache is reddish, his hair thinning. He wears rimless glasses. His empty right coat sleeve is tucked neatly into his coat. His manner is aggressive and merry, says the Milwaukee Journal.

Starke was just the man the army was looking for to put a zest for life back into depressed amputees: He was a civilian, he had no connection with the government, he had made a success in many fields.

He was just the kind of a guy to walk into the Thomas M. England hospital and say: "Look at me, lads. I'm as good as any man with two hands and two legs. I can lick 'em at any game—and so can you if you've got any spunk."

'Seeming' Handicap.

And that's how it happens that Starke has been making week long trips to the hospital, where there are always about 2,000 amputees. He went there armed with many copies of a letter he had written about himself. The letter served as an introduction and also as a biography. It was something to be read thoughtfully by the amputees or to be read by Starke himself.

In the letter, Starke told about the "seeming physical handicap" of the loss of a leg or arm. "I say 'seeming' advisedly," said Starke, "because as time goes on you, like I, will find that the loss of a limb is no handicap whatsoever, in fact, many of you men will find it a thrilling challenge to better your position in life."

Then he told them about how he lost his arm when he was run over by a streetcar when he was a youth. But that didn't stop him from being an all-around man. His letter told it this way:

"I played baseball, pitched and played center field. I played two seasons of semipro ball.

"I ran the 50, 100 and 200 yard dash and broadjumped in high school, Marquette university and the Wisconsin Athletic club. My best performances: 50 yard dash, 5.2 seconds, tied the world's indoor record at Northwestern university gym; 100 yards, 10 flat; 220 yards, 22.3 seconds; broadjump, 22 feet, 3 inches. Nothing to write home about, you say? Well, maybe not, but I won more first places than I did second and third, as you will see from my scrap book.

'No Accident' Driver.

"I can dive—use the crawl or breast stroke, also back stroke, not too fast, but I think I can hold my own with the average swimmer.

"I have played golf for 15 years. First with right hand clubs. About three years ago I switched to left clubs with very satisfactory results. My club board average for 1944 was 91½. The last game I played was 88.

"As for my personal problems, I dress myself, tie my tie, my shoe strings, well, do everything that is necessary to fill a normal man's daily duties. I drive a car and carry a safe driver's card, because I have never had an accident.

"I'm married and have one son, a swell boy, a champion golfer, now a lieutenant in the air corps (Glenn —a B-17 navigator).

"Today, after many years of doing things that to most two armed people seem miraculous, I still lead a normal, interesting and full life. I meet people daily, both fellow employees and incoming salesmen. With them and others, I always act natural, never am embarrassed or give way to an inferiority complex. Result: they too feel natural and at ease in my presence.

"So get yourselves ready for a lifetime of thrills, make up your mind right now, like I did, that the loss of your arm is going to prove an advantage, that you're going to show your family, your friends, the public —that you've just started to fight."

Dog That Killed Little Mistress Pays With Life

LOS ANGELES.—Woof, five-year-old bull terrier which killed its 21 months' old mistress, was asphyxiated, according to Attorney Joseph Scott, representing the baby's parents, Sgt. and Mrs. Charles Derdenger.

Woof's death ended months of legal wrangling between the Derdengers, who sought to have their pet executed by city authorities, and dog lovers throughout the nation. Superior Judge Emmet H. Wilson set aside a court order forbidding disposition of the animal.

Little Marguerite was killed last February 13 when Woof, apparently jealous of attentions bestowed on the baby, seized the child at the base of her skull and killed her.

GOD'S PURPOSE FOR ABRAHAM

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-9.
GOLDEN TEXT—In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.—Genesis 12:3.

Separation, which means release from the influence of those things which hinder full development, is a blessing even though it may be difficult. God had a great purpose in mind for Abram, but to accomplish it He had to get him out of his own country, away from the downward pull of heathendom, and out into a new adventure of faith with Him.

Down in the midst of those who worshiped the heavenly bodies was a man who had found that there was no satisfaction for his soul in such worship. He had found the true God, and was ready to respond to His call. We find Abram

I. Hearing God's Call (vv. 1-3).

Men who have been used to accomplish great and good things in the world have, like Abraham, been willing to step out into the dark. They have not foreseen greatness nor even striven for it, but have gone out at God's call, obeying Him day by day, and He has been responsible for the outworking of their destiny.

How important it is to have the listening ear, and the obedient heart. He was attentive to God's word, and willing to take Him at His word.

Abram was strongly attached to his homeland. He was a man of such strength of character and obvious ability, that he undoubtedly held a place of real importance in his own country. To leave that and go out to an unknown destination (Heb. 11:8) called for real faith—and Abram had it!

God had a purpose in calling him out—the establishment of a great nation. Through Abram all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. That stupendous eventuality hung in the balance until he decided to obey God, and we are glad he did.

When God takes anything from us, we can be sure that He is planning a greater blessing to take its place. Material loss often brings spiritual blessing. Separation from family may give a broader relationship to others. Sacrifice for the Lord's service brings hundredfold returns (Matt. 19:29).

II. Responding to God's Command (vv. 4-6).

As the Lord spoke, so Abram departed. He was to be the channel of God's blessing, and he put himself in God's hand for His use. The lives of each of us may, in our own way, be the channels of God's blessings to those round about us; but only if we, like Abram, respond to His call.

The migration of Abram from Chaldea to Canaan is one of the most important events in all history. It was one of the grand turning points in the story of the human race.

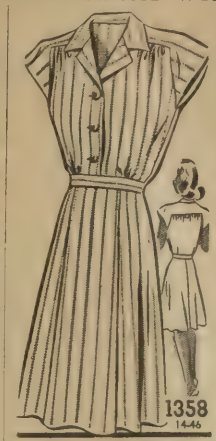
The fact that Abram took with him his entire family into the promised land, reminds us that we are not to go alone into the Lord's heavenly kingdom. We are to take our families with us.

Note also that Abram brought his substance, his riches, with him. That tells us anew that when a man comes into the household of God through Jesus Christ, he is to bring his purse with him. Consecrate your substance as well as yourself and your service to God.

The journey of Abram ended (v. 6) in what is said to be the most beautiful spot in all of Palestine—but even here difficulty faced him, for "the Canaanite was then in the land."

Even so, the Christian life is not one of ease and idleness, but of heroic endeavor and victory. The Promised Land is a type, not of heaven, but of the Christian's life and experience. We, too, find the Canaanite in the land. There is a constant struggle with the world, the flesh and the devil; but there is victory in Christ.

III. Receiving God's Blessing (vv. 7-9).



God kept His promise to Abram. True he did not see the entire fulfillment of it, but is that necessary to the man of faith? God says it, we believe it; it becomes our present possession by faith, though the enjoyment of it may be yet to come.

Note that wherever Abram pitched his tent, he built an altar. He was not too hurried or busy to remember God. We, too, are pilgrims and strangers in this world. Let us not fail to raise an altar to God. Wherever we may be, let us leave a testimony for Him.

For such a man, God could well have a high purpose. He was among that noble company who in all ages have "simply obeyed each day the divine orders which were given them, took each day the way of prayer, of righteousness, of duty; content if they had light enough for that and the next step, leaving to a higher will all that should come after. And God charged Himself with their destiny" (J. G. Greenhough).

FREE! This booklet shows how to build modern, improved-type poultry houses for all climates. Shows structural details.

Housing your hens in a comfortable, sanitary, rat-proof concrete poultry house is a good way to insure bigger egg production. When built of concrete a poultry house will last a lifetime and its modest first cost will be practically the last.

Long-lasting concrete is the thrifty material for feeding floors, dairy barn floors, milk houses, foundations, grain storages, manure pits, water tanks—improvements that help you raise more needed foodstuffs.

Send today for "how to build" booklets. If you need help, get in touch with your concrete contractor or building material dealer.

MISS HAZEL WYLIE BECOMES BRIDE OF GRANDVILLE D. JONES

Miss Hazel Wylie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wylie, of Florence, became the bride of Grandville D. Jones, son of Mr and Mrs David C. Jones, of Florence, in a church ceremony that was marked by its beauty and simplicity. The vows were spoken on Thursday evening, June 28, at 8:30, at the Weeden Heights Methodist church with Rev. T. A. Coleman, pastor, officiating in the presence of the immediate families and close friends.

The alter of the church was banked with ivy and smilax and at each end cathedral tapers burned in branched candelebras. At entervals were placed standards of white summer flowers..

The musical program was presented by Miss Betty Ruth Jones, soloist, accompanied by Mrs. Ben Ingram.

The tapers were lighted by Miss Carolyn Klinner of Clanton, Ala., niece of the bridegroom, and Orville Jones, brother of the groom.

The bride was lovely in her wedding dress of navy crepe. Her small hat was a mass of white flowers and she carried a white satin prayer book covered with butterfly gardenias.

Mrs Eldon Thornton, sister of the bride, was matron-of-honor and the only attendant of the bride. She wore an attractive dress of black and white with white accessories. Her flowers were a corsage of white carnations.

W. H. Klinner, brother-in-law of the groom served him as best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's home for the wedding guests, which included only members of the immediate families and a few close friends.

Glodioli and summer chrysanthemums were used to decorate the reception rooms and the lace covered table was centered with a tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom. Assisting Mrs Wylie in serving were Mrs Haley Phillips, Mrs J. Kennedy, Mrs Bailey, Mrs Edwin Davis and Mrs Robert Lewis. Mrs Klinner kept the bride's book.

Out-of-town guests were: Mr and Mrs. W. H. Klinner and children of Clanton, Pfc. Edwin E. Gentry and Bernard Gentry of Fayetteville, Tenn., and Mrs. Edwin Davis of Ft. Payne.

After the reception the couple left for a short wedding trip. For travelling Mrs Jones wore a lime colored dress and black accessories. Upon their return the couple will make their home at 908 Fifth avenue, north, Clanton, Ala.

Sanitary methods in handling milk and prompt cooling will help reduce losses from sour milk, caused by bacteria converting the milk sugar into lactic acid.

When you make fruit pies or cobblers, bake a few thin slices of lemon right in with the fruit, and you can accentuate the sweet flavor by contrasting it with the tangy, citrus juice.
